I believe that the loan-in-kind provision proposed by my bill is an idea whose time has come. It is not a new idea, in fact, a version of it exists in current legislation. My bill simply expands and elaborates on the principle that the Secretary should have the discretion to complement the National Health Service Corps by reducing the debts of graduates of health profession schools for the performance of service in academic, nonprofit research, or community or public service employment. The $10 million authorized for fiscal year 1985 cannot be said to be excessive.

Mr. President, my bill places appropriate emphasis of advanced nurse training, shifting to a direction suggested by the Institute of Medicine. The traineeships, fellowships and demonstration projects proposed by my bill will assist nurses, nursing institutions, and America.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill summary and the Health Professions and Nursing Educational Assistance Amendments of 1984 be printed in the RECORD. I further ask the support of my colleagues on this measure.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be reprinted in the RECORD, as follows:

Part B: Program revisions

Training of Physician Assistants—The definition of program for the training of physician assistants is amended to focus on training individuals qualified to primary health care under the supervision of a physician, and emphasize training in disease prevention, health promotion, geriatric medicine and home health care. (Sec. 701)

Schools of Allied Health

a. For purposes of Title VII of the Public Health Service Act the definition of school of allied health is amended to include college, and institutions providing additional training for allied health professionals. (Sec. 701(10)(A)).

b. A new paragraph is added providing a definition of allied health professional which includes individuals with post baccalaureate training in a science related to health care.

c. An individuals representing one of the allied health professional educational programs is included in the National Advisory Council on Health Professions Education. (Sec. 702)

Graduate Programs in Clinical Psychology

a. For purposes of Title VII of the Public Health Service Act, graduate programs in clinical psychology are included in the definitions under General Provisions (Sec. 701 (5))

b. Graduate programs in clinical psychology are included in statute as eligible to participate in programs authorized under Educational Assistance to Individuals from Disadvantaged Backgrounds. (Sec. 787)

Acquisition of Equipment and Instrumentation for Teaching Facilities—Grant authority for assistance in the construction of teaching facilities for health professional schools is amended to include the acquisition of equipment. (Sec. 720) "Equipment" is defined as any equipment, device, tool, or other medical or scientific instrumentation to be used by students, faculty or personnel.

Health Professions Student Loan Program (HPSL Program)—The Secretary is provided with guidance on termination procedures that would have to be followed before a school could be terminated from participating in the HPSL program for reasons of having a high default rate on HPSL loans by its graduates. The purpose is to avoid unfair and inequitable terminations.

The participating institutions would be required to provide thorough and adequate loan information on HPSL's made to students. The purpose is to guarantee that students are given every opportunity to understand the nature of the financial obligations required of them as participants in the HPSL program.

Provides for the assumption of collection effort by the Federal government once an institution has exercised due diligence in attempting to collect a delinquent loan. Provides for loans collected by the Secretary to be redistributed to the participating institutions in a manner prescribed by the federal government.

Loan-in-Kind Repayment Program—Creates and authorizes a loan-in-kind repayment program (LIKRP) to permit the Secretary to reduce the debts of graduates of health profession schools for the performance of service in academic, nonprofit research, or community or public service employment. Provides for a year by year schedule so that both the Secretary and the individual have the greatest amount of freedom of discretion possible under such a contractual arrangement.

Exceptional Financial Need Scholarship Program—modifies this program to restrict the total scholarship award to a student from exceeding the cost of attendance at a given educational institution attended by the student in a given year. Eliminates requirement that such students participate in the National Health Service Corps, since this scholarship program is but a one year program, and restricted to the first year of training.

Capitation Grants for Schools of Public Health—annual grants to schools of public health for the support of the education programs of such schools are permitted according to a formula that considers the number of full-time equivalents and part-time students. Specifies eligibility and application requirements for schools of public health for capitation grants.

Area Health Education Centers—Authority for the AHEC program is amended to permit greater flexibility in awarding special projects grants. Changes special projects funding from up to 10 percent of funds to simple 10 percent of funds.

Dentistry—authority for the program is amended to include approved advanced educational programs in the general practice of dentistry. Also, requires a 10 percent set aside of funds authorized for family medicine and general dentistry programs.

Special Projects—amends existing authority to create pilot projects in the health professions and special projects in the health professions. Grants and contracts are permitted for faculty development and curricula development.

Graduate Programs in Health Administration—amends existing authority to permit funding of programs with at least 20 students and a high minority enrollment.

Special Projects for Schools of Public Health—authorizes grants to schools of public health to develop programs in an array of public health areas, e.g., biostatistics or epidemiology, environmental health sciences, nutrition, geriatrics, health promotion and disease prevention, alcoholism and medical care cost containment. Authorizes $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1988.

Project Grants and Contracts in Allied Health—amends the existing authority to permit grants and contracts for the planning, developing, demonstrating, operating, and evaluating projects related to the use of allied health personnel in the health care delivery system, the retraining of allied health personnel who have been out of the job market, to provide training and education to improve the skills of allied health assistants and other subprofessional allied health personnel who are employed in acute, chronic, and long-term care institutions, and other projects.

Educational Assistance to Disadvantaged Individuals in Allied Health Training—amends existing authority to permit grants and contracts with schools of allied health, state and local educational agencies, and other public or private nonprofit entities to assist in meeting the costs of assisting individuals who, due to socio-economic factors, are financially or otherwise disadvantaged to undertake education to enter the allied health professions. Authorizes $1.5 million for fiscal year 1985 and slight increases for the next three fiscal years.

NURSING

A. Authorization: Special Projects—authorizes for appropriation $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $16,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $17,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $17,000,000 for fiscal year 1988.

Advanced Nurse Training Programs—authorizes for appropriation $22,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $22,300,000 for fiscal year 1986, $24,700,000 for fiscal year 1987 and fiscal year 1988.

B. Program Revisions: Nurse Practitioner Program—amends existing authority to permit the Secretary to make grants to and enter into contracts with public or nonprofit private schools of nursing and medicine, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other entities to plan, expand, or maintain nurse practitioner programs. Requires such programs to award a Master's degree or doctoral degree. Permits nurse midwifery program to grant certificates in addition to Master's and doctoral degrees.

Demonstration Projects—creates the authority for the Secretary to make grants to public and private nonprofit schools of nursing to support demonstration projects to demonstrate nurse practice and nurse education collaboration, nursing cost-effectiveness in long term care, pediatrics, community health nursing and other areas.

Fellowships—creates the authority for the Secretary to make grants for fellowships for nursing faculty to acquire increased skills so that they may participate in the training of advanced level nurses, may investigate alternatives to traditional health care modalities that are cost-effective, with special emphasis on at-risk populations such as the elderly, premature newborns, the handicapped, and ethnic minorities, and may examine nursing interventions that result in positive outcomes in health status.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Health Professions and Nursing Educational Assistance Amendments of 1984".

(A) by redesignating section 745 (as added by subsection (a)(5) of this section) as section 746; and

(B) by inserting after section 744 the following new section:

"STUDENT LOAN INFORMATION BY INSTITUTIONS

"SEC. 745. (a) With respect to loans made by a school under this subpart after June 30, 1985, each school, in order to carry out the provisions of sections 740 and 741, shall, at any time such school makes a loan to a student under this subpart, provide thorough and adequate loan information on loans made under this subpart to the student. The loan information required to be provided to the student by this subsection shall include—

"(1) the yearly and cumulative maximum amounts that may be borrowed by the student;

"(2) the terms under which repayment of the loan will begin;

"(3) the maximum number of years in which the loan must be repaid;

"(4) the interest rate that will be paid by the borrower and the minimum amount of the required monthly payment;

"(5) the amount of any other fees charged to the borrower by the lender;

"(6) any options the borrower may have for deferral, cancellation, prepayment, consolidation, or other refinancing of the loan;

"(7) a definition of default on the loan and a specification of the consequences which will result to the borrower if the borrower defaults, including a description of any arrangements which may be made with credit bureau organizations; and

"(8) to the extent practicable, the effect of accepting the loan on the eligibility of the borrower for other forms of student assistance.

"(b) With respect to loans made under this subpart after June 30, 1985, each school, in order to carry out the provisions of sections 740 and 741, shall, immediately prior to the graduation from such school of a student who has received a loan under this subpart, disclose to the student the information required by this subsection. Such information shall include—

"(1) a specification of—

"(A) each amount borrowed under this subpart; and

"(B) the total amount financed under this subpart, which shall equal the difference between—

"(i) the sum of all amounts borrowed by the borrower under this subpart, minus

"(ii) the sum of all charges paid by the borrower with respect to such amounts;

"(2) the dollar cost to the borrower of the total amount borrowed under this subpart;

"(3) the dollar amount of total scheduled payments, calculated by adding the amounts described in paragraphs (1)(B) and (2); and

"(4) a schedule for repayment of the loan by the borrower, including the number, amounts, and frequency of payments to be made.

"(c) The loan information required by subsections (a) and (b) shall be made available in a conspicuous form either in the note or other written evidence of the loan or in another written form signed by the borrower.

"(d) Each school, in order to carry out the provisions of sections 740 and 741, shall maintain contact with any borrower who received a loan under this subpart during any period beginning after June 30, 1985, in which such borrower defers payment of such loan (as permitted by section 741(c)) following the borrower's graduation from such school. Such required contact with the borrower shall consist of letters to the borrower which summarize the information described in subsection (b)(4). Such letters shall be sent by the school to the borrower approximately 90 days after the borrower's graduation, approximately 180 days after such graduation, and at approximately 30 days prior to the date on which the first payment by the borrower on a loan under this subpart is due.

"(e)(1) With respect to loans made under this subpart which are not delinquent on June 30, 1985, and with respect to any loans made pursuant to this subpart after such date, a school, in order to carry out the provisions of sections 740 and 741, shall take the actions described in paragraphs (2) and (3) whenever a student who received a loan under this subpart fails to make one or more loan payments in accordance with the repayment schedule contained in the loan agreement between the borrower and the school.

"(2) A school shall notify a delinquent borrower of the status of the borrower's loan account and the consequences of default on the loan—

"(A) approximately 15 days after the due date of any delinquent loan payment;

"(B) approximately 45 days after such date;

"(C) approximately 60 days after such date;

"(D) approximately 75 days after such date; and

"(E) approximately 120 days after such date.

"(3)(A) If, after sending all the notices required by paragraph (2) with respect to a delinquent loan, such loan remains delinquent, a school shall take the actions described in subparagraphs (B) through (D) unless the costs that will be incurred by the school in taking such actions will exceed the total amount of the delinquent loan.

"(B) The school shall notify any credit bureau organization to which the school subscribes of the delinquent loan.

"(C) The school shall use collection agents to collect the loan, and may use an internal collection agent.

"(D) The school shall institute any appropriate legal proceedings against the borrower after all other attempts to collect the loan have failed.

"(f)(1) With respect to any loan under this subpart which is delinquent on June 30, 1985, a school shall take the actions described in paragraphs (2) through (5) unless the costs that will be incurred by the school in taking such actions will exceed the total amount of the delinquent loan.

"(2) A school shall pursue all reasonable methods available for locating the borrower of such a loan.

"(3) If such a borrower is located, the school shall send the borrower a registered letter, stating the borrower's obligation to repay the loan and the consequences resulting to the borrower from default. The school shall provide the borrower with a period of 30 days to respond to the letter before taking any further action with respect to the loan.

"(4) If a borrower does not respond to a letter sent pursuant to paragraph (3) within the 30-day period prescribed by such paragraph, a school shall send such borrower two additional registered letters which specify the actions the school will take to collect the loan.

"(5) If a borrower has not begun to repay a loan within 120 days after receipt of the letter described in paragraph (3), a school shall use the collection procedures described in subsection (e)(3) to collect such loan.

"(g) If a school has complied with all the requirements of this section with respect to a loan and is still unable to collect the loan, the Secretary shall accept referral of such loan for collection by such means as may be at the disposal of the Federal Government. Any amounts collected on a loan referred to the Secretary shall be returned to the Secretary for allotment under this subpart in the fiscal year in which such amounts are returned and the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year.".

(2) Section 740 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c)(1) An agreement with a school under subsection (a) may only be terminated by the Secretary, in accordance with the procedures established by this subsection, if the Secretary finds that the school has failed to comply substantially with section 745. The procedures that the Secretary shall follow in terminating such an agreement shall include at least the procedures described in paragraphs (2) through (6) of this subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall provide a school with which the Secretary has an agreement under subsection (a) with written notice of an allegation that the school is not in substantial compliance with section 745. Such notice shall include a written statement of reasonable and achievable steps which the school may take to demonstrate progress toward achieving substantial compliance with such section.

"(3) The Secretary shall provide a school which has received a notice described in paragraph (2) with a reasonable period of at least 30 business days to demonstrate that the school is in substantial compliance with section 745 or has taken reasonable actions to demonstrate significant progress toward achieving substantial compliance with such section.

"(4) If the Secretary determines that the response of a school under paragraph (3) is not adequate, the Secretary shall notify the school in writing that the Secretary intends to terminate the agreement under subsection (a) with the school and that the school may request a formal hearing with respect to such termination. If the school requests such a hearing within 30 days after the receipt of such notice, the Secretary shall provide such school with a hearing conducted by an administrative law judge. The administrative law judge shall consider all evidence offered at the hearing and issue a decision containing findings of fact and a determination whether a school is in substantial compliance with section 745. In making such determination, the administrative law judge shall give appropriate consideration to extenuating factors, which may include—

"(A) the appropriateness of a rigid delinquency standard in the case of a school which has relatively few borrowers repaying loans under this subpart;

"(B) the relative number of borrowers who did not graduate from such school;

"(C) the relative number of borrowers who attended the school and who are repaying loans under this subpart;

"(D) the progress the school is making in collecting loan installments on which payments are past due;

"(E) the economic conditions of the areas in which graduates of the school are residing;

"(F) administrative problems beyond the control of the current officials of the school responsible for loan collection; and

"(G) the legal enforceability of any delinquent loans.

"(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the decision of an administrative law judge under this subsection shall be binding on the parties and shall become effective 30 days after issuance of the administrative law judge's decision under paragraph (4).

"(B) Any school may, within 30 days after the date on which the administrative law judge issues a decision under this subsection, request a review of such decision by the Secretary. If a request for such a review is made, the Secretary shall conduct such review and make a determination based on consideration of all information submitted to the administrative law judge and any other information submitted by the parties. In conducting such review and making such determination, the Secretary shall affirm the findings and determination of the administrative law judge, unless such findings and determination are unsupported by substantial evidence based on the record taken as a whole.

"(6) A school which has requested a hearing pursuant to paragraph (4) and has requested a review of the decision of an administrative law judge by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (5), shall be considered to have exhausted its administrative remedies and shall be entitled to judicial review in a United States district court.

"(d) Until an agreement with a school under subsection (a) has been formally terminated by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c), the school shall continue to have access to all funds available in the student loan fund of such school under this section to make student loans.".

(e) Section 6103(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended—

(1) by inserting "administered by the Department of Education" before the period in the paragraph heading of paragraph (4); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) Individuals who have defaulted on student loans administered by the Department of Health and Human Services.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon written request by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary may disclose the mailing address of any taxpayer who has defaulted on a loan under subpart II of part C of title VII of the Public Health Service Act or under subpart II of part C of title VIII of such Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of the Department of Health and Human Services for the purposes of locating such taxpayer for purposes of collecting such loan.

"(B) DISCLOSURE TO SCHOOLS.—Any mailing address disclosed under subparagraph (A) may be disclosed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to any shcool with which the Secretary of Health and Human Services has an agreement under subpart II of part C of title VII of the Public Health Service Act or Subpart II of part C of title VIII of such Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of such school whose duties relate to the collection of student loans for purposes of locating individuals who have defaulted on student loans made under such subparts for the purposes of collecting such loans.".

LOAN-IN-KIND REPAYMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 128. (a) Part C of title VII is amended—

(1) by striking out the subpart heading for subpart IV; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"SUBPART III—LOAN-IN-KIND REPAYMENT PROGRAM

"ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 751. (a) The Secretary shall establish the Loan-In-Kind Repayment Program (hereinafter in this subpart referred to as the 'Repayment Program') to assure an adequate distribution of trained health professionals and to provide a program through which an eligible individual may reduce the debts incurred by such individual in obtaining education by performing service in academic, nonprofit research, or community or public service employment.

"(b) To participate in the Repayment Program, an eligible individual must—

"(1) be within—

"(A) one year of graduation from—

"(i) a school of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, veterinary medicine, optometry, podiatry, pharmacy in a State, or

"(ii) a graduate program in health administration or clinical psychology; or

"(B) one year of completing an approved internship, residency or other advanced clinical training;

"(2) submit an application to the Secretary for participation in the Repayment Program;

"(3) sign and submit to the Secretary, with such application, a written contract (described in subsection (e)) to accept payment of designated loan amounts on behalf of the eligible individual (contingent on finding and securing eligible employment under this subpart) and to undertake full-time eligible employment for a designated employment period; and

"(4) have obtained an eligible loan in support of the health professions education of such eligible individual.

"(c)(1) In disseminating application forms and contract forms to eligible individuals desiring to participate in the Repayment Program, the Secretary shall include with such forms—

"(A) a fair summary of the rights and liabilities of an eligible individual whose application is approved (and whose contract is accepted) by the Secretary, including in the summary a clear explanation of the damages to which the United States is entitled under section 752 in the case of the eligible individual's breach of the contract;

"(B) information respecting the employment obligation of an eligible individual under a contract under this subpart and such other information as may be necessary for the eligible individual to understand the eligible individual's prospective participation in the Repayment Program and in eligible employment.

"(2) The application form, contract form, and all other information furnished by the Secretary under this subpart shall be written in a manner designed for understanding by the average eligible individual applying to participate in the Repayment Program. The Secretary shall make such application forms, contract forms, and other information available to eligible individuals desiring to participate in the Repayment Program at a time sufficiently early in the application process to insure that such eligible individuals have adequate time to carefully review and evaluate such forms and information.

"(d)(1) An eligible individual becomes a participant in the Repayment Program only upon the Secretary's approval of the eligible individual's application submitted under subsection (b) and the Secretary's acceptance of the contract submitted by the eligible individual under such subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall provide written notice to an eligible individual promptly upon the Secretary's approval under paragraph (1) of the eligible individual's participation in the Repayment Program.

"(e) The written contract (referred to in this subpart) between the secretary and a participant shall contain—

"(1) and agreement that—

"(A) subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary agrees to provide the participant with repayment (described in subsection (f)) for a designated employment period determined by the participant which is not less than two years, during which period the participant is engaged in full-time eligible employment; and

"(B) subject to paragraph (2), the participant agrees to engage in full-time eligible employment for a designated employment period of not less than two years;

"(2) a provision that any financial obligation of the United States arising out of a contract entered into under this subpart and any obligation of the participant which is conditioned thereon, is contingent upon the appropriation by the Congress of amounts for loan repayment under this subpart;

"(3) a statement of the damages to which the United States is entitled under section 752 for breach of the contract by the participant; and

"(4) such other statements of the rights and liabilities of the Secretary and of the participant, which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subpart.

"(f)(1)(A) Repayment under a written contract under this subpart shall consist of payment to, or (in accordance with paragraph (2)) on behalf of, the participant an amount, for each year of employment by the participant in eligible employment, equal to—

"(i) 20 percent of the total amount of the principal of the participant's eligible loans; or whichever is less.

"(ii) $20,000,

"(B) The Secretary may prepay all or part of the total amont of the principal of the eligible loans of participant in the Repayment Program.

"(2) The Secretary may enter into a contract with a lender which made an eligible loan to a participant in the Repayment Program in order to pay such lender, on behalf of such participant, amounts of the principal of such eligible loan. Payment to such lender may be made without regard to section 3324 of title 31, United States Code.

"(g) The Secretary shall report to Congress on March 1 of each year—

"(1) the number and types of eligible employment that participants undertake under the Repayment Program;

"(2) the total amount of loan principal paid under the program in each fiscal year; and

"(3) the number of applications filed for participation in the Repayment Program.

"RECOVERY

"SEC. 752. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, if a participant breaches a written contract under this subpart by failing either to begin such participant's eligible employment or to complete such employment, the United States shall be entitled to recover from the participant an amount determined in accordance with the formula in which 'A' is the amount the United States is entitled to recover, 'o' is the sum of the amounts paid under this subpart to or on behalf of the participant; 't' is the total number of months in the participant's period of eligible employment; and 's' is the number of months of such period served by such participant in accordance with a written contract under section 751(e). Any amount of damages which the United States is entitled to recover under this subsection shall, within the one-year period beginning on the date of the breach of the written contract (or such longer period beginning on such date as specified by the Secretary for good cause shown), be paid to the United States.

"(b)((1) Any obligation of a participant under the Repayment Program (or a contact thereunder) for service or payment of damages shall be canceled upon the death of the participant.

"(2) The Secretary shall by regulation permit a participant to remain in good standing in the Repayment Program if such participant does not retain eligible employment under the program and is seeking new eligible employment.

"(3) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the partial or total waiver or suspension of any designated repayment penalty by a participant under the Repayment Program (or a contract thereunder) whenever compliance by the participant is impossible or would involve extreme hardship to the participant and if enforcement of such obligation with respect to any participant would be unconscionable.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 753. (a) The Secretary shall from time to time prescribe regulations designating the types of eligible employment which are in greatest need of health professionals and the types of health professionals needed in such types of employment.

"(b) The Secretary shall publicize the Repayment Program, the types of eligible employment designated pursuant to subsection (a), and the employment verification procedure prescribed under subsection (c). The Secretary shall distribute such information so that it is available to students in health professions schools, faculty and administrators of such schools, State governors, and administrators of Federal, State, and local departments and agencies.

"(c) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations to implement this subpart, including regulations establishing a procedure whereby a particular position is determined to be eligible employment for purposes of this subpart and a monitoring system whereby the Secretary verifies that each participant is complying with the terms and conditions of the contract with the Secretary.

"DEFINITIONS

"Sec. 754. For purposes of this subpart:

"(1) The term 'designated employment period' means a period in which a participant engages in eligible employment under this subpart, as determined by such participant, but which is not less than two years.

"(2) The term 'eligible employment' means—

"(A) teaching or research in health professions schools;

"(B) employment in State or local public health or environmental protection agencies;

"(C) employment in hospitals, clinics, and prisons owned and operated by State or local governments;

"(E) employment in Federal agencies (other than the Department of Defense) which conduct or support biomedical research, including the National Institutes of Health, the National Science Foundation, the Agricultural Research Service of the Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(F) employment in Federal and State programs for the inspection of meat, poultry, and other animal-derived food products (other than programs carried out by the Department of Defense); and

"(G) employment in a health manpower shortage area designated under section 332.

"(3) The term 'eligible individual' means an individual—

"(A) who is a graduate of a school of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, veterinary medicine, optometry, podiatry, pharmacy, or public health, or a graduate program in health administration or clinical psychology, and

"(B) who has received an eligible loan.

"(4) The term 'eligible loan' means a loan obtained by an individual under—

"(A) this part;

"(B) part B of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965; or

"(C) part D of such title.

"(5) The term 'participant' means an eligible participant whose application submitted under this subpart has been approved by the Secretary and whose contract submitted under this subpart has been accepted by the Secretary.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR FIRST-YEAR STUDENTS OF EXCEPTIONAL FINANCIAL NEED

SEC. 129. (a) Section 758(d) is amended by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) A scholarship provided to a student for a school year under a grant under subsection (a) shall consist of—

"(A) payment to, or (in accordance with paragraph (4)) on behalf of, the student of the amount (except as provided in section 710) of—

"(i) the tuition of the student in such school year; and

"(ii) all other reasonable educational expenses, including fees, books, and laboratory expenses, incurred by the student in such school year; and

"(B) payment to the student of a stipend of $400 per month (adjusted in accordance with paragraph (5)) for each of the 12 consecutive months beginning with the first month of such school year.

"(3) Notwithstanding paragraph (2), the total scholarship award to a student for each year shall exceed the cost of attendance for that year at the educational institution attended by the student (as determined by such educational institution).

"(4) The Secretary may contract with an educational institution, in which is enrolled a student who received a scholarship with a grant under subsection (a), for the payment to the educational institution of the amounts of tuition and other reasonable educational expenses described in paragraph (2)(A). Payment to such an educational institution may be made without regard to section 3324 of title 31, United States Code.

"(5) The amount of the monthly stipend, specified in paragraph (2)(B) and as previously adjusted (if at all) in accordance with this paragraph, shall be increased by the Secretary for each school year ending in a fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1978, by an amount (rounded to the next highest multiple of $1) equal to the amount of such stipend multiplied by the overall percentage (as set forth in the report transmitted to the Congress under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code) of the adjustment (if such adjustment is an increase) in the rates of pay under the General Schedule made effective in the fiscal year in which such school year ends.".

(b) Section 338A(g)(1) is amended by striking out "or under section 758 (relating to scholarships for first-year students of exceptional financial need),".

CAPITATION GRANTS FOR SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

SEC. 130. (a) Section 770 is amended to read as follows:

"CAPITATION GRANTS FOR SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

"SEC. 770. (a)(1) The Secretary shall make annual grants to schools of public health for the support of the education programs of such schools. The amount of the annual grant to each such school with an approved application shall be computed for each fiscal year in accordance with paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) Each school of public health shall receive for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for each of the next three fiscal years, an amount equal to the product of—

"(A) $1,400, and

"(B) the sum of (i) the number of full-time students enrolled in such school in the school year beginning in such fiscal year, and (ii) the number of full-time equivalents of part-time students, determined pursuant to paragraph (3), for such school for such school year.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (2), the number of full-time equivalents of part-time students for a school of public health for any school year is a number equal to—

"(A) the total number of credit hours of instruction in such year for which part-time students of such school, who are pursuing a course of study leading to a graduate degree in public health or an equivalent degree, have enrolled, divided by

"(B) the greater of (i) the number of credit hours of instruction which a full-time student of such school was required to take in such year, or (ii) 9, rounded to the next highest whole number.

"(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), if the aggregate of the amounts of the grants to be made in accordance with such subsection for any fiscal year to schools of public health with approved applications exceeds the total of the amounts appropriates for such grants for such schools under subsection (e), the amount of a school's grant with respect to which such excess exists shall for such fiscal year be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount determined for the school under subsection (a) as the total of the amounts appropriated for that year under subsection (e) bears to the amount required to make grants in accordance with subsection (a) to each of the schools of public health with approved applications.

"(c)(1) For purposes of this section, regulations of the Secretary shall include provisions relating to the determination of the number of students enrolled in a school or in a particular year-class in a school on the basis of estimates, on the basis of the number of students who in an earlier year were enrolled in a school or in a particular year-class, or on such other basis as the Secretary deems appropriate for making such determination, and shall include methods of making such determination when a school or a year-class was not in existence in an earlier year at a school.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the term 'full-time students' (whether such term is used by itself or in connection with a particular year-class) means students pursuing a full-time course of study leading to a graduate degree in public health or equivalent degree.

"(d) In the case of a new school of public health which applies for a grant under this section in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which it will admit its first class, the enrollment for purposes of subsection (a) shall be the number of full-time students which the Secretary determines, on the basis of assurances provided by the school, will be enrolled in the school, in the fiscal year after the fiscal year in which the grant is made.

"(e) For payments under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $7,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and each of the three succeeding fiscal years.".

(b) Section 771 is amended to read as follows:

"ELIGIBILITY FOR CAPITATION GRANTS

"SEC. 771. (a) The Secretary shall not make a grant under section 770 to any school of public health in a fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1977, unless the application for the grant contains, or is supported by, assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the applicant will expend in carrying out its functions as a school of public health during the fiscal year for which such grant is sought, an amount of funds (other than funds for construction as determined by the Secretary) from non-Federal sources which is at least as great as the amount of funds expended by such applicant for such purpose (excluding expenditures of a nonrecurring nature) in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which such grant is sought.

"(b)(1) To be eligible for a grant under section 770 for a fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1984, a school of public health shall maintain an enrollment of full-time, first-year students, for the school year beginning in the fiscal year for which a grant under section 770 is applied for, which is not less than the number of full-time, first year students enrolled in such school in the school year beginning in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1976.

"(2) The Secretary may waive (in whole or in part) application to a school of public health of the requirement of paragraph (1) if the Secretary determines, after receiving the written recommendation of the appropriate accreditation body or bodies (approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education) that compliance by such school with such requirement will prevent it from maintaining its accreditation.".

(c)(1) Section 772(b) is amended—

(A) by striking out "or subsection (a) or (b) of section 788";

(B) by striking out "of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, veterinary medicine, optometry, pharmacy, or podiatry," and inserting in lieu thereof "public health,";

(C) by striking out "Secretary" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Health and Human Services";

(D) by striking out "Commissioner of Education" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Education"; and

(E) by striking out "Commissioner" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Education".

(2) The section heading for section 772 is amended to read as follows:

"APPLICATION FOR CAPITATION GRANTS"

(3) Section 788 is amended by redesignating subsection (f) (as amended by section 111 of this Act) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) To be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) or (b), the applicant must (1) be a public or other nonprofit school of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, veterinary medicine, optometry, pharmacy, or podiatry, and (2) be accredited by a recognized body or bodies approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education, except that the requirement of this clause shall be deemed to be satisfied if (A) in the case of a school which by reason of no, or an insufficient, period of operation is not, at the time of application for a grant under this part, eligible for such accreditation, the Secretary of Education finds, after consultation with the appropriate accreditation body or bodies, that there is reasonable assurance that the school will meet the accreditation standards of such body or bodies prior to the beginning of the academic year following the normal graduation date of students who are in their first year of instruction at such school during the fiscal year in which the Secretary of Health and Human Services makes a final determination as to approval of the application, or (B) in the case of any other school, the Secretary of Education finds after such consultation and after consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services that there is reasonable ground to expect that, with the aid of a grant (or grants) under those sections, having regard for the purposes of the grant for which application is made, such school will meet such accreditation standards within a reasonable time.".

(d) The heading for part E of title VII is amended to read as follows:

"PART E—GRANTS TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH"

AREA HEALTH EDUCATION CENTERS

SEC. 131. Section 781 is amended—

(1) by inserting a comma and "and with public or private nonprofit entities which have served as regional area health education centers and which have previously received such assistance," after "this section" in subsection (a)(2);

(2) by striking out "section 822" in subsection (c)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof "section 803"; and

(3) by striking out "may obligate not more than" in the second sentence of subsection (g) and inserting in lieu thereof "shall obligate".

FAMILY MEDICINE AND GENERAL PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY

SEC. 131. (a) Section 786(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary may make grants and enter into contracts with any public or nonprofit private school of dentistry, any accredited postgraduate dental training institution, or any other public or private nonprofit entity which the Secretary determines is capable of carrying out a grant or contract under this subsection—

"(1) to plan, develop, and operate an approved residency program in the general practice of dentistry or an approved advanced educational program in the general practice of dentistry; and

"(2) to provide financial assistance (in the form of traineeships and fellowships) to participants in such a program who are in need of financial assistance and who plan to specialize in the practice of general dentistry.".

(b) Section 786(c) (as amended by section 109 of this Act) is further amended—

(1) by inserting "and contracts" after "grants" in the first sentence; and

(2) by inserting before the period in the second sentence a comma and "and shall obligate not less than 10 percent of such amounts in each fiscal year for grants and contracts under subsection (b)".

CONVERSION AND CURRICULUM ASSISTANCE

SEC. 133. (a) Section 788(b) is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with schools of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, veterinary medicine, optometry, podiatry, pharmacy, and allied health, graduate programs in health administration, and other appropriate public or nonprofit private entities, for—

"(A) pilot projects in the health professions; and

"(B) special projects in the health professions.

"(2) Grants made and contracts entered into under paragraph (1) shall include grants and contracts for projects to—

"(A) provide faculty development, including—

"(i) the enhancement and improvement of the teaching skills and educational methods of faculty of schools which receive a grant or contract under such paragraph;

"(ii) the training of faculty of schools which receive a grant or contract under such paragraph in computer technology, research methods, communications skills, administration, management, and ethics; and

"(iii) the training of faculty of schools which receive a grant or contract under such paragraph in areas such as toxicology, environmental health, nutrition, and gerontology;

"(B) plan, develop, and establish innovative curricula, including—

"(i) course materials in health education and promotion, disease prevention, self-care, the special needs of the elderly, and communications skills for health professionals; and

"(ii) multidisciplinary approaches to educational programs;

"(C) establish new clinical training sites and methods to provide clinical training consistent with changes in the patient population, the importance of health prevention activities, and reduced financial resources, including community based training sites and training by simulation of clinical encounters.

"(3) The Secretary shall prescribe general national health professions education priority guidelines in order to establish priorities for each type of project described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (2). In prescribing such guidelines, the Secretary shall consult with the types of schools and programs described in paragraph (1).

"(4) In awarding grants and entering into contracts under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall evaluate a proposal from a school providing education in a particular health profession by comparing such proposal with proposals from other schools providing education in the same health profession.

"(5)(A) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for proper peer review of all grants and contracts under paragraph (1) by utilizing, to the maximum extent possible, appropriate peer review groups composed principally of non-Federal experts.

"(B) The Secretary shall submit each proposal for a grant or contract under paragraph (1) for peer review in accordance with subparagraph (A). The Secretary may not make a grant or enter into a contract under paragraph (1) until the Secretary has received the recommendations of the appropriate peer review committee and the National Advisory Council on Health Professions Education with respect to the proposal for such grant or contract.".

(b) Section 788 (as amended by section 111, section 130(c)(3), and subsection (a) of this section) is further amended by striking out subsection (a) and redesignating subsections (b) through (g) as subsections (a) through (f), respectively.

GRADUATE PROGRAMS IN HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 134. Section 791(c)(2)(A)(1) is amended by inserting before the semicolon a comma and "except that in any case in which the number of minority students enrolled in the graduate educational programs of such entity exceeds an amount equal to 45 percent of all students enrolled in such programs, such application shall only be required to contain assurances that at least 20 individuals will complete such programs in such school year".

SPECIAL PROJECTS FOR SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

SEC. 135. Subpart I of part G of title VII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SPECIAL PROJECTS FOR SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

"SEC. 794A. (a) The Secretary may make grants to assist schools of public health in meeting the costs of special projects to develop new programs or to expand existing programs in—

"(1) biostatistics or epidemiology;

"(2) health administration, health planning, or health policy analysis;

"(3) environmental health sciences;

"(4) dietetics and nutrition;

"(5) behavioral sciences;

"(6) geriatrics;

"(7) health promotion and disease prevention;

"(8) alcoholism;

"(9) the epidemiology of sexually transmitted diseases;

"(10) medical care cost containment; and

"(11) injury due to accidents within and outside the workplace.

"(b) To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.".

PROJECTS GRANTS AND CONTRACTS IN ALLIED HEALTH

SEC. 136. (a) Subsection (a) of section 796 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary shall make grants to and enter into contracts with eligible entities to assist them in meeting the costs of planning, developing, demonstrating, operating, and evaluating projects relating to the establishment of programs to—

"(1) develop methods for increasing the efficiency and reducing the costs of health care delivery through more effective use of allied health personnel;

"(2) provide continuing education for allied health professionals, including competency improvement, faculty development, and advanced training;

"(3) provide appropriate retraining opportunities for allied health personnel who, after periods of professional inactivity, desire again actively to engage in the practice or teaching of their allied health profession;

"(4) improve the distribution and availability by geographic area or by specialty group of adequately trained allied health personnel needed to meet the health needs of the Nation, including the need to increase the availability of primary care services, services to the elderly, and services to bilingual groups and the need to promote preventive health care;

"(5) provide training and education to improve the skills of allied health assistants and other subprofessional allied health personnel (as defined by the Secretary) who are employed in acute, chronic, and long-term care institutions;

"(6) provide education and training to permit individuals to become proficient in a related specialty; and

"(7) develop ways to meet changing needs in health care delivery without creating new allied health occupations or specialities.".

(b) Subsection (b)(1) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such an application shall provide for such fiscal control and accounting procedures and reports, and access to the records of the applicant, as the Secretary may require to assure proper disbursement of and accounting for Federal funds paid to the applicant under this section.".

(c) Such section is further amended by redesignating subsection (d) (as amended by section 117 of this Act) as subsection (e) and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) The Secretary may, with the advice of the National Advisory Council on Health Professions Education, provide assistance to the heads of other Federal agencies to encourage and assist in the utilization of medical facilities under the jurisdiction of such agencies for allied health training programs.".

EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE TO DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS IN ALLIED HEALTH TRAINING

SEC. 137. Section 798 is amended to read as follows:

"EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE TO DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS IN ALLIED HEALTH TRAINING

"SEC. 798. (a)(1) for the purpose of assisting individuals who, due to socioeconomic factors, are financially or otherwise disadvantaged (including individuals who are veterans of the Armed Forces with military training or experience in the health field) to undertake education to enter the allied health professions, the Secretary shall make grants to and enter into contracts with schools of allied health, State and local educational agencies, and other public or private nonprofit entities to assist in meeting the costs described in paragraph (2).

"(2) A grant or contract under paragraph (1) may be used by the school, agency, or entity to meet the costs of—

"(A) identifying, recruiting, selecting, and retaining such disadvantaged individuals;

"(B) facilitating the entry of such individuals into schools of allied health;

"(C) providing counseling, education, or other services designed to assist such individuals to complete successfully their education at a school of allied health; and

"(D) providing, for a period prior to the entry of such individuals into the program of education of a school of allied health, preliminary education designed to assist such individuals to complete successfully such program of education.

"(b)(1) No grant may be made or contract entered into under subsection (a) unless an application therefor has been submitted to, and approved by, the Secretary. Such application shall be in such form, submitted in such manner, and contain such information, as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.

"(2) The amount of any grant under subsection (a) shall be determined by the Secretary.

"(c) For payments under grants and contracts under subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $1,500,000 for fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $2,000,000 for fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $2,500,000 for fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $3,000,000 for fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.".

(f) Section 853(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The term 'accredited' when applied to any program of nurse education means a program accredited by a recognized body or bodies, or by a State agency, approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education and when applied to a hospital, school, college, or university (or a unit thereof) means a hospital, school, college, or university (or a unit thereof) which is accredited by a recognized body or bodies, or by a State agency, approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education, except that a school of nursing seeking an agreement under subpart II of part C for the establishment of a student loan fund, which is not, at the time of the application under such subpart, eligible for accreditation by such a recognized body or bodies or State agency, shall be deemed accredited for purposes of such subpart if the Secretary of Education finds, after consultation with the appropriate accreditation body or bodies, that there is reasonable assurance that the school will meet the accreditation standards of such body or bodies prior to the beginning of the academic year following the normal graduation date of students who are in their first year of instruction at such school during the fiscal year in which the agreement with such school is made under such subpart; except that the provisions of this clause shall not apply for purposes of section 838. For the purpose of this paragraph, the Secretary of Education shall publish a list of recognized accrediting bodies, and of State agencies, which he determines to the Secretary of Education reliable authority as to the quality of education offered.".

SPECIAL PROJECTS

SEC. 202. The first sentence of section 820(d) is amended by striking out "and" after "1983,", and by inserting before the period a comma and "$15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $16,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988".

ADVANCED NURSE TRAINING PROGRAMS

SEC. 203. Section 821(b) is amended by striking out "and" after "1983," and by inserting before the period a comma and "$22,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $22,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $24,700,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $24,700,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988".

NURSE PRACTITIONER PROGRAMS

SEC. 204. Section 822 is amended to read as follows:

"NURSE PRACTITIONER PROGRAMS

"SEC. 822. (a)(1)(A) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with public or nonprofit private schools of nursing and medicine, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other public or nonprofit private entities to meet the cost of projects to—

"(i) plan, develop, and operate,

"(ii) significantly expand, or

"(iii) maintain existing, programs for the training of nurse practitioners or programs for the training of nurse midwives.

"(B) The Secretary shall give special consideration to applications for grants or contracts under subparagraph (A) for—

"(i) programs for the training of nurse practitioners who will practice in health manpower shortage areas (designated under section 332);

"(ii) programs for the training of nurse practitioners which emphasize training respecting the special problems of geriatric patients and training to meet the particular needs of nursing home patients; and

"(iii) programs for the training of nurse midwives.

"(2)(A) For purposes of this section—

"(i) the term 'programs for the training of nurse practitioners' means educational programs for registered nurses (irrespective of the type of school of nursing in which the nurses received their training) which meet guidelines prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with subparagraph (B) and which have as their objective the education of nurses (including pediatric and geriatric nurses) who will, upon completion of their studies in such programs, receive a masters' degree or a doctoral degree and will be qualified to effectively provide primary health care, including primary health care in homes and in ambulatory car facilities, long-term care facilities, and other health care institutions; and

"(ii) the term 'programs for the training of nurse midwives' means educational programs for registered nurses (irrespective of the type of school of nursing in which the nurses received their training) which grant a certificate, a masters' degree, or a doctoral degree, which meet guidelines prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with subparagraph (B), and which have as their objective the education of nurses for clinical nurse midwifery practice.

"(B) After consultation with appropriate educational organizations and professional nursing and medical organizations, the Secretary shall prescribe guidelines for programs for the training of nurse practitioners and programs for the training of nurse midwives. Such guidelines shall, as a minimum, require that any such program—

"(i) extend for at least one academic year and consist of—

"(I) supervised clinical practice, and

"(II) at least four months (in the aggregate) of classroom instruction, directed toward preparing nurses to deliver primary health care (in the case of programs for the training of nurse practitioners) or to engage in clinical nurse midwifery practice (in the case of programs for the training of nurse midwives); and

"(ii) have an enrollment of not less than eight students.

"(b)(1) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with schools of nursing and public health, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other nonprofit entities to establish and operate traineeship programs to train nurse practitioners or nurse midwives. In considering applications for a grant or contract under this subsection, the Secretary shall give special consideration to applications for traineeships to train individuals who are residents of health manpower shortage areas designated under section 332.

"(2) Traineeships funded under this subsection shall include 100 percent of the costs of tuition, reasonable living and moving expenses (including stipends), books, fees, and necessary transportation.

"(3) A traineeship funded under this subsection shall not be awarded unless the recipient enters into commitment with the Secretary to practice as a nurse practitioner or as a nurse midwife in a health manpower shortage area (designated under section 332) for a period equal to one month for each month for which the recipient receives such a traineeship.

"(4)(A) If, for any reason, an individual who received a traineeship under paragraph (1) fails to complete a service obligation under paragraph (3), such individual shall be liable for the payment of an amount equal to the cost of tuition and other education expenses and other payments paid under the traineeship, plus interest at the maximum legal prevailing rate.

"(B) When an individual who received a traineeship is academically dismissed or voluntarily terminates academic training, such individual shall be liable for repayment to the Government for an amount equal to the cost of tuition and other educational expenses paid to or for such individual from Federal funds plus any other payments which were received under the traineeship.

"(C) Any amount which the United States is entitled to recover under subparagraph (A) or (B) shall, within the three-year period beginning on the date the United States becomes entitled to recover such amount, be paid to the United States.

"(D) The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the waiver or suspension of any obligation under subparagraph (A) or (B) applicable to any individual whenever compliance by such individual is impossible or would involve extreme hardship to such individual and if enforcement of such obligation with respect to any individual would be against equity and good conscience.

"(c) No grant may be made or contract entered into for a project to plan, develop, and operate a program for the training of nurse practitioners or a program for the training of nurse midwives unless the application for the grant or contract contains assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the program will upon its development meet the guidelines which are in effect under subsection (a)(2)(B). No grant may be made or contract entered into for a project to expand or maintain such a program unless the application for the grant or contract contains assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the program meets the guidelines which are in effect under such subsection.

"(d) The costs for which a grant or contract under this section may be made may include costs of preparation of faculty members in order to conform to the guidelines established under subsection (a)(2)(B).

"(e) For payments under grants and contracts under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $17,000,000 for fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $17,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $17,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $17,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.".

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 205. Part A of title VIII is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 820, 821, and 822 (as amended by sections 202, 203, and 204 of this Act, respectively) as sections 801, 802, and 803, respectively; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

"SEC. 804. (a) The Secretary may make grants to public and private nonprofit schools of nursing and other public and nonprofit private entities to support demonstration projects to—

"(1) support clinical nurse training programs which combine educational curricula and clinical practice in health care delivery organizations, including acute care facilities, long-term care facilities, and ambulatory care facilities;

"(2) improve access to nursing services in noninstitutional settings through support of independent nursing practice arrangements in communities; and

"(3) encourage nursing graduates to practice in health manpower shortage areas (designated under section 332) to improve the specialty and geographical distribution of nurses in the United States.

"(b) The amount of any grant under subsection (a) shall be determined by the Secretary.

"(c) No grant may be made under subsection (a) unless an application therefor has been submitted to and approved by the Secretary. Such application shall be in such form, submitted in such manner, and contain such information as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.

"(d) To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $11,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $11,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, $12,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $12,000,000 for fiscal year 1988.".

TRAINEESHIPS FOR ADVANCED TRAINING OF PROFESSIONAL NURSES

SEC. 206. (a) Section 830(a)(1)(C) is amended by inserting "or nurse midwives" before the comma.

(b) Section 830 is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c);

(2) by inserting "(1)" before "There" in such subsection;

(3) by striking out "this section" in the first sentence of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)";

(4) by striking out "and" after "1983," in such sentence;

(5) by inserting a comma and "$15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988" before the period in such sentence;

(6) by adding at the end of such subsection the following new paragraph:

"(2) To carry out subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988."; and

(7) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary may make grants to public or private nonprofit institutions to cover the costs of post baccalaureate and post doctoral fellowships for faculty in schools of nursing to enable such faculty to—

"(1) expand knowledge with respect to nursing by working with groups of students;

"(2) investigate cost-effective alternatives to traditional health care modalities, with special attention to the needs of at-risk populations, such as the elderly, premature newborns, physically and mentally disabled individuals, and ethnic minority groups;

"(3) examine nursing interventions that result in positive outcomes in health status, with attention to interventions which address family violence, drug and alcohol abuse, the health of women, adolescent care, disease prevention, and ethical concerns; and

"(4) address other areas of nursing practice considered by the Secretary to require additional study.".

TRAINEESHIPS FOR THE TRAINING OF NURSE ANESTHETISTS

SEC. 207. Section 831(b) is amended by striking out "and" after "1983," and by inserting before the period a comma and "$1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, $1,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988".

By Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2648. A bill to amend title I of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act to ban ocean dumping at the 12-mile site, to develop a plan for the revitalization of the New York Bight apex, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OCEAN REVITALIZATION ACT

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to end the degradation of New Jersey's coastal waters and contamination of our fisheries by the ocean dumping of sewage sludge close in to New Jersey's shores. My bill, the Ocean Revitalization Act, would permanently ban sewage sludge dumping at the so-called 12-mile site. It would also direct the Environmental Protection Agency to develop an action plan for revitalizing the New York Bight apex.

On April 26, 1984, after years of regulatory delay and litigation, the EPA proposed closing the sludge dump site 12 miles off New Jersey's shores and moving sludge disposal further out to sea, to a 106-mile site. The 106-mile site was proposed for a 5-year period, as an interim measure, until alternatives to ocean dumping can be found. This proposal will now go through a comment and public hearing process. It is likely to be finalized in 6 to 8 months.

EPA's decision to close the 12-mile site is good news for New Jersey and the entire New York-New Jersey metropolitan area. The Ocean Dumping Act was enacted over a decade ago. It was intended by Congress to put an end, once and for all, to continued degradation of our oceans. This intent was reaffirmed in 1977, when the Congress adopted an amendment to the act to halt harmful dumping of sewage sludge.

However, in the last decade, sludge dumping at the 12-mile site has increased from 4.7 million tons per year in 1973 to 8.3 million tons in 1983. Some projections indicate that sludge dumping will double or triple in the coming years, if these practices are not stopped. This is because mammoth, new secondary wastewater treatment plants will come on line in New York City and New Jersey, and other coastal municipalities may consider reentering the ocean with their wastes.

Mr. President, frustration in New Jersey with these practices is running at an all time high. The stress placed on the waters washing our shore by ocean dumping is worsened by the unconscionable dumping of 230 million gallons of raw sewage a day by the city of New York into the Hudson and East Rivers. New Jersey's economy is heavily dependent on keeping our coastal waters healthy. Our tourist industry, along with a more than $1 billion per year commercial and recreational marine fishing industry, cannot tolerate continued degradation of our coastal resources.

In announcing its decision, EPA noted that 40 to 50 years of dumping in shallow waters within 12 miles of New Jersey's beaches has spread the official 6.6-square-mile site for sludge dumping to an area of 20 to 30 square miles. This area is a major commercial fishing zone and concentrations of heavy metals and organic bacteria there have reached levels warranting immediate action. The degradation has moved inland, to about 5 miles off New Jersey's beaches.

EPA has developed a solid basis for its proposal to close the 12-mile site. I believe it will finalize this preliminary decision in a timely manner. The major obstacle, in my judgment, to a halt to sludge dumping at the 12-mile site lies in renewed litigation, on the part of New York City, and perhaps others, to overturn the Agency's decision.

My concern in this regard is only heightened by the fact that a final decision on closing the site is 6 to 8 months away. It will likely be promulgated after the Congress has adjourned for the year. I have been unable to secure assurances from the city of New York that it will not sue while the Congress is in recess. Such litigation would further delay clean up actions in the region and clearly thwart EPA and congressional efforts to halt sewage sludge dumping that degrades the environment or threatens the public health.

I introduce my legislation to send a clear signal to those who would seek to overturn EPA's decision in court, that the Congress will not stand for continued delay. Our nearby ocean waters must not continue to serve as an unregulated waste dump.

Mr. President, closure of the 12-mile site will not be without cost to the six New Jersey sewage authorities which continue to dispose of wastes there. However, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection estimates that when the costs of moving to the 106-mile site are spread out over the large number of people served by these plants, the cost to each household would be $3 to $4 per year. The same modest costs would apply to New York sewage authorities. These costs will be insignificant for the individuals involved, while the benefits to our region will be substantial.

Mr. President, this legislation is consistent with efforts actively underway in New Jersey to develop alternatives to current ocean-dumping practices. The State of New Jersey has an active Ocean Waste Management Committee which is dedicated to improving the quality of our coastal waters. Both Governor Kean, of New Jersey, and the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection support moving the sludge dump site out to 106 miles, and ultimately putting an end to all sludge dumping. My State is committed to revitalizing the New York Bight.

I urge my neighbors across the river in New York to turn away from confrontation and litigation, and to join in a regional effort to revitalize our common waters. If we would just all turn our best scientists and engineers to work on solving this problem, I am confident we can find the answers we need.

My President, the resolution of waste disposal issues is not simple. I do not mean to imply that it is. In deciding how to dispose of sludges, the by-product of secondary treatment facilities, we must be mindful that our environment is a fragile system. None of the potential methods of disposal are without problems. Disposal of toxic sludges on land, untreated, can contaminate groundwater and soils. Incineration of toxic sludges can spread dangerous pollutants through the air. But, Mr. President, our nearby ocean waters must not continue to serve as an unregulated waste dump just because the ocean is a cheap place to dump; just because dumpers have resisted alternatives; or just because it has been that way for years. It must change.

Mr. President, last week the Senate approved a resolution designating the week of April 29 through May 5, 1984, as the National Week of the Ocean. I was a cosponsor of the Senate version of this resolution. One step we can take to followup on this congressional recognition of the importance of our oceans is to end sludge dumping in the New York Bight and develop an action plan to revitalize these waters. That is what the Ocean Revitalization Act is designed to do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2648

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Ocean Revitalization Act".

SEC. 2. Title I of the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"NEW YORK BIGHT APEX

"SEC. 113. (a) The Congress finds and declares that the New York Bight Apex is not a suitable location for the ocean dumping of municipal sludge.

"(b)(1) The Administrator may not issue, or renew, any permit under this title that authorizes the dumping of, or the transportation for purposes of dumping, municipal sludge at the Apex site or anywhere within the Apex after the day determined by the Administrator to be the first day on which municipal sludge can reasonably be dumped at a site designated under section 102 other than a site within the Apex.

"(c)(1) Not later than three years after the date of enactment of the Ocean Revitalization Act, the Administrator shall prepare, and submit to the Congress a New York Bight Apex Restoration Plan. In preparing such Plan, the Administrator shall hold public hearings in the affected States to obtain the views and comments of interested persons.

"(2) Such Plan shall—

"(A) identify and assess the impact of pollutant inputs, such as treated and untreated sewage discharge, industrial outfalls, agricultural and urban runoff, storm sewer overflow, upstream contaminant sources, and dumping that are affecting the water quality and marine resources of the Apex;

"(B) identify those uses in the Apex or on nearby shore areas that are being inhibited because of those imputs;

"(C) determine the fate of the contaminants from those imputs and their effect on the marine environment;

"(D) identify technologies and management practices, and determine the costs necessary to control those imputs;

"(E) identify impediments to the use of such technologies and management practices and to the cleanup of those inputs;

"(F) devise a schedule of economically feasible projects to implement the controls identified under subparagraph (D) and to remove the impediments identified under subparagraph (E); and

"(G) develop recommendations for funding and coordinating the various Federal, State, and local government programs necessary to implement the projects devised under subparagraph (F).

"(3) Not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Ocean Revitalization Act, the Administrator shall submit to the Congress a detailed schedule (and any associated funding requirements) for completing the restoration plan required by this subsection.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, for purposes of preparing the New York Bight Apex Restoration Plan required under this subsection, not to exceed $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.

"(d) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'Apex' means the New York Bight Apex consisting of the ocean waters of the Atlantic Ocean westward of 73° 30' W. longitude and northward of 40°10' N. latitude.

"(2) The term 'Apex site' means that site within the Apex at which the dumping of municipal sludge occurred before October 1, 1983.

"(3) The term 'municipal sludge' means solid, semisolid, or liquid waste generated by a wastewater treatment plant of a sewage authority or other unit of State or local government.".●

By Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself and Mr. HUMPHREY):

S. 2649. A bill to amend the Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) to authorize funds for fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Safe Drinking Water Amendments of 1984. This legislation will modify the existing drinking water program to help insure the citizens of this country have a water supply that will not be harmful to their health. This should be a fundamental function of Government and I believe that the passage of these amendments will diminish the risks to public health from contaminants now found in surface and underground drinking water sources. Before I discuss the key provisions of my legislation, I would like to touch on the current condition of the Nation's drinking water resources as a reflection of the need for change in existing programs.

Congress enacted the Safe Drinking Water Act in 1974 in response to contamination detected in the water supplies of a number of large cities. The Environmental Protection Agency was directed to issue standards for contaminants found in drinking water, which public systems were required to meet. However, the national mandate for clean drinking water under the act has not been fulfilled. Consequently, many Americans are concerned about the quality of their drinking water supplies.

According to random quality surveys performed by EPA and other Government agencies, surface water supplies are contaminated by over 700 synthetic organic chemicals, heavy metals, pesticides, and other pollutants. Some of these exotic names now unfortunately sound familiar to us—vinyl chloride, carbon tetrachloride, trichloroethylene, chloroform, kepone, PCB's, and benzene. The National Academy of Sciences has identified at least 22 of these chemicals as carcinogens and others as mutagenic or otherwise toxic. The vast majority we know little about as their potential toxicity has not been tested.

Further, the extent of our knowledge seems severely limited when we consider that 700 chemicals represent only a small portion of industrial chemicals produced and possibly present in our water supplies. These chemicals, for the most part, remain in our water since treatment is limited almost exclusively to filtration and disinfection which is ineffective in removing such contaminants.

The condition of our Nation's ground water, which supplies drinking water for about 50 percent of the U.S. population, is even more threatening in some cases. Less than 10 years ago, ground water was regarded as a pristine resource, not subject to the contamination prevalent in surface sources because of natural soil filtration processes. Numerous recent studies and surveys have shown, however, that ground water is subject to severe contamination in many localities by human activities on the overlying surface. One can pick up a newspaper in virtually any part of the country and read of another discovery of a well-rendered unfit for drinking.

Due to the different chemical and physical characteristics of underground supplies, the occurrence of contaminants is often at much higher concentrations than in surface waters. Even more ominous is the fact that ground water can remain contaminated for centuries. There is now serious concern at all levels of government about the long-term availability of our ground water resources to meet the Nation's increasing demands for water for drinking and other purposes.

The sources of organic chemicals and other contaminants in water are numerous. Surface supplies are subject to pollution from industrial discharges, urban and agricultural runoff, municipal sewage effluent, chlorination, and other point and nonpoint sources. Ground water is subject to about 30 different sources of chemical contamination. These include hazardous waste landfills, surface impoundments—EPA has recently reported that 150,000 of the estimated 181,000 impoundments are located within 1 mile of ground or surface water supplies—septic tanks and cesspools, pesticide and nitrate infiltration from agricultural activities, and leaking underground storage tanks.

In fact, much of what we do on the land surface has the potential to contaminate ground water. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight, which has held several hearings on the subject of ground water contamination, I have listened to numerous experts, regulators, and other interested parties discuss the problem, its effects, and limited available remedies. It is clear that we cannot solely rely on cleanup which is often technically or economically infeasible. Prevention of contamination is the only viable, long-term remedy for the problem.

However, in view of the degradation that has already occurred, our first concern must be to identify those supplies which are contaminated and proceed to protect the public health in those communities. The amendments I am introducing today will provide the basis for these vital Government actions.

I would like to briefly describe the major provisions of the bill and the need for constructive change in the existing programs. The legislation may be divided into two major parts: First, public water supply standards and other system requirements; and second, programs for the protection of underground sources of drinking water.

The present public water system program is based on mandatory compliance with uniform standards established by the EPA. The foremost problem in the drinking water area is the lack of sufficient standards to insure adequate protection for consumers. There are currently less than 20 drinking water standards which do not include toxic organic chemicals of greatest concern to the American public. Congress intended drinking water standards to be stringent and comprehensive in order to drive the installation of treatment technology and provide the basis for cleanup operations under the Solid Waste Disposal Act and Superfund. Without adequate standards we cannot assure the public that their health is being protected from contaminants in drinking water. It is imperative, therefore, that the impossible delays in the current standard-setting process be eliminated.

Standard setting would be expedited by this bill in several ways. First, deadlines are established for the Agency's promulgation of standards for contaminants which they view to be of foremost public health concern. In addition, the time requirements of two-step rulemaking procedures for the issuance of recommended maximum contaminant goals and maximum contaminant standards would be reduced by the simultaneous proposal and promulgation of these levels. The present obstacle to standard setting posed by the indefinable concept of generally available technology would be eliminated by requiring the setting of standards as close to the maximum contaminant goal as feasible with the best available technology.

Mr. President, in changing from the generally available requirement to a standard-setting process that relies on best available technology, we have had to face another issue. That is whether BAT will include cost considerations. The bill, as drafted, does not take cost into account. It simply says that the standard will be set as close to the goal as possible based on the application of best available technology. Although the bill has not been introduced, as yet, I have already received many comments on this provision. It is clear to me that the bill will have to be modified to take costs into consideration in some form. I am not sure at this point what precise language we will use to accomplish this end and look forward to taking comments on that subject next week in hearings on this legislation.

EPA has the authority to issue a required treatment technique in cases where monitoring for a specific contaminant is not feasible. However, the Agency has failed to issue such a standard even though filtration is the only reliable and effective means for removing many viruses, bacteria, and disease-causing protozoa such as giardia from drinking water supplies. The majority of systems throughout the country now filter their water. Where surface water supplies are not filtered, the risk of contracting viral or bacterial disease are considered significantly higher. This legislation would also require system filtration of supplies withdrawn from surface water sources, unless they can make a showing that their water source is such that they do not need it or they are using an effective alternative technology. Disinfection would be required of all surface and ground water systems.

The public notification requirements under the existing statute are widely agreed to be ineffective—a significant portion of the noncompliance statistics are due to notification violations rather than exceedance of standards. These amendments require EPA to promulgate regulations which would insure that the public be notified of continuous violations or the presence of a potential adverse health threat.

Monitoring is the means by which we discover contamination and check on the effectiveness of existing treatment. The act currently requires periodic monitoring of the water supply to test levels of contaminants for which there are standards. Because standards for many potentially harmful organics do not exist, detection of these contaminants has occurred primarily on an accidental basis.

This legislation requires EPA to develop regulations for monitoring of unregulated contaminants for all public systems. These regulations will include a schedule for monitoring based on system size and the likelihood of contamination. However, all systems must monitor at least once within 5 years of enactment of this bill to insure contamination does not exist.

The provisions of the act pertaining to protection of underground sources of drinking water include a program regulating deep well waste injection. Restrictions are imposed on the placement of waste into, above or below underground sources of drinking water through wells. EPA estimates that about 55 percent of the hazardous waste generated annually is disposed of by this means.

The disposal method most likely to contaminate ground water is placement of waste into or above drinking water sources. This legislation would prohibit such practices.

The most common method of subsurface disposal involves injection below an underground source of drinking water. This means of disposal may become increasingly popular because it is generally less expensive than surface disposal or incineration methods.

EPA regulations are intended to limit the possibility of hazardous waste leakage into overlying aquifers. However, the type of leak monitoring required for these wells is insufficient to detect all potential leaks. Total reliance on the integrity of the injection well is shortsighted gambling with an essential resource. This legislation would require operators of these deep injection wells to monitor for contamination in the susceptible drinking water aquifer.

Mr. President, this legislation strikes a sound balance between the flexibility required to regulate the Nation's 69,000 different water systems and the active direction needed to provide consistently high quality drinking water throughout the country. I ask my fellow Senators to join me in this effort to insure a safe water supply for our citizens. It is imperative if we are to protect the health of all individuals from the ubiquitous threat of chemical and other disease-causing contamination. I welcome working with my colleagues to move forward with this bill so that the Nation's waters continue to be the lifegiving resource upon which we all rely.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

S. 2649

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984."

DECLARATION OF GOALS AND POLICY

SEC. 2. Part A of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"DECLARATION OF GOALS AND POLICY

"SEC. 1400. (a) The objectives of this Act are to assure that all public water systems provide a safe supply of drinking water to the people of this Nation and to protect the ground water resources of this Nation from contamination. In order to achieve these objectives it is hereby declared that, consistent with the provisions of this Act.

"(1) it is the national goal that all public water systems provide drinking water free of any contamination that may have any adverse effect on the health of persons;

"(2) it is the national goal that all underground sources of drinking water be protected from any contamination that may have any adverse effect on the health of persons;

"(3) it is the national policy to provide adequate controls on activities that threaten to contaminate the ground water resources of this nation in order to prevent any such contamination.

"(b) It is the policy of the Congress to recognize, preserve, and protect the responsibilities and rights of states to assure that public water systems provide a safe supply of drinking water and that underground sources of drinking water are protected from contamination."

NATIONAL PRIMARY DRINKING WATER REGULATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1412(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Effective on the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984, each national interim primary drinking water regualtion promulgated under this section before such date of enactment shall be deemed to be a national primary drinking water regulation under subsection (b). No such regulation shall be required to comply with the standards set forth in subsection (b)(2) unless such regulation is amended to establish a different maximum contaminant level after the date of the enactment of such amendments.".

(b) Section 1412(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and inserting:

"(1)(A) Not later than eighteen months after the date of the enactment of the Safe

Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall—

"(i) simultaneously propose maximum contaminant level goals and national primary drinking water regulations, and after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish maximum contaminant level goals and promulgate national primary drinking water regulations for the fourteen contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in 47 Federal Register 9352; or

"(ii) make and publish a determination in the Federal Register that for a particular contaminant listed in 47 Federal Register 9352, a national primary drinking water regulation is not necessary because the levels of such contaminant currently found in public water systems do not represent a threat of a known or anticipated adverse effect on the health of persons.

"(B) Not later than 36 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall—

"(i) simultaneously propose maximum contaminant level goals and national primary drinking water regulations, and after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish maximum contaminant level goals and promulgate national drinking primary water regulations for each of the contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in 48 Federal Register 45502; or

"(ii) make and publish a determination in the Federal Register that for a particular contaminant listed in 48 Federal Register 45502, a national primary drinking water regulation is not necessary because the levels of such contaminant currently found in public water systems do not represent a threat of a known or anticipated adverse effect on the health of persons.

"(C)(i) The Administrator shall publish maximum contaminant level goals and simultaneously promulgate national primary drinking water regulations for each substance (other than a substance referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) for which a national primary drinking water regulation was promulgated) which, in the judgment of the Administrator, may have an adverse effect on the health of persons. On January 1, 1988 and at annual intervals thereafter, the Administrator shall publish a list establishing priorities for the review of substances (other than substances referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B)) which may require regulation under this Act in order to prevent known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons. Such priorities shall be based upon the extent to which such contaminant occurs in public water systems throughout the United States and on the known or anticipated adverse effects of such substance on the health of persons. In establishing such priorities the Administrator's consideration shall include, but not be limited to, substances regulated as toxic water pollutants under section 307 of the Clean Water Act and substances registered as pesticides under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

"(ii) For each contaminant listed on the priority list, the Administrator shall, within three years of listing, simultaneously publish a maximum contaminant level goal and promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation or make and publish a determination in the Federal Register for such contaminant that a national primary drinking water regulation is not necessary because the levels of such contaminant found in public water systems do not represent a threat of a known or anticipated adverse effect on the health of persons.

"(2) Each maximum contaminant level goal established under this subsection shall be set at the level at which, in the Administrator's judgment, no known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons occur and which allows an adequate margin of safety. Each national primary drinking water regulation for a contaminant for which a maximum contaminant level goal is established under this subsection shall specify a maximum level for such contaminant which is as close to the maximum contaminant level goal as is feasible.

"(3)(A) The Administrator is authorized to promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation that requires the use of a treatment technique in lieu of establishing a maximum contaminant level, if the Administrator makes a finding of overriding economic and technological constraints on monitoring. In such case, the Administrator shall identify those treatment techniques which, in the Administrator's judgment, would prevent known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons to the extent feasible. Such regulations shall specify each treatment technique known to the Administrator which meets the requirements of this paragraph, but the Administrator may grant a variance from any such specified treatment technique in accordance with section 1415(a)(3).

"(B) If any contaminant referred to in paragraphs (b)(1) (A) or (B) is listed under this paragraph (and a national primary drinking water regulation requiring the use of treatment techniques is simultaneously promulgated under this paragraph for such contaminant), the listing and promulgation under this paragraph shall be made on the date referred to in paragraphs (b)(1) (A) and (B) for the establishment of primary drinking water regulations.

"(C) The Administrator shall propose and promulgate regulations requiring filtration as a treatment technique for all public water systems supplied by surface raw water sources. The Administrator is authorized to grant variances from this requirement according to the provisions under Sec. 1415(a)(1)(B) and 1415(a)(3).

"(D) The Administrator shall propose and promulgate regulations requiring disinfection as a treatment technique for all public water systems. The Administrator is authorized to grant variances from this requirement according to the provisions under Sec. 1415(a)(1)(B) and 1415(a)(3).

"(4) The Administrator may, after opportunity for public comment, change maximum contaminant level goals, or the list established under paragraph (3), and shall simultaneously with such change, amend the national primary drinking water regulations concerned accordingly.

"(5) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'feasible' means feasible with the use of technology, treatment techniques, or other means, which the Adminstrator determines to be the best available.".

(c) Sections 1412(b) (4), (5) and (6) of the Safe Drinking Water Act are amended by striking the word "Revised" where it appears and redesignating the paragraphs "(6)", "(7)", and "(8)".

(d) Section 1412(e) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The Administrator shall provide the Science Advisory Board, established under the Environmental Research, Development and Demonstration Act of 1978, an opportunity to comment prior to proposal of a maximum contaminant level goal and national primary drinking water regulation.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 4. (a) Section 1414(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting "and such public water system" after the words "notify the State".

(b) Section 1414(a)(1)(B) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(B) If beyond the thirtieth day after the Administrator's notification the State has not commenced appropriate enforcement action, the Administration shall issue an order under subsection (g) requiring the public water system to comply with such regulation or requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b).".

(c) Section 1414(a)(2) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "he may commence a civil action under subsection (b)" and adding the following: "he shall issue an order under subsection (g) requiring the public water system to comply with such regulation or requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)".

(d) Section 1414 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection (g):

"(g)(1) In any case in which the Administrator is authorized to bring a civil action under this section with respect to any regulation, schedule, or other requirement, the Administrator also may issue an order to require compliance with such regulation, schedule, or other requirement.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall not take effect until after notice and opportunity for public hearing and, in the case of a State having primary enforcement responsibility, until after the Administrator has provided the State with an opportunity to confer with the Administrator regarding the proposed order. A copy of any order proposed to be issued under this subsection shall be sent to the appropriate State agency of the State involved if the State has primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems in that State. Any order issued under this subsection shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation. In any case in which an order under this subsection is issued to a corporation, a copy of such order shall be issued to appropriate corporate officers.

"(3)(A) Any person who violates, or fails or refuses to comply with an order under paragraph (2) shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day of violation.

"(B) In the case of any civil penalty under this paragraph which does not exceed a total of $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by the Administrator after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5 of the United States Code. The Administrator shall have the discretion to compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty assessed under this subsection against any person.

"(C) In the case of any civil penalty which exceeds $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by a civil action brought by the Administrator in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code).

"(D) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Administrator, the Attorney General shall recover the amount for which such person is liable in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review."

(e) Section 1414 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "Failure by State to Assure" from the title.

PUBLIC NOTIFICATION

SEC. 5. (a) Section 1414(c) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking everything after the sentence "The Administrator shall by regulation prescribe the form, manner, and frequency for giving notice under this subsection" to the sentence beginning "The Administrator may also require" and adding the following:

"Within 12 months after the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall amend such regulations to provide for different types and frequencies of notice based on the differences between violations which are intermittent or infrequent and violations which are continuous or frequent. Such regulations shall also take into account the seriousness of any potential adverse health effects which may be involved. Notice for violations designated by the Administrator as continuous or posing a serious potential adverse health effect shall be given no less frequently than every three months and in no case shall notices be given less frequently than annually. Until such amendments are promulgated, the regulations in effect on the date of the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984 shall remain in effect.".

VARIANCES

SEC. 6. (a) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "despite" and adding the following: ". A variance may only be issued to a system after the system's".

(b) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended striking the word "generally" before the word "available" and by adding after "(taking costs into consideration)." the following: "The Administrator shall propose and promulgate his finding of the best available technology, treatment techniques or other means available for each contaminant at the time he proposes and promulgates a maximum contaminant level for each such contaminant. The Administrator's finding of best available technology, treatment techniques or other means may vary depending on the number of persons served by the system or for other physical conditions related to engineering feasibility and costs of compliance with maximum contaminant levels as considered appropriate by the Administrator.".

(c) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "within one year of the date" and adding "at the time".

(d) Section 1415(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding after the words "water system of such" the word "additional".

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 1416(b)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "within one year of the date" and adding "at the time".

(b) Section 1416(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "interim" and striking the words "not later than January 1, 1984" and adding "not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1984.".

(c) Section 1416(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "revised" and the words "not later than seven years after the date such requirement takes effect" and adding "other than a regulation referred to in section 1412(a), 12 months after the date of the issuance of the exemption."

(d) Section 1416 (a)(2)(B) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) The final date for compliance provided in any schedule in the case of any exemption may be extended by the State (in the case of a State which has primary enforcement responsibility) or by the Administrator (in any other case) for a period not to exceed 3 years after the date of the issuance of the exemption if the public water system establishes that—

"(i) the system cannot meet the standard without capital improvements which cannot be completed within the period of such exemption;

"(ii) the system is taking all practicable steps to meet the standard;

"(iii) in the case of a system which needs financial assistance for the necessary improvements, the system has entered into an agreement to obtain such financial assistance; or

"(iv) the system has entered into an enforceable agreement to become a part of a regional public water system.

In the case of a system which does not serve more than 500 service connections and which needs financial assistance for the necessary improvements, an exemption granted under subsection (b)(2)(A) (i) or (ii) may be renewed for one or more additional 2-year periods if the system establishes that it continues to meet the requirements of clause (ii) of this subparagraph.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 8. (a) Section 1423(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking out all after the first sentence and substituting the following:

"If beyond the thirtieth day after the Administrator's notification the State has not commenced appropriate enforcement action, the Administrator shall issue an order under subsection (d) requiring the person to comply with such requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1).".

(b) Section 1414(a)(2) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "he may commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1)" and substituting the following:

"he shall issue an order under subsection (d) requiring the person to comply with such requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1).".

(c) Section 1423(b)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and substituting the following:

"Civil actions referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2), subsection (a) shall be brought in the appropriate United States district court and such court shall have jurisdiction to require compliance with any requirement of an applicable underground injection program.".

(d) Section 1423(d)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking in the last sentence "$5,000" and substituting "$25,000" and by striking "60" and substituting "30."

(e) Section 1423 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(d)(1) In any case in which the Administrator is authorized to bring a civil action under this section with respect to any requirement of an applicable underground injection control program, the Administrator may also issue an order to require compliance with such requirement.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall not take effect until after notice and opportunity for public hearing and, in the case of a State having primary enforcement responsibility for underground water sources (within the meaning of section 1422(b)(3) or 1425(c)) until after the Administrator has provided the State with an opportunity to confer with the Administrator regarding the proposed order. A copy of any order proposed to be issued under this subsection shall be sent to the appropriate State agency involved if the State has primary enforcement responsibility. Any other issued under this subsection shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation. In any case in which an order under this subsection is issued to a corporation, a copy of such order shall be issued to appropriate corporate officers.

"(3)(A) Any person who violates, or fails or refuses to comply with an order under paragraph (2) shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day of violation.

"(B) In the case of any civil penalty under this paragraph which does not exceed $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by the Administrator after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of of title 5 of the United States Code. The Administrator shall have the discretion to compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty assessed under this subsection against any person.

"(C) In the case of any civil penalty which exceeds $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by a civil action brought by the Administrator in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code).

"(D) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Administrator, the Attorney General shall recover the amount for which such person is liable in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.".

(f) Section 1423 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "Failure of State to Assure" from the title.

RESTRICTIONS ON UNDERGROUND INJECTION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE AND REGULATION OF STATE PROGRAMS.

SEC. 9. (a) Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new sections:

"RESTRICTIONS ON HAZARDOUS WASTE INJECTION

"SEC. 1426. No hazardous waste may be disposed of by underground injection above or into a formation which contains (within one quarter mile of the injection well bore) a drinking water source. Injection of contaminated water into the acquifer from which it was withdrawn may be allowed if the Administrator determines, pursuant to procedures approved under this Act or the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act or the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, that such injection is an appropriate and environmentally acceptable aspect of a clean-up, removal or remedial action for the contaminated acquifer. The prohibition established under this subsection shall take effect six months after the enactment of this section except in the case of any State in which identical prohibitions are in effect before such date. The term "hazardous waste" used in this section means any hazardous waste, as defined in the Solid Waste Disposal Act, which is listed or identified under section 3001 of that Act. The prohibition established by this subsection shall be treated for purposes of the Act as a prohibition established pursuant to an applicable underground injection program.

"REGULATION OF STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1427. (a) No later than 18 months after enactment, the Administrator shall revise regulations issued under this Act to require the following:

"(1) restoration of ground water quality after the termination of Class III operations such that underground drinking water sources in the prescribed location will exceed national primary drinking water regulation or any other unregulated contamination which the Administration determines may pose adverse health effects to persons.

"(2) monitoring of underground drinking water sources down gradient from a Class I injection well.

"(b) Section 146.4(c) of title 40 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect as of the date of enactment, shall not apply after such date.

"(c) The Administrator, in cooperation with the State, shall compile and, not later than 3 months after the date of enactment of these amendments, submit to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, an inventory of all wells in the United States which inject hazardous wastes. The inventory shall include the following information:

"(1) the location and depth of each well;

"(2) engineering and construction details of each, including the thickness and composition of its casing, the width and content of the annulus, and pump pressure and capacity;

"(3) the hydrogeological characteristics of the overlying and underlying strata, as well as that into which the waste is injected;

"(4) the location and size of all drinking water aquifers penetrated by the well, or within a one-mile radius of the well or within two hundred feet below the well injection point;

"(5) the location, capacity, and population served by each well providing drinking or irrigation water which is within a five-mile radius of the injection well;

"(6) the nature and volume of the waste injected during the one-year period immediately preceding the date of the report;

"(7) the dates and nature of the inspections of the injection well conducted by independent third parties or agents of State, Federal or local governments;

"(8) the name and address of all owners and operators of the well and any disposal facility associated with it; and

"(9) such other information as the Administrator may, in his discretion, deem necessary to define the scope and nature of hazardous waste disposal in the United States through underground injection.

"(b) In fulfilling the requirements of subsection (a)(3)-(5), the Administrator need only submit such information as can be obtained from currently existing State records and from site visits to at least twenty facilities containing wells which inject hazardous waste.

"(c) The States shall make available to the Administrator such information as he deems necessary to accomplish the objections of this section.".

TAMPERING WITH PUBLIC WATER SYSTEMS

SEC. 10. Part D is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"TAMPERING WITH PUBLIC WATER SYSTEMS

"SEC. 1432. (a) Any person who tampers with a public water system shall be fined not more than $50,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) Any person who attempts to tamper, or makes a threat to tamper, with a public drinking water system shall be fined not more than $20,000, or imprisoned for not more than 3 years, of both.

"(c) The Administrator may bring a civil action in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code) against any person who tampers, attempts to tamper, or makes a threat to tamper with a public water system. The court may impose on such person a civil penalty of not more than $50,000 for such tampering or not more than $20,000 for such attempt or threat.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'tamper' means—

"(1) to introduce a contaminant into a public water system with the intention of harming persons; or

"(2) to otherwise interfere with the operation of a public water system with the intention of harming persons.".

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 11. (a) Section 1442 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(g) The Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to small public water systems to enable such systems to achieve and maintain compliance with national drinking water regulations. Such assistance may include 'circuit-rider' programs, training, and preliminary engineering studies. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection, $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984 through 1989.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 12. (a) Section 1442(f) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting the following at the end thereof: "There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsection (a)(2)(B), $9,600,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $9,600,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1989. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section (other than subsection (g), subsection (a)(2)(B), and provisions relating to research), $42,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $42,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(b) Section 1443(a)(7) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "For the purposes of making grants under paragraph (1) there are authorized to be appropriated $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(c) Section 1443(b)(5) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "For the purpose of making grants under paragraph (1) there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(d) Section 1441(f) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking out "in effect" and all that follows and substituting "in effect for more than one year.".

MONITORING FOR UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS

SEC. 13. (a) Section 1445(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In requiring a public water system to monitor under this subsection, the Administrator may take into consideration the system size and the contaminants likely to be found in the system's drinking water.".

(b) Section 1445(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding "(1)" after "(a)" and adding the following at the end thereof:

"(a)(2) Not later than 18 months from the date of enactment, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations for every public water system to conduct a monitoring program for unregulated contaminants. The Administrator's regulations shall vary the frequency and schedule of monitoring requirements for systems based on the number of persons served by the system and the contaminants likely to be found but each system must be required to monitor surface sources and representative supply wells at least once and such monitoring must be conducted within five years of the effective date of the Administrator's regulations. The Administrator's regulations shall list unregulated contaminants for which systems may be required to monitor, but the primary enforcement authority in each state shall be given the flexibility to add or delete contaminants, for individual systems, based on an approved assessment of what contaminants may be found in the system. Notification of the availability of the results of such monitoring programs shall be given to the persons served by the system and the Administrator. The Administrator may waive this monitoring requirement for a system which has conducted a monitoring program after January 1, 1983, if the Administrator determines the program to have been consistent with the regulations promulgated under this section.

"(a)(3) The Administrator shall reimburse the monitoring costs incurred under the regulation by systems supplying less than 150 service connections.".●

S.J. Res. 288. Joint resolution to designate the week of September 16 through September 22, 1984, as "Emergency Medicine Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EMERGENCY MEDICINE WEEK

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, today, with 28 of my Senate colleagues, I am introducing a joint resolution to designate the week of September 16, 1984, as "Emergency Medicine Week." A companion measure has been introduced by Representative VANDERGRIFF in the House of Representatives.

In the late sixties, a lack of emphasis on emergency medicine led the National Academy of Sciences to report that accidental injuries were the Nation's most important environmental health problem. In response, the American College of Emergency Physicians was founded to increase the emphasis on the specialty of emergency medicine.

Countless lives have been saved in the intervening years due to the efforts of this dedicated group of concerned professionals who established 63 physician residency programs that offer specialized training in emergency medicine. The American College of Emergency Physicians also played a key role in contributing to vast improvements in the training of emergency nurses and prehospital providers.

Mr. President, this resolution recognizes the advances in the training of a special group of health care professionals who have been responsible for dramatically improved care for those of us who fall victim to some form of accidental injury.

Adoption of this resolution will increase public awareness of the importance of life-saving specialists and will provide much needed support for these dedicated professionals.

I urge my colleagues to support swift passage of this measure.●

S.J. Res. 289. A joint resolution to designate June 18, 1984, as "National Child Passenger Safety Awareness Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CHILD PASSENGER SAFETY AWARENESS DAY

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution that will authorize June 18, 1984, as "National Child Passenger Safety Awareness Day." Motor vehicle crashes are the No. 1 killer and crippler of children, and the primary traumatic cause of spinal cord injuries, epilepsy, and mental retardation in children between the ages of 6 months and 5 years in the United States. Between 1978 and 1982 nearly 3,400 child passengers under 5 years of age were killed in traffic accidents, while another 250,000 were severely injured. In other words, an average of 629 children are killed and 50,000 are injured annually. Breaking these figures down even further will show that on the average, 56 children are killed and 4,166 are injured monthly. Dividing these disturbingly high numbers by days, minutes, and finally seconds would only illustrate that too many children are unfortunately seriously maimed, injured, or fatally wounded in motor vehicle crashes in the United States.

It is staggering to note that more infants and small children are killed or crippled while riding as passengers in motor vehicles than the total affected by pertussis. tetanus, diptheria, measles, mumps, rubella, and polio, the seven childhood diseases. These injuries do not necessarily occur only when the vehicle is involved in a crash. Death and injury can result from common driving maneuvers, such as sudden stops, turns, swerves, or falling from a moving vehicle. Ejection of an unrestrained child from a vehicle increases the danger of fatal or serious injury from striking the pavement, or other objects, in addition to the danger of injuries resulting from contact with the vehicle interior before and after ejection.

Fortunately, during the past 10 to 15 years, the injury prevention potential of child safety seats provides infants and small children with much more protection than a standard safety belt. Safety seats are manufactured to fit the child while the safety belts are generally more effective for larger children or adults. According to the Surgeon General of the United States, child safety seats, used properly, reduce injuries and deaths 60 to 90 percent.

Tragically, misuse of child safety seats appears to be a significant and widespread problem. The National Transportation safety board estimates that over 70 percent of child restraint devices are used incorrectly. When tests demonstrate that child restraint systems could reduce child motor vehicle crash fatalities by as much as 90 percent and injuries by 70 percent, it seems to me that we have great reason for educating the American public as to the proper manner for installing and utilizing child safety seats.

A popular myth shared by many adults in that holding a child in their arms is the safest way for a child to travel. Surveys show that adults holding children in their arms often increased the severity of the injury of the children instead of protecting them from harm. For example, if a 100-pound adult holding a child is involved in a 30-mile-per-hour crash, that adult will crush the child with the force of 3,000 pounds. Another myth is that accidents only occur on lengthy trips in dangerous conditions. Statistics show that most collisions occur within 25 miles of home, during good weather and on dry pavement. Therefore, short family trips to the grocery store, nursery school, or trips to visit grandparents are potentially the most dangerous.

To date 42 States and the District of Columbia have passed legislation mandating the use of child safety restraint systems. My own State of Florida passed such a law in July 1983. Organizations are working to raise public awareness. For example, LifeSavers of Washington, DC, will hold its National Conference on Alcohol Countermeasures and Occupant Protection May 8 to 10 in Orlando. Along with good legislation and the efforts of such organizations, more is needed to make the public aware of the need for and the proper use of these child passenger safety systems. I believe a national day of awareness for child safety seats could have a nationwide impact on preventing unnecessary deaths and injuries to infants and small children involved in traffic accidents.

This need for better public awareness of the proper use of child safety seats was discussed during the Senate's childrens caucus forum on childhood injury prevention held at the D.C. Children's Hospital on July 26, 1983. The panel of health care professionals stressed that the word accident is a misnomer because many so-called accidents can be prevented through legislation such as seatbelt laws and through public education campaigns. Following the caucus meeting Secretaries Dole and Heckler pledged the assistance of their respective departments in a national campaign to curb the childhood accident epidemic. This initiative is but one of the activities and policies being taken by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Transportation to prevent childhood deaths and injuries.

This initiative has the full support of the National Transportation Safety Board and the following organizations:

S.J. Res. 290. Joint resolution designating the month of November 1984 as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE MONTH

● Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, today, 36 of my colleagues and I are introducing a joint resolution declaring the sense of the Congress to be that the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the month of November 1984 as National Alzheimer's Disease Month.

We are all fairly familiar with most of the major diseases from which many older people suffer and die—heart disease, cancer, and stroke. But it is only recently that Americans have even heard the name of the fourth major killer—senile dementia of the Alzheimer's type.

Alzheimer's disease is a dementing disorder that causes loss of memory, followed by confusion, disorientation, loss of intellect, and eventual physical deterioration in an estimated 1.2 million Americans over the age of 65. Another 600,000 persons in their forties and fifties are also affected, and it is estimated that the disease is responsible for $26 billion in lost productivity each year.

The quantifiable dollar impact of what has been called the silent epidemic, as enormous as it is, is but a fraction of the true cost associated with this disease. Added to the cost in lost productivity is an estimated $20 billion in annual health care costs associated with Alzheimer's disease. The emotional and physical stress on the families of Alzheimer's victims and the loss of human dignity are incalculable costs to our society as a whole.

At the present time, the diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease is unequivocal only postmortem. Therapy is almost nonexistent. Yet, these grim facts do not mean that we must regard Alzheimer's disease as perpetually inevitable and untreatable. The special challenge of this disease is to coordinate more effectively the resources we already have as well as to build upon what knowledge we are beginning to gain.

Congress has clearly responded to the need for more research into the cause of Alzheimer's disease and the search for a cure. In 1984, Congress increased funding toward research by $15 million over the preceding year for a total of $40 million. It is my expectation that these research efforts through the National Institutes of Health and the National Institute of Mental Health will continue to be strengthened, but we cannot rely solely on our hope for a cure or a treatment for the disease.

We must alter the practice of medicine to sharpen its awareness of the disease.

We must alter the attitudes of our health care institutions which have not traditionally dealt with senility, including Alzheimer's disease.

We must educate our health professionals through the medical, nursing, and allied health schools to teach more effectively geriatric medicine and the specific diseases of older people.

We must educate the public at large that old age is not synonymous with senility.

Finally, we must educate the public of what Alzheimer's disease is and what problems are associated with caring for Alzheimer's victims.

Already the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, in its deliberations on the extension of the Older Americans Act, has included special emphasis on services to families of Alzheimer's disease victims who are too often struggling alone to cope with the day-to-day vigil over the mental and physical deterioration of a loved one.

This joint resolution is designed to further heighten the awareness of the general public of what Alzheimer's disease is and the nature of the problems associated with caring for Alzheimer's victims. This joint resolution alone will not ease the burden on Alzheimer's victims and their families, but it can help assure a high priority by government at all levels, by business, and by individuals to find answers to the problem through research, development of an integrated care continuum for Alzheimer's patients, and an integrated support system for families providing care for Alzheimer's patients.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 290

Whereas more than two million Americans are affected by Alzheimer's disease, which is a surprisingly common disorder that destroys certain vital cells of the brain;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is the fourth leading cause of death among older Americans;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is responsible for 50 per centum of all nursing home admissions, at an annual cost of more than $20,000,000,000;

Whereas in one-third of all American families one parent will succumb to this disease;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is not a normal consequence of aging; and

Whereas an increase in the national awareness of the problem of Alzheimer's disease may stimulate the interest and concern of the American people, which may lead, in turn, to increased research and eventually to the discovery of a cure for Alzheimer's disease: now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the month of November 1984 is designated as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this joint resolution to designate the month of November as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month."

Though we have often euphemistically referred to the time when we grow old as the "Golden Years", for many it is filled with fear and pain. In recent years we have become familiar with the term Alzheimer's disease. We refer to it clinically as a disease that affects one's brain, and eventually one's ability to control memory and activity. For those afflicted with Alzheimer's disease, and for their loved ones, it is a slow and painful journey.

Alzheimer's disease is now considered the fourth or fifth leading cause of death. Though it has been diagnosed in middle-aged people, the slow progress of the disease usually leads to the severest impairment among the elderly. Approximately 20 percent of all individuals 80 years of age or more will suffer from Alzheimer's disease. In particular, 12 to 15 percent of all nursing home residents are believed to have Alzheimer's disease, accounting for over half of all senility cases in nursing homes.

Perhaps the greatest horror is the fact that no one knows what causes Alzheimer's disease and it is a monster without a cure. Only after death can the proper identification be made. Alzheimer's disease, however, can be managed. With the help of drugs in some cases, and patient and loving caregivers, Alzheimer's disease victims can continue to participate in everyday activities. Only in the final stages of the disease will total care be required.

Last year, in the fiscal 1984 Labor-HHS-Education appropriation bill, Congress earmarked $3.5 million to establish special Alzheimer's disease centers. In addition, some $25 million will be spent on the continued search for the causes and possible cures of the disease. But we must continue to familiarize our professionals with the characteristics of the disease, and we must continue to educate the community so they are aware of the trauma and can better support the families of those who suffer from Alzheimer's disease.

The Senate joint resolution designating November as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month" is one way to focus public attention on the issues surrounding Alzheimer's disease. We need to insure that medical professionals make every effort to properly diagnose Alzheimer's disease. Services must be made available to assist families in their care for victims. And assistance must be provided to the caregivers themselves who must cope with both the physical and emotional demands of the disease. I am pleased that we included an amendment in this year's Older Americans Act reauthorization bill which provides priority training under title IV to persons engaged in the provision of supportive services to victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families.

I encourage my colleagues to support this joint resolution as an acknowledgement of all the individuals who have dedicated themselves to solving the mystery of Alzheimer's disease, as well as the many people who have devoted their time to the care of Alzheimer's disease victims. We must strengthen our effort to combat Alzheimer's disease by determining the cause and finding a cure for this devastating disease.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor a joint resolution to designate the month of November 1984, as National Alzheimer's Disease Month. Last year, I cosponsored a similar joint resolution because I felt this Nation was still unaware of the tragic effects of this degenerative disease. That is rapidly changing, however.

Government-sponsored research for Alzheimer's disease was increased by 75 percent this fiscal year. The Older Americans Act will soon include respite services for Alzheimer's disease sufferers and their families. In New York City, an Alzheimer's disease resource center was recently opened. These are all signs that our Nation is finally beginning to become aware of the seriousness of this disease. There is still a long way to go, however. We must keeps the momentum going.

Alzheimer's disease, sometimes called the disease of the 1980's, mostly afflicts the elderly. The sudden prominence of this disease reflects the growing number of elderly citizens in our society. This neurological disorder, which now affects over 5 percent of those over 65 years of age, is estimated to cause 120,000 deaths a year. It is also estimated to cost this Nation $26 billion annually and it accounts for a large portion of nursing home care.

Alzheimer's is not a natural aging process. It can, and should, be cured. The outrageous cost of this disease, both to the sufferers and their families, proves that Government research efforts are a sound investment.

There have been some encouraging results from this research. Years of research, however, lay ahead. In the meantime, help must be given to the sufferers and their families. The immediate cause for worry about an afflicted Alzheimer's disease patient is personal safety. Simple absent-mindedness causes many accidents, but senile dementia can be fatal. In the disease's later stages, precautions must be taken to protect the sufferer from his or her own unwitting actions. The cost of this care is estimated to be $17,000 per year, per patient. Besides being a monumental emotional burden, Alzheimer's disease is also a severe financial burden.

The designation of November 1984 as National Alzheimer's Disease Month is an important part of our effort to promote awareness of this deadly issue. I urge my colleagues to join me as cosponsors.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S.J. Res. 291. Joint resolution to consent to an amendment enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I have introduced a measure to give the necessary consent of Congress to amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act which have been recommended and adopted by the State of Hawaii. These amendments reduce the blood quantum requirement for a Hawaiian homestead lessee's spouse or children to assume his unexpired homestead interest upon his death from 50 to 25 percent Hawaiian. They also limit the Hawaiian Homes Commission's authority to designate a successor if a lessee dies without having designated a successor.

In 1920, by the passage of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, the U.S. Congress dedicated approximately 200,000 acres of Government lands to a homesteading program for persons of at least 50-percent Hawaiian ancestry. Under this program, the Hawaiian Homes Commission was authorized to:

First, lease residential, agricultural, or pastoral lots to eligible Hawaiians for 99-year periods at a rental of $1 per year;

Second, offer financial assistance to individual homesteaders through low-interest loans for agricultural development and home construction; and

Third, provide agricultural and other experts to aid the homesteaders in developing their farms and ranches. Such leases have been, and continue to be, made.

When Hawaii became a State in 1959, Congress required, as a condition of admission, that the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act become a provision of the Hawaii State Constitution. In addition, title to Hawaiian Homes lands, and responsibilities for the administering of the act were transferred to the State. However, the amendment of certain provisions of the act remained subject to the approval of the U.S. Government. Included among these provisions are those sections relating to the qualifications of lessees and their successors. The measure I am introducing today is thus necessary to ratify the State of Hawaii's decision to reduce the blood quantum requirement for a spouse or child to succeed an original lessee's homestead interest.

The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act presently requires that successors to unexpired terms of Hawaiian home lands leases must be of at least 50-percent Hawaiian ancestry. In many instances, however, original homesteaders have spouses who are nonnative Hawaiians so that neither the homesteader's spouse nor offspring have the minimum blood requirement to qualify as successors. The death of a lessee thus often results in the eviction of his wife and children.

The lawmakers of the State of Hawaii are convinced that this situation threatens family stability and security and frustrates the intent of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act.

They have concluded that the native Hawaiian lessees should be provided with assurances that his closest family may succeed him in order to encourage stability and the improvement of property as well as to avoid inhumane results. It is to be emphasized, however, that the proposed relaxing of the blood requirement applies only to the surviving spouse and children so that all other successors to homestead leases will have to meet the existing 50-percent criteria.

Another concern reflected in the measure is that if a lessee dies without having designated a successor, the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act currently requires that the department select a successor from among the lessee's spouse, children, widow or widowers of children, grandchildren, brothers, and sisters, widows or widowers of brothers and sisters, or nieces and nephews. Should the Department be successful in contacting all qualified relatives, the Hawaiian Homes Commission must, somehow, select the successor. This has not been an easy task because of the problems it has caused within family units. The language hereby submitted for approval therefore limits selection by the Commission of a qualified successor to a spouse, or if none, then the children. If there are neither spouse nor children, the lease will be canceled. This places the onus on the lessee to designate a successor.

Mr. President, this measure represents the first time that the State of Hawaii has sought the consent of Congress for amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. These amendments, passed as act 272 of the 1982 Hawaii State Legislature, have been carefully debated and reviewed on the State level and I believe represents a reasonable means of forwarding the purposes of the original act. A Federal-State Task Force on the Hawaiian Homes Commission, composed of representatives of the Hawaiian community and Federal Department of Interior, after careful examination of the matter, have also recommended Federal consent to these amendments. I therefore urge my colleagues to act favorably on this measure and ask unanimous consent that the full text of the measure be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 291

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, as required by section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union", approved March 18, 1959 (73 Stat. 4), the United States hereby consents to the amendment enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii and approved by the Governor of such State on June 18, 1982, to section 209 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 112—RELATING TO DEFENSE SPENDING COMMITMENTS BY NATO MEMBER NATIONS

Mr. PROXMIRE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 112

Whereas the countries of Belgium, the United Kingdom, Canada, Denmark, France, West Germany, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, and Turkey (North Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations), and the country of Japan are recognized as allies of the United States and have entered into formal treaties and security agreements with the United States for the common defense;

Whereas the importance of increased military strength and unity are vital for the defense of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations and Japan as well as for the maintenance of international peace and stability in spite of economic difficulties;

Whereas Soviet aggression in Afghanistan and in Central America and the continuing threat of intervention in Poland by the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies underscores the importance of military preparedness on the part of all North Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations and Japan;

Whereas the North Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations voluntarily renewed their mutual commitment to increased strength and unity at the London summit in 1977 and specifically pledged themselves to undertake a 3 per centum annual real increase in defense outlays over the subsequent five years;

Whereas the United States has provided Japan with a defense umbrella in the post-World War II era, thereby relieving Japan of much of its national defense burden, and has contributed enormously to the economic recovery of Japan since World War II;

Whereas Japan has emerged as the world's third greatest economic power in the aftermath of World War II with a gross national product in 1982 of $1,060,000,000,000;

Whereas the United States spend nearly eight times more per person on defense than Japan did in 1982;

Whereas Japan in 1981 entered into a commitment to defend the air and sea lanes of communication out to one thousand miles from its home islands as part of its responsibilities under the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security between our two countries;

Whereas in 1983 Japanese defense spending decreased by 7.0 per centum from 1980;

Whereas Belgium, Denmark, West Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, and Greece did not achieve a 3 per centum real increase in defense spending in 1982;

Whereas these countries would have contributed $1,612,800,000 more to the common defense if they had achieved a 3 per centum real increase in defense spending in 1982;

Whereas budget austerity in the United States is causing substantial financial hardship for many Americans; and

Whereas alliance initiatives are frequently driven by the largest and the most capable military partner: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should call on the pertinent member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organizations to meet or exceed their pledges for at least a 3 per centum real increase in defense spending in 1983 and in 1984 and call upon Japan to further increase defense spending in 1983 and in 1984 in furtherance of increased unity, equitable sharing of our common defense burden, and international stability.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

FEDERAL BOAT SAFETY ACT AMENDMENTS

BRADLEY AMENDMENT NO. 3048

Mr. BRADLEY proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3027 proposed by Mr. BAKER (and others) to the bill (H.R. 2163) to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted, add the following:

PART B PREMIUM

SEC. . (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 901 of this Act, the amendments made by such section 901 shall not become effective, and the provisions of the Social Security Act shall remain as though such section 901 had not been enacted.

(b) Section 1839(e) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(e)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the monthly premium for each individual enrolled under this part for each month after December 1983 and prior to January 1987 shall be an amount equal to 50 percent of the monthly actuarial rate for enrollees age 65 and over, as determined under subsection (a)(1) and applicable to such month.

"(2) Any increases in premium amounts taking effect prior to January 1987 by reason of paragraph (1) shall be taken into account for purposes of determining increases thereafter under subsection (a)(3).".

(c) Section 1839 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) If no cost-of-living increase becomes effective under section 215(i) in December of any year, the monthly premium of each individual enrolled under this part for the succeeding year shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection (b)) be the same as the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) of the individual for such December.

"(2) If paragraph (1) does not apply to the monthly premiums for a year, if an individual is entitled to monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for November and for December in that preceding year, and if the monthly premium for that December and for the following January is deducted from those benefits under section 1840(a)(1), the monthly premium for that individual for that January and for each of the succeeding 11 months for which he is entitled to benefits under section 202 or 223 shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection (b)) be the greater of—

"(A) the monthly premium amount determined under subsection (a)(2) or (e) for that January reduced by the amount (if any) necessary to make the monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for that January after the deduction of the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that January at least equal to the monthly benefits under section 202 or 223 for the preceding November after the deduction of the premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that individual for that November, or

"(B) the monthly premium (disregarding subsection (b)) for that individual for that December.

For purposes of this subsection, retroactive adjustments or payments and deductions on account of work shall not be taken into account in determining the monthly benefits to which an individual is entitled under section 202 or 223.".

PHYSICIAN FEES

SEC. . (a) Section 1842(b) of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 904 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(13)(A) During the 24-month period beginning July 1, 1984, the Secretary shall monitor physicians in order to determine—

"(i) the proportion of physicians, by specialty and geographic area of practice, whose claims under this part are not pursuant to an assignment under paragraph (3)(ii), grouped as follows: fewer than 25 percent, 25 percent to 49 percent, 50 percent to 74 percent, 75 percent to 89 percent, 90 percent to 99 percent, and 100 percent, of the claims submitted by such physicians, or for such classifications of physicians as the Secretary may deem to be more informative;

"(ii) the average difference between the actual charges and the reasonable charges recognized for purposes of this part, for each classification of physicians referred to in clause (i); and

"(iii) any changes in the per capita volume and mix of services provided to beneficiaries under this part by each classification of physician referred to in clause (i).

"(B) Information on changes in the elements monitored pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be provided to Congress every sixth month beginning with January 1985 and ending with January 1987.".

(b)(1) The report which the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to Congress on January 1, 1987, shall include recommendations in sufficient detail to serve as the basis for legislative action which Congress can take to assure that any burden of effectively constraining the growth of costs in the medicare part B program, which Congress intends to be borne by providers and physicians, is not transferred (in whole or in part) so as to become an additional burden on part B beneficiaries in the form of increased out-of-pocket costs, reduced services, or reduced access to needed physician care.

(2) Such report shall also include analyses of other methods of payment which might be utilized under part B to constrain the costs of the part B program, including prospective payment systems such as fee schedules (both global and per service), capitation payments, case management, and the use of preferred provider organizations.

(c) In addition to any funds otherwise provided for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 for payments to carriers under agreements entered into under section 1842 of the Social Security Act, there are transferred from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Fund such additional amounts for payments to such carriers under such agreements as may be necessary to conduct monitoring of physicians under section 1842(b)(13) of the Social Security Act.

PART B DEDUCTIBLE

SEC. . Notwithstanding the provisions of section 916 of this Act, the amendments made by such section 916 shall not become effective, and the provisions of the Social Security Act shall remain as though such section 916 had not been enacted.

In section , relating to limitation of the aggregate total budget authority for national defense and non-defense discretionary activities for the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, add at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(f)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), or any other provision of this Act or of any of the amendments made by this Act, it shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or the House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for function 050, National Defense, to exceed $293,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $327,700,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $365,800,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (b), or any other provision of this Act or of any of the amendments made by this Act, it shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or the House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for nondefense discretionary activities to exceed $141,400,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $148,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $155,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

GORTON (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3049

Mr. GORTON (for himself, Mr. EVANS, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. BOREN, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. DANFORTH) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3027 proposed by Mr. BAKER (and others) to the bill H.R. 2163, supra, as follows:

Beginning on page 19, line 1, strike all through the end of the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. . (a) It shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for function 050, National Defense, to exceed $297,100,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $328,600,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $366,800,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

(b) It shall not be in order to consider any measure making appropriations in the Senate or House of Representatives, if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for non-defense discretionary activities to exceed $140,500,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $144,200,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $151,400,000,000 in fiscal year 1987.

(c) For the purposes of this section, budget authority shall be determined on the basis applicable for fiscal year 1984.

(d) The provisions of subsection (a) or (b) of this section may be waived or suspended in the Senate by a majority vote of the members voting, a quorum being present, or by unanimous consent of the Senate.

(e) It is the sense of Congress that the unprecedented magnitude and persistence of current and projected Federal budget deficits must be addressed in a comprehensive strategy to moderate increases in defense spending while continuing the effective constraints on non-defense discretionary programs, assure the success of such a initiative, the foregoing procedural restraints, in addition to the total aggregate spending limitations pursuant to the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are necessary on budget authority both for defense and for non-defense discretionary programs for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.

COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT LIMITATIONS

SEC. . (a) Paragraph (3) of section (1)(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of paragraph (2), the cost-of-living adjustment for any calendar year is—

"(A) for calendar years 1985 through 1987 the percentage (if any) by which—

"(i) the CPI for the preceding calendar year, reduced by three percentage points, exceeds

"(ii) the CPI for the calendar year 1983, and

"(B) for calendar years after 1987, the percentage (if any) by which—

"(i) the CPI for the preceding calendar year, exceeds

"(ii) the CPI for the calendar year 1983."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective as of the date of enactment.

SEC. . (a)(1) Any increase in benefits which would occur by law under any of the provisions of law described in subsection (b) during the period beginning on October 1, 1984, and ending on September 30, 1987, on the basis of any increase in the Consumer Price Index, shall be limited as though the relevant increase in the Consumer Price Index was equal to the actual increase in such index minus three percentage points.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply only to the increases in benefit amounts, and shall not be applied in determining whether a threshold CPI increase has been met or in determining increases in amounts under other provisions of law which operate by reference to increases in such benefit amounts.

(3) Any increase in benefit amounts which would have occurred but for the provisions of paragraph (1) shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining benefit increases occurring after September 30, 1987.

(b) For purposes of this section the applicable provisions of law are the cost-of-living adjustments for—

(1) old age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits under section 215(i) of the Social Security Act (but the limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply to supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of such Act);

(2) armed services retirement and retainer pay under section 1401a of title 10, United States Code, retired pay and retainer pay of members and former members of the Coast Guard, and retired pay of commissioned officers of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration or the Public Health Service;

(3) civil service retirement benefits under section 8340 of title 5, United States Code, foreign service retirement benefits under section 826 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, and Central Intelligence Agency retirement benefits under part J of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for certain employees;

(4) Federal workers' compensation under section 8146a of title 5, United States Code;

(5) Comptroller General Annuities under section 777 of title 31, United States Code; and

(6) Cash Relief Payments under section 1245(c) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

(c) Section 1817 of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 918 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(1) Within 60 days after the end of calendar year 1987, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, into the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, an amount equal to the amount which the Secretary of the Treasury determines to be the amount by which the total amount of benefit payments made from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund were reduced by reason of the limitation on cost-of-living increases required by subsection (b) of the section which enacted this subsection.".

SEC. . In the case of any cost-of-living adjustment which is subject to the provisions of section 301 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982, the percentage by which the annuity or retired or retainer pay is increased with respect to any increase occurring by law during the period beginning on January 1, 1985, and ending on December 30, 1988, shall be the percentage increase as determined after the application of such section 301, minus three percentage points.

KENNEDY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3050

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. KENNEDY, for himself, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. CRANSTON) proposed an amendment to amendment No. 3027 proposed by Mr. BAKER (and others) to the bill H.R. 2163, supra; as follows:

Strike increase in part B premium (Sec. 901): On page 1199, beginning with line 4, strike all through line 17 on page 1201.

Strike indexing of part B deductible (Sec. 916): On page 1226, beginning with line 21, strike all through line 4 on page 1228.

In the section of the Baker amendment dealing with Budget Authority for Defense, delete "to exceed $299,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $333,700,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, or $372,000,000,000 in fiscal year 1987," and substitute "to exceed $298,965,000,000 in fiscal year 1985, $333,226,000,000 in fiscal year 1986, and $370,507,000,000 in fiscal year 1987,".

SMOKEY BEAR WEEK

HEFLIN AMENDMENT NO. 3051

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. HEFLIN) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 273) to designate the week of May 13, 1984, through May 19, 1984, as "Smokey Bear Week"; as follows:

On page 2, strike out line 3 and insert in lieu thereof "That the week of August 5, 1984, through August 11, 1984, is".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL CREDIT AND RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agricultural Credit and Rural Electrification of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, I wish to announce that a hearing has been scheduled on legislation to amend the Rural Electrification Act of 1936.

The hearing will be held on Tuesday, May 15, 1984, at 9:30 a.m. in room 328-A Senate Russell Office Building.

For further information please contact the Agriculture Committee staff at 224-0014 or 224-0017.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs will hold a hearing on S. 1935, the Cigarette Study Safety Act on Thursday, May 10, at 9:30 a.m. in SD-342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. For further information, please contact Margaret Hecht at 224-4751.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND RESERVED WATER

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water on Thursday, May 17, beginning at 9:30 a.m., in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. The subcommittee will receive testimony on the following bills: S. 1218 and H.R. 2645, to amend the act of August 15, 1978, regarding the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area in the State of Georgia; S. 1331, to establish the Mono Lake National Monument in the State of California, and for other purposes; and H.R. 1341, to establish the Mono Lake National Forest Scenic Area in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Those wishing to testify or who wish to submit written statements for the hearing record should write to the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510. Because of the number of people expected to testify, witnesses will be arranged in panels and oral testimony will be limited to 5 minutes. Witnesses are requested to supply the subcommittee with 25 copies of their written testimony 24 hours in advance of the hearing, as required by the rules of the committee, and 50 copies the day of the hearing.

For further information regarding this hearing you may wish to contact Mr. Tony Bevinetto of the subcommittee staff at 224-5161.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY CONSERVATION AND SUPPLY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Supply, of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, be deemed to have been authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, May 8, at 1 p.m., to hold an oversight hearing to consider the revised Constitution of American Samoa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL RESOLUTION ON LATIN AMERICA

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Mr. Carlos Andres Perez, former president of Venezuela (1974-79) and a vice president of the Socialist International, last week brought to my attention a resolution on Latin America adopted by the Socialist International at its meeting in Copenhagen, April 26. This resolution endorses the Contadora group initiative as a real and effective path toward a political solution in Central America and urges a negotiated settlement to the conflict in El Salvador. The resolution reaffirms the importance of adhering to the rule of law in international relations and deplores the Reagan administration's decision to withdraw the United States from the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice with respect to Central America. The resolution also appeals to the Nicaraguan Government to hold the November elections under conditions of genuine pluralism and the guaranteeing of all freedoms, including freedom of expression. I ask that the full text of this resolution appear at this point in the RECORD.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION ON LATIN AMERICA

I

The Socialist International expresses its profound concern at the deterioration of the situation in the region of Central America, in terms of the escalation of armed conflict as well as the violation of the principles of international law.

It is self-evident that it is up to every nation—large or small—to respect the international system of rules. The basis for orderly relations in the world is that every sovereign nation has the right to demand respect for its territorial integrity and that every nation abstains from interfering in another nation's internal affairs.

There are no special rules for great powers. Instead it could be said that these nations have a particular responsibility to respect and to uphold the system of international norms. To break the rules of international law can never be excused, not even with reference to special great power interests or to a certain geographic situation.

The rules of international law cover all states. Responsible politicians in countries concerned must realize that the rest of the world will expect actions that are in agreement with the rules of international law. It is only in this way that respect for the nation's policies can be preserved.

The fact that the United States decided to withdraw, for a certain time, from the jurisdiction of the International Court in The Hague in questions regarding Central America gives cause for great concern. This indicates that the country has decided to enact a policy towards Latin American nations that can result in actions that violate international law.

The position of the International Court should be strengthened. All countries, not least the great powers, have a long-term responsibility to uphold this legal mechanism for the solution of conflicts. The action by the United States in this specific case can contribute to a continued weakening of the prestige and the position of the International Court. That is something that all nations must deeply deplore.

The rules of international law about respect for territorial integrity and non-intervention in internal affairs apply of course to all Latin American countries. To start a naval blockade against these countries, for example in the form of mining, is wholly against the basic rules of international law, and in the case of Nicaragua is against the spirit of agreement of Contadora. To mine another nation's territorial water in peacetime is an act of aggression, and thereby a grave crime against the rules of international law and against the Charter of the United Nations.

II

The persistence of injustice and the lack of real and effective democracy in Central America has been the main cause of the existence and the intensification of the crisis which now racks this region of the world.

The Socialist International expresses its conviction that it will only be through truly free elections and effective social, economic and political democracy that progress can be made towards a resolution of the conflicts in the region.

The Socialist International welcomes the calling of elections for 4th of November next in Nicaragua as an important step in the process of the institutionalization of democracy of that count.

The Socialist International appeals for these elections to be held in conditions of genuine pluralism and the guaranteeing of all freedoms, including freedom of expression.

The elections in El Salvador, in the current circumstances, without the participation of the MNR or the FDR/FMLN, and without fundamental political liberties, and in the context of a widespread repression, unfortunately do not constitute a solution to the conflict.

In view of the situation in El Salvador the path of negotiations to arrive at a political solution must be followed.

The Socialist International rejects intervention in El Salvador and expresses its willingness to collaborate so that the conflicting sides reach a comprehensive political solution by means of negotiations, which takes account of the real causes of the conflict—injustice and repression.

Regarding the calling of elections for a constitutional assembly in Guatemala, the Socialist International repeats that these could only initiate an effective democratisation of this country if they are held with the free participation of all the political forces and with an end of repression. The Socialist International reiterates its support for the Democratic Socialist Party of Guatemala.

The Socialist International follows with interest the advances in the process of reinforcing the institutions in Panama and is confident that this country, after the next elections to be held on May 6, will continue to actively contribute to the work of the Contadura Group and to consolidate the process or reaffirming its national sovereignty, through the fulfillment of the Torrijos-Carter treaties.

The Socialist International hopes that recent events in Honduras may lead to a reassessment of Honduran policy towards the region, resulting in Honduras adopting a policy of neutrality with regard to the conflicts in the area.

The Socialist International supports the stance of the MLDR and of numerous other personalities of different political tendencies in that country, who are in favor of the withdrawal of foreign troops from Honduran territory, and who demand that the sovereignty of Honduras be fully respected.

The Socialist International reaffirms its position in favour of negotiations and political solutions to the conflicts in Central America. The Contadora initiative, which must continue to recieve the fullest support and collaboration internationally, constitutes a real and effective path toward a political solution to the conflicts in this area of the Latin American continent.

III

The Socialist International expresses its satifaction at the recent triumph of its member party in Venezuela, Democratic Action, AD, and the election of comrade Jamie Lusinchi as president of that country with a decisive majority.

The Socialist International expresses its support for the advances in and consolidation of democracy in Argentina and the efforts of President Raul Alfonsin to overcome the accumulated problems of that country, following the years of dictatorship.

The Socialist International calls on the government of Great Britain to give a positive response to the request—reiterated recently by President Alfonsin—for negotiations with Argentina, within the context of the United Nations, on the Falklands/Malvinas conflict.

The Socialist International declares its full support for the overwhelming demand by the people of Brazil for direct and immediate presidential elections.

The Socialist International looks forward to the success of the presidential candidate, Rodrigo Borja, the representative of its member party in Ecuador, the PID, in the elections to be held on May 6, 1984.

At the same time, the Socialist International expresses its support for its member party in Peru, the Partido Aprista Peruano APRA, which has nominated Alan Garcia as candidate for the presidential elections in that country.

The Socialist International reiterates once again its support for the Chilean people and the demands of all democratic forces in that country, which has been expressed vigorously in recent months, in favour of a quick return to democracy. It also expresses its solidarity with the people of Uruguay, who are making decisive progress in their struggle to reestablish democracy in that country, and with the demand for the legalization of political parties and freedom for individuals of the opposition to stand for elections—unconditional, democratic elections—and full respect of the will of the people.

The Socialist International declares its solidarity with the Revolutionary Febrerista Party in its struggle for democracy and freedom in Paraguay.

In Haiti the oldest and most cruel dictatorship in the Caribbean has submitted the Haitian people for so many years to poverty and social inequality.

The SI denounce this dictatorship and its constant violation of human rights. We call on the democratic forces all over the world to join us in the support of the Haitian people to bring the Duvalier dictatorship to an end and to establish democracy in Haiti.

IV

In light of the worsening economic problems in Latin America and the Caribbean, in particular the problem of external debt, the Socialist International affirms the need of joint efforts to overcome the serious situation affecting this region, as well as other areas of the developing world, and which affects in particular the working class and the poorest groups. In this context, the Socialist International rejects the policies imposed by the IMF, which have worsened social tensions in these countries, and which do not represent a viable economic alternative.●

AGRICULTURAL OPTIONS UNDER THE REAGAN LEADERSHIP

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it is appropriate to bring to the attention of the Senate the efforts of some of the outstanding appointees of the Reagan administration to develop agricultural options, a new marketing tool for farmers.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission is the regulatory agency for the futures industry, which is within the legislative jurisdiction of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry. As vacancies have occurred at the CFTC, President Reagan has appointed outstanding individuals as Commissioners. They worked hard to increase the involvement of the public and the industry, and have actively pursued such innovations as agricultural options trading.

SUSAN PHILLIPS

Dr. Susan Phillips, a former university administrator and professor of finance in Iowa, has been appointed by the President as Chairman of the CFTC. This highly qualified woman had already been appointed by President Reagan as Commissioner prior to her being named Chairman in 1983, and she is performing her duties with distinction.

I might add that Dr. Phillips' appointment as head of this important Federal regulatory agency is another in a series of appointments of women to positions of major responsibility in the Reagan administration. She joins the ranks of a large number of women who serve the administration with great distinction, because of their outstanding qualifications for the positions to which they have been appointed. Those who most readily come to mind are Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who is a native of my own State, Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler, White House assistant Faith Whittlesey, United Nation's Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, and of course, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Mary Jarratt.

KALO HINEMAN

The Nation's futures markets began many years ago as a way to bring together buyers and sellers of agricultural products, but many of us have been concerned that agriculture itself had not been adequately represented on the Commission. I and other Senators have written to both President Carter and then President Reagan urging that a farmer be appointed to the Commission.

President Reagan has done so in exemplary fashion by selecting Kalo Hineman for the job. Kalo is a farmer and rancher from Dighton, Kans., who has been an agricultural and community leader as well as a State legislator. He was first called to our attention by the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), and we have found that Kalo carries out his duties very capably and responsibly.

AGRICULTURAL OPTIONS

One of the innovative ideas being pursued by Dr. Phillips, Kalo Hineman, and their colleagues is the trading of agricultural options. An option is a contract that gives the purchaser the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell a commodity (or a futures contract based on that commodity) at a set price on or before a set date in the future. The buyer pays a one-time premium to purchase the option contract.

Agricultural options could allow farmers and processors to protect themselves from unfavorable price movements without forgoing the opportunity to take advantage of favorable price movements. For example, a farmer might acquire an option to sell corn at a certain price next harvest. When harvest arrives, if market prices are below the option price, he can exercise his option and sell the corn as provided in this contract. However, if market prices are higher, he can disregard the option and sell the corn on the cash market. In effect, he can take advantage of whichever price is higher.

In this way options provide greater flexibility than either cash forward contracts or futures contracts. The buyer of the option must pay the premium whether he exercises the option or not, but he—and his lender—are not subject to additional margin calls as they might be in the futures market. Thus options could minimize risk, while still allowing an opportunity for reward.

Agricultural options came to my attention 2 years ago as a possible new, private sector marketing tool for farmers. During consideration of the Futures Trading Act of 1982, I offered the amendment which cleared away the statutory roadblocks to agricultural options trading. The amendment was adopted by the Agriculture Committee and approved by the Senate, and the bill was signed into law by President Reagan.

This new law will allow trading in agricultural options to occur, subject to the approval of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. The CFTC has announced a pilot program under which limited trading in agricultural options could occur during 1984.

Two excellent articles on these topics have recently appeared in FarmFutures magazine. One article explains agricultural options trading and the other describes Kalo Hineman's unique role as a CFTC Commissioner with a farm background.

A third article appeared in the April edition of USDA's Farmline magazine, and I believe it will be of interest to those interested in trading in options and in their possible impact on farm policy, as well.

Mr. President, I ask that these three articles be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The articles follow:

KALO HINEMAN—THE FARMER IN THE CFTC

(By David Pelzer)

Two years ago Kalo Hineman, a wheat and cattle producer from Dighton, Kansas, went to Washington to be a bureaucrat. His job: to watch over commodity futures markets as the first agricultural producer to serve on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission since its creation in 1974.

Within months, Hineman found himself chairing a committee that would set up a pilot program to re-instate agricultural options in the marketplace. He also has found himself in the middle of a continuing dispute between the futures trading community and some outspoken farmers and ranchers who suspect those markets may be doing them in.

Kalo (everyone calls him by his first name) began raising start-up cattle on western Kansas wheat pasture and native grass in 1947. In time he became part owner of a southwestern Kansas feedlot. In the 1970s, he served in the Kansas House of Representatives, where an old friend, Senator Bob Dole approached him with the idea of having a Kansas producer sit on the CFTC. When an opening became available, Dole submitted Kalo's name to President Reagan. He was officially sworn in on January 12, 1982 for a four and a half year term. During his stay in Washington, his oldest son manages the farm in trust.

NEW ERA FOR AGRICULTURE

Kalo said he took the commission job out of concern for the changing nature of modern farming. "My generation was never as market-oriented as we should have been," he said "We lived in an era of flat markets."

Ironically, in the years when Kalo was actively running his operation, he made little use of the futures markets.

Eventually he "gave them a look—but I didn't use them right," he confessed. "My attention was focused on how I could make those steers gain weight a little cheaper and how I could raise a few more bushels per acre of wheat. Back then, most of us didn't have a market plan."

Times have changed, and Kalo changed with them. While he does not consider his role to be a promoter of the futures markets, he maintains that for producers to survive the up-and-down markets of the 1980s, they had better understand the basics of futures markets.

"A lot of the things we cuss 'em for, they were never intended to be," he said, mindful of the days back home when farmers commonly praised the Lord and cursed the CBT in the same breath. "Futures are risk-shifting, price discovery markets. They were never intended to be price forecasters," he maintained.

"We're selling our products and borrowing our money on the world market now, not on a local market as our grandfathers did," Kalo continued. "I'm not telling you we have to like it—I'm telling you what the facts are. In this day instant transmission of information, this world is not that small anymore. We have to understand export markets, and futures markets, so that we don't advocate something counter to our own well being."

To drive home his point, Kalo recalled a visit by an Australian Wheat Board member who, when asked how a government-run marketing agency sets the price for all that nation's wheat, replied: "We price our wheat just like everyone else in the world—based on the U.S. futures price. You have the world's only openly competitive markets."

"Our market remains free in that anybody can get in or out," Kalo said. "Absent the futures, we might have prices set in a phone booth—and with no farmers in that phone booth."

PIT PATROLMEN

To Kalo, the job of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission is to make sure markets stay openly competitive, and to see that they stay free from manipulation and fraud. Up to this point, he is "comfortable" with CFTC's enforcement program.

"It's like crime in the streets," he said. "If I were a cop, I wouldn't tell you there is no crime going on. . . . But I think we have a very effective market surveillance team. So do the exchanges for the most part. Our people are professionals. They can spot patterns, and they know what they are looking for."

Because of the human element in the pits, the need for enforcement is ongoing, Kalo emphasized. But with the development of computer technology, "our ability to reconstruct trading sequences and practices is getting better."

Recently the CFTC's ability to ensure a free and open market has been called into question. State delegations of the National Cattlemen's Association have renewed their longtime push for a national resolution to ban or severely restrict cattle futures trading. (See "Voices of Dissent," page 28.) Grain producers have expressed concern over unusual price volatility in corn and soybean futures last fall, resulting in a congressional hearing. (See "Wild Grain Prices," page M-19.)

When asked to explain the reasons behind the recent furor over futures trading, Kalo replied that in times of turmoil people "lash out at the things they least understand and those easiest to lash out at"—in this case, the futures markets.

"The markets are suspect," Kalo said. "We're suspect, too, because we're the government."

CATTLE PRODUCERS HURTING

He cited mountain-state cow-calf producers specifically as "one of the hardest hit segments of agriculture today," due to the dramatic change in cash cattle markets and a greater amount of interdependence between the livestock industry and world feedgrain prices.

Cattle industry experts confirm that while many cattle producers follow the futures markets at least in passing, very few actively use it to hedge or speculate. Many producers hear futures prices quoted the most at the feedlot, when it comes time to settle on a cash price. A drop in the futures price for live cattle may force a feedlot operator who is hedging to lower his cash price bid for feeder cattle. Many producers in this situation feel they are bearing the brunt of the feedlot's loss. While cattle producers point to other price pitfalls, including habitual over-production, many view the futures as another burden heaped on their pile of woe.

"I hear producers say 'If I can't use it, and if it's being used against me, I'd rather get rid of it,'" Kalo explained. "And I understand their frustration."

Some state delegations within the National Cattlemen's Association have pointed to a recent congressional study as evidence that cattle futures markets are not working in accordance with supply and demand. John Helmuth, an economist with the House Small Business Committee, concluded that when live cattle futures prices reach a level covering cattle feeder costs in the Corn Belt plus an interior basis adjustment, they will always drop. This is due, Helmuth said, to a relatively large amount of short selling by commercial feedlots, grain companies, meat companies and the officers of these companies, as well as large farmers and speculators.

In comparison, there is a lack of hedgers to take the long (buy) side of the market, Helmuth said.

While Kalo and CFTC economists reject Helmuth's analysis, he does agree with Helmuth that the lack of hedging activity on one side of the market can cause problems.

"I would be more comfortable if there were a larger usage by commercial hedgers," Kalo said. "I would be more comfortable if (more producers used) the feeder cattle contract, (for) I would then have a better feel for the market. I don't like thin markets (those with low volume and open interest, making it more difficult for a potential buyer to find a seller, and vice versa). I like markets that are highly liquid, with easy entry and exit. If the market gets thin, one transaction can make a big wave, whereas in a big, liquid market, it could hardly make a ripple."

This is why speculators are needed in the market, Kalo explained. Without them, there may not be anyone to take an opposite position that allows hedgers those easy entrances and exits.

A recent CFTC study on large hedgers indicated that more commercial hedgers are working the buy side of the live cattle market than a year or two ago. The increased activity is due in part to a new "certificate of delivery" instituted in the December live cattle contract that helped cattle from being physically moved unnecessarily.

Kalo would also like to see a price index developed that hedgers with 400-lb. calves or 900-lb. feeder steers could use to compare to their cash market prices. That proposal, however, is still in its development stages.

IF FUTURES WERE BANNED

Part of the continuing disagreement between the anti-futures crowd and moderates like Kalo stems from the different philosophies about what would happen if cattle (or any other commodity) futures were to be banned. In Helmuth's view, cash price drops would not come as fast or go as deep. Further, the trend toward more forward contracting done electronically in a central auction would accelerate, he claimed.

Kalo disagrees. "If cattle futures were banned today, the plight of the cow-calf producer wouldn't change one bit," he maintained. "In fact, it could hurt him a little. Do away with futures and cattle feeders would incur additional risk, and are likely to bid cheaper for those feeder cattle."

Futures quotes contain a lot of important price information. To ban futures would mean cutting off an important source of information available to farmers. And one thing farmers don't need is less information, he added.

"With or without futures, the well organized agribusiness companies are going to have their information," Kalo argued. "A friend of mine at Union Equity, the chief teller there, makes conference calls all over the world before walking out into the market in the morning. He's going to have his information."

"It isn't going to be easy" for farmers to do the same, Kalo admitted. "Maybe a busy farmer needs to rely someplace down the road on some kind of consulting service interested in his own risk management program, rather than just to sell him a futures contract."

Kalo emphasized that although futures are not necessarily for everyone, producers should have a sound understanding of how they work. He encouraged producers to play an active role in helping to improve the system so that it works for them.

After his tenure ends in 1986, Kalo said he plans to return to Kansas, assuring the folks back home that he doesn't "intend to keep Potomac fever." Whether he will help his son run the farm or become an active partner in a livestock company has yet to be decided. Regardless, Kalo believes his experience watching over the futures markets will make him a much better businessman in his own right.

On his return home, it is likely that Kalo will be remembered as the farmer who went to Washington and still returned a farmer. As one producer friend back home who razzed him good-naturedly about taking his office job said: "The day Kalo becomes a bureaucrat, we'll all be bureaucrats."

POLICING THE PITS

Created by Congress in 1974, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission is an independent federal agency charged with regulating 11 futures trading exchanges and more than 90 actively traded contracts ranging from soybeans to stock indices. Its 1984 budget is about $26 million.

The CFTC tries to preserve a competitive marketplace by monitoring size of open positions, activities of large traders, key price relationships, availability of deliverable supplies and other potential problems. A 23-member team of economists looks out for threats of market manipulation, reviewing "snapshots" of trading patterns that show price relationships and open interest. Every Friday the full commission meets to review expiring contracts and discuss the positions of individual traders capable of moving the market.

When problems are identified, the CFTC has power to review the records of individual traders, to issue warning letters, or directly intervene in the market, such as by ordering liquidation-only trading. CFTC may also ban violators from using the futures market, temporarily or permanently.

In cases of reporting violations by traders, the CFTC has dished out "some pretty strong medicine," according to Commissioner Kalo Hineman. Ray E. Friedman & Co. (REFCO), for example, was fined a total of $525,000 last year for a series of violations in 1980 of speculative position limits in corn, wheat and cotton. Last year the commission dished out penalties of $3.5 million to 49 individuals or firms, and used cease and desist orders 71 times.

Despite this, CFTC has been accused of failing to keep pace with the explosive growth of futures markets. CFTC has tried to rely on the exchanges to regulate themselves better through a newly formed association. But it also has had to reprimand some exchanges for failing to toughen up their rules and for spending money more on promotion instead of more advanced trade monitoring systems.

OPTIONS TRADING: THE NEW PRICE INSURANCE

(By Scott W. Stewart)

Futures options, to be re-introduced this fall, are being hailed by supporters as the ultimate marketing tool for farmers. The fanfare is for good reason, too. No other marketing alternative allows a producer to lock in a minimum price without limiting the maximum possible price. As good as the advantages of options may seem, however, there are some catches you should know about before you charge ahead.

The biggest stumbling blocks will be the cost of buying options—premiums—and the hard reality that options will not offer a profitable price when one would otherwise not be available. You still will have to be a smart marketer when using them. Taking that into account, options still may be the marketing alternative of the century.

Options will be considered in the experimental stage for the next three years. As FarmFutures reported in January of last year, Congress has lifted a 47-year ban on this kind of trading. The pilot project now planned calls for each of the exchanges to pick two commodities on which to trade options. The Chicago Board of Trade, for instance, picked soybeans, because soybean prices are the most volatile and futures trading volume is high enough to ensure the success of the options contract. (The other exchanges have not made their plans public.) If the trial period proves successful, more options will be approved.

HOW OPTIONS WORK

An option gives you the right—but not the obligation—to buy or sell a commodity at a given price during a given period of time. Both the price and the time are directly related to the futures contracts currently being traded in your commodity. But options are different from regular futures contracts in several ways.

There are two types of options, "puts" are "calls". Producers of crops or livestock would purchase a "put." This is an option to sell a given commodity at a fixed price (called the striking price) sometime in the future.

For example, if the July 1984 soybean futures were currently trading at $9, you could buy a put, giving you the option to take possession of a short soybean futures contract for 5,000 bushels at $9 anytime until that option contract expires.

In return for this opportunity, you would have to pay a premium. Initial studies estimate that this premium will be anywhere from 5 percent to 15 percent of the futures price. The premium (price of the option) will be determined by open outcry in the trading pit. The cost will depend on the market's volatility and the length of time until the option expires. Predicting a precise premium on an option for the next three years is like trying to predict soybean prices three years in advance—not too easy.

Paying 40 cents (or more) per bushel ($2,000 per contract) of soybeans for price insurance may seem outrageous or cheap, depending on your perspective. If you multiply 40 cents times every bushel you produce, that's expensive insurance. On the other hand, looking back to last summer, an option on soybeans could have been an attractive marketing alternative. When futures prices were over $9, some forecasts had them going to $12. But any sensible marketer knew that there was always the potential of $3 to $4 declines from such levels. Few marketers want to pass up $12 beans, but there is not a farmer around who wants to watch $9 beans become $6 beans. So giving 40 cents or even 80 cents to ensure an $8 or $9 price while waiting for a $12 price in hindsight would have been a very sound and comforting investment.

Let's say you did buy a put option last summer. After the price fell you could either exercise the option to obtain that $9 soybean futures price, or resell the option and make up the difference between the option price and the current futures price.

If futures prices rise beyond $9, you would have little use for your option, and would let it expire with no further cost. You would then either sell your crop, forward contract it, hedge or even buy another option.

CALL OPTIONS

A purchaser of farm products, such as a feed or livestock buyer, would make use of "call" options. In this case you would pay a premium for the right to buy agricultural goods at a fixed price over a given time period.

Notice that unlike a futures contract, you have no obligation to buy in order to close out your option.

In options trading, puts and calls are not considered the opposite sides of the same contract. Rather, they are two separate contracts.

Another difference between options contracts and regular futures contracts lies in terms of delivery. If you take delivery on a futures contract you receive a commodity. With options, if you take delivery (exercise the option) you receive a futures contract. In both instances the number of deliveries will be very small.

INSURANCE POLICY

From the above soybean examples you can see that dealing in options is like purchasing an insurance policy against unexpected price changes. The fixed premium you pay at the beginning of the transaction is even similar to an insurance premium.

Carrying the analogy further, your choice among various strike prices in options trading is similar to a deductible on your auto insurance. If a premium of 90 cents per bushel for a $9 put is too expensive for you, you could buy an $8.50 put at a lower premium. Your floor price would be 50 cents lower, but your premium would be less, too.

STILL NEED MARKETING

In order to make effective use of options as a profitable marketing tool, you will still have to plan out and execute a sound marketing plan. The most important factor to remember is that your goal is to sell at a profitable price. You can price your beans at $9 by forward contracting, hedging or buying a put. If you use options wisely, you can guarantee that $9 price (minus the premium you pay) in times of higher risk without limiting your opportunity to catch the bullish wave.

On the other hand, options are no panacea to farmers' most basic marketing problems. Since options will be based on futures contracts, they will not offer a more profitable price than what you could get by trading on the board.

What is more, if you are confused by the current set-up on the futures market, just wait till options start trading. You'll have to follow puts and calls at five different striking price levels for every futures contract. Yet this complexity has not scared away traders from options in the bond markets and other commodities, so take heart. If you understand the basic concept, a broker should be able to help you take care of many of the finer details.

Options trading of course will not free you from the most difficult marketing decisions. You will still have to determine what is a good price and when to go for it. A simple marketing plan might include locking in a profitable price by buying put options anytime soybean prices surpass $8 or corn prices top $3. Of course, you will have to subtract the cost of the premium from the option price.

Unfortunately, options do not offer a cure for the uncertainties that cause many producers to delay their marketing decisions and miss out on profitable pricing opportunities. But with proper use, you should be able to guarantee that when you are ready to retire, the farm will still be there for your children.

OPTIONS TRADING: IS IT FOR FARMERS?

Farmers will soon have a new tool available for dealing with price uncertainties: agricultural options.

Trading in agricultural commodity options is expected to begin this fall after nearly a 50-year ban. Options will allow farmers to lock onto a guaranteed price in selling their output or purchasing certain inputs, but without some of the risks of trading in futures contracts.

"If you purchase an option," says David Kenyon, "you know your financial liability in advance, you are not subject to margin calls, and you do not forfeit the opportunity to take advantage of favorable price shifts in the cash market that may occur before your option expires."

The difference between options and futures is one of the subjects covered by Kenyon in his Farmers' Guide to Trading Agricultural Commodity Options. Kenyon, a professor of agricultural economics at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, wrote the guide while on a study-research assignment with USDA's Economic Research Service.

According to Kenyon, options may provide an attractive alternative for farmers who have backed off from hedging only because of the risks present in the futures market. He cautions, however, that rules for options trading are still being written, that options can be expensive, and that average returns may not match those available from futures. Farmers should carefully investigate options and get professional advice before making any trading decisions.

Options trading in gold, Treasury bonds, and sugar began in October 1982. Options for several major U.S. farm commodities should be available before the end of this year. Under a 3-year pilot program, the Chicago Board of Trade, Chicago Mercantile Exchange, Kansas City Board of Trade, and other approved exchanges will each be permitted to write option contracts on two commodities. Options may initially be offered on corn, soybeans, wheat, fed cattle, hogs, and possibly some other commodities that already trade on futures markets.

WHAT'S AN OPTION?

An option, says Kenyon, is a contract that gives you the right, but not the obligation, to buy or sell a futures contract at a specified price until the option expires. Once you lock in a price by purchasing an option, you can exercise your option to buy or sell at that price regardless of any later changes in the price of the futures contract.

The right to sell at a fixed price is called a put option; the right to buy at a fixed price is a call option.

If you are a corn farmer, for example, you might purchase a put option to lock in a selling price for your corn crop. If you are a hog farmer, you might buy a call option if you wanted to lock in a purchase price for feed corn.

In either case, you would choose a price from several alternative strike prices available at the exchange offering the option contracts. This is the price you would be locking in—the price at which you could exercise your option to buy or sell futures. It does not have to match the underlying futures contract price at the time you purchase the option.

In fact, the option buyer will be able to choose from strike prices either above or below the then-current futures contract price. So, why wouldn't the corn producer choose the highest available strike price to maximize returns? And why wouldn't the hog producer choose the lowest strike price to minimize feed costs?

The reason is the premium, which might be compared with a premium on an insurance policy. The more price insurance you want, the more you pay. In most cases, premiums will rise enough to offset the additional price guarantees you can obtain by selecting more favorable strike prices.

FIGURING THE PREMIUM

Premiums are calculated from option unit prices. For each strike price available to the buyer of an option contract, there will be an associated transaction price, called the option price or option unit price.

The buyer of a put option—like the corn producer—will find that the unit price rises as the strike price rises. The buyer of a call option—like the hog producer—will find that the unit price rises as the strike price drops.

Option unit prices may fluctuate throughout the trading day as the value of the underlying futures contract changes and as option buyers and sellers adjust their bid and asking prices based on supply and demand.

The premium you pay is the option unit price multiplied by the number of units (bushels or whatever) in the futures contract. Thus, a unit price of 20 cents per bushel of corn translates into a premium of $1,000 for an option on a 5,000-bushel futures contract.

If a 20-cent unit price were attached to a strike price of $3.00 per bushel on a put option, the corn farmer might have to pay somewhere around 30 to 35 cents per bushel—a premium of $1,500 to $1,750—to lock in a strike price of $3.10 per bushel.

HERE'S HOW IT ALL MIGHT WORK

Assume that corn options will be offered by next year, and you're a corn farmer watching the options market as you begin your spring planting. Let's say a $3.00-a-bushel strike price is available at a 20-cent unit price on a put option for December 1985 corn. You see this as an opportunity to lock in a $2.60-a-bushel floor price for your crop—the $3.00 strike price minus the 20-cent unit price minus another 20 cents for the basis (the difference between futures and cash prices in your area).

You're afraid that corn prices might drop below $2.60 in the cash market by the time you harvest your crop in October, and you figure that $2.60 would be enough to cover your production costs and still provide a small profit. You pay your premium, plus a brokerage commission.

After that, you can exercise your right to sell for $3.00 any time up to the expiration date of your options contract. Options contracts will probably expire about 2 weeks before the last delivery day of the futures contract.

Now, suppose that December corn futures are down to around $2.20 per bushel in October, and you decide to exercise your option. You might instruct your broker to assign you a long (buy) position on the futures market near the end of the trading session and to immediately exercise your option. Your broker calls the exchange and, after the end of the trading day, a clearing corporation acts on your "exercise" request by assigning you a short (sell) position in futures. This offsets the long position you took during the trading session. Your option is exercised, and your futures position is simultaneously terminated—all before trading resumes the next morning.

What happened? You bought a futures contract at that day's price of around $2.20 a bushel and you sold the contract by exercising your option at your locked-in strike price of $3.00 a bushel. Your profit: 80 cents a bushel, minus the 20-cent option unit price already paid in the premium. If you can sell your corn in the cash market for around $2.00 a bushel, you've managed to net your $2.60 per bushel floor price—$2.00 in the cash market, plus around 60 cents because of your options transaction.

Your insurance paid off. You did much better than you would have done in the cash market alone, where you would have netted only $2.00 a bushel.

THE OTHER DIRECTION

How would you have fared had corn prices gone up instead of down between spring and fall?

Kenyon uses the example of December corn futures reaching $3.50 a bushel. If you held a futures contract—rather than an option—to sell your corn at around $3.00, you would either have to deliver your corn at that price or, more likely, you would buy out of the contract at $3.50—a 50-cent loss on your futures transaction. That loss would offset your gain in the cash market.

The options contract offers a better alternative. You could simply let the option expire and sell your corn in the cash market for the higher price. You would still lose your premium, which amounts to 20 cents a bushel, but you come out well ahead of where you would have been had you hedged in the futures market. In this instance, the cash market—without options or futures—would have provided the highest returns, although you would have taken the risk that prices might fall.

Notice that with both options and futures, you successfully locked in a floor price. The difference, says Kenyon, is that options allow much higher profits if prices go in your direction.

The same results, in reverse, would apply if you were a hog producer trying to lock in a ceiling on costs for feed corn. A call option could protect you from rising corn prices without locking you into a futures contract if corn prices fell sharply.

COMPARING OPTIONS AND FUTURES

Although the chance to benefit from favorable price movements is a key advantage of options, there are many other considerations in weighing options against futures. Among the most important may be relative earnings.

Kenyon constructed several examples to compare returns. In his examples, he found that returns from future hedging are higher than returns from options under some price scenarios, but much depends on the direction of price movement and the size of the option premium.

The degree to which farmers will use options will be heavily influenced by the premiums, he says. The corn farmer's option in the previous example would took less appealing if the option unit price were 35 cents a bushel instead of 20 cents. A higher premium would set a lower floor price, and it would cut deeper into potential gains if cash prices rose between spring and fall.

Option grantors (those who sell options) demand higher premiums to offset increased risks. Like sellers of insurance, they try to make sure that, overall, their premiums cover their payouts when futures markets provide profits to option buyers. When prices go in their favor, option sellers keep the premiums as payment for providing option buyers with price insurance.

Even as option buyers, he says, farmers may not view premiums as tipping the scales against the options strategy. At least, premiums are known up front, and they constitute the entire financial liability of the option buyer, other than brokerage fees.

Purchasers of options do not have to meet margin calls. Holders of futures contracts, as well as sellers of options, do have to meet margin calls to put up additional cash if futures prices go against them.

OTHER ADVANTAGES, TOO

He also points out that options may offer a more attractive price management tool when yield risk is considered. A farmer hedging in futures usually has to consider the possibility that yields may not match expectations.

If the farmer hedges an entire crop based on normal yields, losses in the futures market can be relatively high if poor weather cuts yields and boosts prices.

With options, on the other hand, the farmer can obtain price protection on the entire crop without the risk of being locked into a futures contract that may, under some circumstances, substantially reduce net returns. If yield is lower than expected and price is higher, the option buyer simply allows the option to expire, losing only the premium.

Options, says Kenyon, can be bought and sold on any business day, so farmers can buy or sell price insurance as they need it. And an option buyer does not even have to exercise the option in the futures market in order to realize a profit. The trader can liquidate the option position by making an offsetting option trade, possibly recapturing part of the premium.

"Selling an option at harvest returns the same or more profit than exercising the option and avoids trading the underlying futures contract. Hence," says Kenyon, "more option buyers will choose to sell rather than exercise their options position."

Kenyon notes that the history of options trading has been tainted by a few unscrupulous brokers and some deceptive trade practices. That's one reason, he says, why the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) is proceeding slowly and carefully in designing the pilot program for agricultural options.

The best policy, however, is still "buyer beware," Kenyon advises. "Farmers should be careful in dealing with those who promise enormous profits." Check out such deals with local brokers who have established reputations or with the CFTC, he says. Also, be aware that commissions charged by brokers may vary both in the manner in which they are charged and in the size of the fee. Ask about the fee structure before choosing a broker.

COMPARING RETURNS: TWO EXAMPLES OF OPTIONS VERSUS FUTURES VERSUS CASH MARKETS

EXAMPLE I.—Corn prices drop from spring to fall

Assumptions:	Bushel
Futures price at time of hedge	$3.00
Selected strike price	3.00
Option unit price	.20
October futures price	2.20
October cash price	2.00
Corn production on farm	10,000

EXAMPLE II.—Corn prices rise from spring to fall

Assumptions:	Bushel
Futures price at time of hedge	$3.00
Selected strike price	3.00
Option unit price	.20
October futures price	3.50
October cash price	3.30
Corn production on farm	10,000

STRATEGY A.—Buy Put Options on December 2 Corn Futures Contracts (10,000 Bushels)

Return on futures from exercise of put options:
Sell 2 5,000-bushel contracts at $3 strike price	$30,000
Buy back 2 5,000-bushel contracts at $2.20 October price	−22,000
Earnings on put options	8,000
Premium on 2 put options (10,000 bushels times 20¢ unit price)	−2,000
Net earnings on put options	[1] 6,000
Receipts from sale on cash market: 10,000 bushels times $2 cash price	+20,000
Net earnings: $6,000 in futures times $20,000 in cash market	26,000
Allow options to expire:
Earnings/losses on put options	0
Premium on put options (10,000 bushels times 20¢ unit price)	−2,000
Net losses on put options	[1] −2,000
Receipts from sale on cash market: 10,000 bushels times $3.30 cash price	+33,000
Net earnings: $33,000 in cash market minus $2,000 loss on put options	31,000

[1] Minus brokerage commissions.

STRATEGY B.—Sell December 1 Corn Futures Contract (5,000 Bushels) To Hedge Half Your Expected Crop [1]

Return on futures:
Sell 5,000-bushel contract at $3 futures hedge price	$15,000
Buy back 5,000-bushel contract at $2.20 October price	−11,000
Net earnings on future hedge	[2] 4,000
Receipts from cash sale on cash market: 10,000 bushels times $2 cash price	+20,000
Net earnings: $4,000 in futures plus $20,000 in cash market	24,000
Return on futures:
Sell 5,000-bushel contract at $3 futures hedge price	15,000
Buy back 5,000-bushel contract at $3.50 October price	−17,500
Losses on future hedge	[2] 2,500
Receipts from sale on cash market: 10,000 bushels times $3.30 cash price	+33,000
Net earnings: $33,000 in cash market minus $2,500 loss on futures hedge	30,500

[1] Hedging the entire crop through futures would have resulted in net earnings of $28,000 in both the examples. However, this assumes fixed yields. In practice, most farmers would be unlikely to hedge an entire crop before they had some assurance that yields would match expectations.

[2] Minus brokerage commissions.

STRATEGY C.—Sell Corn in Cash Market (No Futures Hedge on Option)

Net earnings: 10,000 bushels × $2.00 cash price	20,000
Net earnings: 10,000 bushels × $3.30 cash price	33,000

NOTE.—To keep the comparisions relatively simple, the strategy of offsetting rather than exercising the option is not illustrated here. In many cases, this would increase the returns available through options.●

LETTER FROM NICARAGUA

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, too often in our discussion of events in Central America, we rely on facts and figures that fail to convey the human dimension. I was struck by a recent letter published in the Harvard Magazine written by a Harvard University graduate. The author, Sarah Stookey, has been in Nicaragua since her graduation last year, teaching English to Salvadoran refugees and doing agricultural work. Her letter is filled with her personal impressions of life in Nicaragua and the impact of President Reagan's secret war on the people of Nicaragua. I ask that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

LETTER FROM NICARAGUA

(By Sarah Stookey)

I have been back in Esteli for three weeks now—it feels like much longer. I am living with a family in Barrio Jaime Ubeda. It is a very good home to be in. The mother, Franci, is 34 and a student at the Frente Sandinista College just north of town. It is a school of general education, administrative and military training, and farming work. Eighty students participate in each year-and-a-half program, designed to develop an indigenous group of professionals for government work. The students are, for the most part, middle aged, with "life experience" in the revolution but little formal education. Franci was selected for her work in the underground women's movement of the 60s and 70s, and for her apparent leadership potential.

Franci lives at the school during the year but is home now for a couple of months. Everyone in the house is home now. The annual three-month vacation has just begun—all six Franci's daughters finished their final examinations last week.

Magda, the oldest at 19, is working during the day with the Juventud Sandinista, the youth organization of the FSLN. She spends all day at meetings or in the barrios, managing activities for smaller children.

Another daughter, Karellia, 15, is going to go pick coffee this month. Many brigades have left Esteli for the mountains in the north where the coffee crop is concentrated. Each brigade is made up of the members of a mass organization (for example, AMNLAE, the women's organization) or of a CDS (the barrio community organizations) or of students. The brigades go up for two- to four-week periods to bring in the harvest quickly and to help make up for the many campesinos who are fighting or have been forced to abandon their crops because of contra ambushes. The brigades work under army protection and are themselves armed.

We have had news from friends who are working in these brigades, and from others who have visited. It is hard work, the food is very poor, and there are frequent ambush attempts. These are often repelled without casualties, but two students from Esteli have died since I have been here.

Students who do not want to pick coffee and are not otherwise busy, either as sole wage-earner in a family or in government or mass organization work or in vital production, are participating in three weeks of training and seminars on civil defense practices. In case of an invasion, they will be the coordinators in the barrios, supervising first aid, fire fighting, food distribution, child care.

The little girls in the family, ages 6 to 11, spend the day playing in the house, in the street, or running errands. They are eager companions/interpreters on trips to el centro.

This is clearly a time of preparing for an invasion. The territorial militias, those forces that will defend the city, are training all day on the weekends and for two hours every weeknight. The training is in general defense skills and procedes assignment to barrio level battalions, which are coordinated by the CDS in each neighborhood.

Saturdays, people gather in the plaza around noon. We divide up into groups of ten, and each group is instructed by a member of the EPS, Popular Sandinista Army. A group of ten this past Saturday included a seven-year-old boy and his mother, several teen-age girls, a fifty-year-old woman, and a couple of young men. We practiced maneuvers in a field—how to form a line of defense, how to respond to air or chemical attack.

On Sunday there is arms training, instruction in how to take apart and reassemble the gun, and, only afterwards, target practice. Everyone, of all ages, is respectfully attended to and allowed their turn and questions. The sun is very hot but, inevitably, just when it's the worst, a jeep shows up with a tub of ice water and a cup is passed around. Sometimes, instead of arms training, there is work on Sunday. Everyone walks, in two lines on either side of the highway, singing and clapping, to a place where we're given picks and shovels and dig foxholes or refuges.

Always there is sharing of food—tortillas, pineapple, bananas—and much joking and flirting. And always there are the mountains that ring Esteli. The clouds are constantly changing the patterns of light and shade on the meadows and darker woods.

And it is so, always, that the more I see of the community's preparation for its defense, the more sure I feel of their cause and the more desperate about the effect of U.S. power in the region.

I have never seen people caring so much about each other—giving and working when they have so little to give and so much to do. Those who dig the longest, who rest the least, are always the poorest farmers. This house where I am has only one small scholarship to feed and clothe seven people and yet I was told that I needn't worry about contributing money for food, that as long as there was something to eat, it was mine to share.

The difference between these and similar generosities in the States is the context in which they occur. I believe the purpose of government is to nurture and institutionalize the best in human relations. And here I feel that happening. The FSLN has made a commitment to improving the quality of life of the poor. The current administration is making tangible progress—cheaper food, free health care, widespread public education. And it is fervently seeking out ways to involve people in this work. Often there is no alternative. Here there is not the unique "luxury" of being passive, of being able to trust that the coffee will be harvested, sewers will be built, or the cities defended. In the States it seems that we are often debilitatingly dependent on mysteriously complex and distant mechanisms of administration and provision. We have an abundance of technicians and officials who are all too willing to carry out the responsibilities of the community without popular "interference." And an abundance of workers who also produce in a vacuum, without really feeling part of the social-political organism. We do not often acknowledge our dependencies on one another.

Self-government is a logistical necessity here; as Annie Dillard said about China, "it is a country made by hand." But the monumental tasks facing this people could never be accomplished without honest evaluation of the society's resources and needs. The process of popularly determined and effected government requires open recognition of the contribution of each social group and of each individual. Making life better here has also meant developing a highly sensitive awareness to the complexity of social relationships.

Someone at home asked me recently about an impression of surreality she got from reading Gabriel Marquez's "One Hundred Years of Solitude." In that book about Latin America, the men build houses of ice in the tropical jungle and wonder why they melt. What I feel here, what I have tried to describe, is an honesty and understanding that are the very opposite of surreality.

This is why I am very happy here now. It is the basis of my particular attraction to this place, and why I think I have a lot to learn here. And it is very much a result of being able to be in Esteli. But I hope that you will continue to help the people here, to oppose our government's actions against Nicaragua, even though you may not share all my enthusiasm about this process. It is one thing to be critical or offended by what is happening in this country. It is another to sit back and watch the United States systematically and militarily undermine the popularly supported, internationally recognized government of another country.

And the U.S. is the central power in this war. It is our dollars, our military expertise, our new airbase in Honduras (which dwarfs the "Cuban airstrip" in Grenada), our paramilitary training camps in Florida and New Jersey, and our refusal to seriously consider the FSLN's diplomatic proposals that are feeding the war in this region. Our planes are flying the reconnaissance missions that made possible the attacks on the Managua airport and the port of Corinto last fall. We must take responsibility for those fires in Corinto that forced 25,000 people to flee their homes.

And every week campesinos are found dead near their fields in the mountains near Esteli, often decapitated with their own machetes.

And still U.S. law, the Boland amendment to the FY 1983 Intelligence Authorization Act, prohibits the CIA and the Defense Department from participating in the contra attempt to overthrow the government of Nicaragua. And still, the OAS charter, of which we are a signer, proclaims: "No state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, in the internal or external affairs of any other state. The foregoing principle prohibits not only armed force but also any other form of interference or attempted threat against the personality of the state or against its political, economic and cultural elements."

As Senator Moynihan wrote of the Boland amendment: "This is the law, American law. It is not a matter of interpretation, it is a law which the Administration must abide by. . . ." And of the OAS treaty: "As we are a government of laws, we would hope to be a government of laws in the hemisphere and thus be bound by our commitments."

Not liking what is happening inside Nicaragua does not justify the destruction of Nicaragua's project of change. That is one point.

There is another: that unless the government of the U.S. obeys the laws promulgated by the representatives of the people and the treaties to which it self-righteously holds other nations, then we surely are building ice houses in the jungle.

Please be angry. To stop this violence against the people here. And to assert our right to honest relations with one another. We cannot allow ourselves to do what we are doing.●

FISCAL SANITY

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as we continue to debate what steps we will take this year to reduce current and outyear deficits, I would like to share with my colleagues some valuable insights on the deficit problem contained in an article written by O.B. Butler, chairman of the board of Proctor & Gamble. Mr. Butler's essay, "A Plea for Fiscal Sanity," gets right to the heart of the matter. As he says, "the problem will not be solved easily and it will not be solved by partisanship or demagoguery. It will be solved only be a public willingness to face facts and share the pain." To which I would only add, that sharing of the pain must involve every sector of our society, not just the individual taxpayer or program beneficiary. The business community, various industries that benefit from Federal subsidies—either direct or through the Tax Code—and the entire public sector must bear the burden as well as individuals.

That is the approach we are trying to take in this year's deficit reduction effort, and that is what we will have to keep doing in the years ahead. I commend Mr. Butler for his observations on this subject, and I ask that his article be printed in the RECORD in full at this point for the benefit of Members.

The article follows:

A PLEA FOR FISCAL SANITY

It is high time that we bring common sense and hard facts to our discussion of the federal deficit and the problems it creates.

First of all, we need to get the size of the current deficits in perspective. These are not "deficits as usual." The fact is that the federal deficits for the last two fiscal years, and the projected deficits for the next two fiscal years, are far and away the highest peace time deficits in the history of our country. Even when measured as percentage of gross national product (which rules out the effects of inflation and economic growth), they are substantially larger than the largest deficits we ran during the middle of the Great Depression of the 1930's when we were deliberately trying to spend our way out of economic disaster and were consciously willing to encourage inflation.

Learned economists are debating whether deficits are truly inflationary. At the same time, there seems to be a general acceptance of the discredited theory that federal deficits improve economic growth.

Common sense tells us that no individual, no family, and no corporation can consistently spend beyond its income without eventually facing financial disaster. The same is true of governments except that a government which persistently spends beyond its means can bring economic disaster to the entire country. All of the economic rationalizations in the world will not change the basic laws of human behavior.

A simple study of our post war history confirms what everyone should know; that is, that repeated federal deficits are inflationary. They also tell us, and this may come as a surprise to some, that repeated federal deficits also tend to reduce (rather than stimulate) the rate of economic growth and they tend to increase (rather than reduce) the rate of unemployment. The following table illustrates the point. The various time periods are not grouped on an arbitrary basis but are chosen because they represent extended periods of relatively consistent federal fiscal policy. From 1950 through 1966 the federal budget was generally in balance with six years of small surplus, seven years of small deficits and four years of almost exact balance. The next eight years were a period of almost consistent deficits (seven of the eight years), but deficits consistently in the magnitude of 1 to 2% of GNP. The next seven years were periods of consistent deficits which were generally in the range of 2½% GNP. The last four years are years of consistent deficits in the range of 4 to 5% GNP.

Period	Annual deficit		Percent annual economic growth [1]	Annual inflation rate [2]	Annual unemployment rate	Interest rate—
	Billions	As percent GNP				Long term [3]	Short term [4]
1950–66	$2.6	0.6	4.0	2.1	4.9	4.0	2.6
1967–74	12.4	1.2	3.4	4.8	4.6	7.6	5.6
1975–81	50.1	2.4	2.5	7.9	7.1	10.4	8.4
1982–83	155.3	4.9	0.2	5.6	9.6	13.9	10.1
1984–85	175.0	4.6

[1] As measured by Gross National Product adjusted for inflation.
[2] As measured by the GNP deflator.
[3] Yield on new issues of high grade corporate bonds.
[4] Yield on new issues of 91-day Treasury Bills.

Note that in a period of 17 years of generally balanced budgets, the rate of economic growth (measured as Gross National Product adjusted for inflation) was 4 percent. The inflation rate was 2.1 percent and the unemployment rate was under 5 percent. Interest rates on short-term borrowing were 2.6 percent and on long-term borrowing were 4 percent.

In the ensuing periods, as we encountered ever increasing federal deficits, the rate of economic growth declined until it has been essentially nothing during the last two years. The rate of inflation and unemployment increased dramatically and interest rates reached levels which will stifle economic expansion and are destroying millions of U.S. jobs because of the artificial exchange rates which these high interest rates create.

Statistical correlations don't prove cause and effect, but these correlations are remarkably consistent. Some will argue that the decline in economic growth resulted from loss in productivity and poor work practices, but it can be equally argued that these evils were encouraged by the general pattern of government fiscal irresponsibility and the resulting inflation.

It is true that in the last two years we have controlled the money supply sufficiently to achieve some moderation of inflation despite the huge deficits, but we have paid for that with almost 10 percent unemployment and no economic growth.

A simple look at history and at the projected deficit for the next two years suggests very strongly that we must either act to eliminate the deficit or we must be prepared for more years of zero economic growth accompanied by either extreme levels of unemployment or extreme rates of inflation. Who among us would willingly accept either of these alternatives?

BALANCING THE BUDGET

If we are unwilling to accept the almost inevitable economic outcome of these continued deficits, if we would truly like to return the country to the growth rates, inflation rates and unemployment rates which we had for 17 years, then we must be prepared to make some very painful budget decisions.

We must start with the recognition that there is no easy way to balance the budget. Part of our society is demanding that we balance the budget by increasing taxes. Another part is demanding that we balance the budget by cutting spending. Some are demanding that we increase taxes only on the "rich". Others are demanding that we hold Social Security sacred and that we not tamper with either the tax or the benefits. Others are demanding that we cut any expenses except welfare. Others are demanding that we cut any expense except defense. It is time that we face the facts that none of these solutions is possible.

Our current expenditures exceed our income by 27%! To balance the budget entirely by increasing revenues would require the equivalent of a 27% surcharge on every single source of income that the federal government has. For example, it would take a 27% increase in every corporate tax, every personal income tax, Social Security taxes, Medicare payments by individuals, excise taxes, tariffs, contributions by federal employees to their retirement funds—every source of federal revenue. If Social Security taxes were exempt from the increase, every other form of income would have to go up 42% to bring the budget into balance. The deficit is simply too big to be eliminated entirely by tax increases, the brunt of which would have to be borne almost entirely by the hard working, income producing middle class. (Almost 60% of the personal income taxes and over 80% of the personal Social Security tax is paid by families with adjusted gross income of less than $40,000.)

Neither can the budget be balanced simply by cutting expenditures. To do so would require a 21% reduction in every single item of federal expenditure, including Social Security payments, welfare payments, Medicare, defense, farm subsidies, federal pensions, food stamps and even interest on the national debt. If Social Security and Medicare were exempt from the cuts, we would need a 30% cut in all other expenditures. If defense and Social Security were both exempt, the cuts in all other payments and service would have to be about 40%. It simply isn't possible to balance the budget entirely by cutting spending, much less to balance it by cutting some kinds of spending and exempting other kinds.

Does all this mean that the situation is hopeless? Are we, in fact, already condemned to a stagnant economy with 10% or higher unemployment and double digit inflation? Not necessarily, but the problem will not be solved easily and it will not be solved by partisanship or demagoguery. It will be solved only by a public determination to face facts and share the pain. It will require a willingness on the part of individuals, corporations and the public to pay higher taxes and an equal willingness on the part of government beneficiaries to give up some of their income. A budget that is out of balance by more than 25% can still be balanced without confiscatory taxation or disastrous spending cuts. For example, to recover half of the deficit through higher taxes would require about a 12½% increase in every form of government revenue. That would be painful, but not unbearable. To recover half the deficits through spending cuts at the same time would require a 10% cut in every single federal expenditure including Social Security and defense. Those cuts would be painful but they are less severe than the cuts which many hard working Americans have had to make because of unemployment, reduced work weeks and "give-backs." Every citizen of the country would have to make some sacrifice in the short-term. It would be painful for everyone, but it might well be worth it.

Imagine what would happen to our economy if long-term interest rates again dropped to 5%. The yen and mark would return to normal exchange values versus the dollar. Our exports would increase, imports would decline, and more jobs would be created in this country. Young people could afford the mortgages to buy houses and furniture and appliances. Lower interest rates alone would cut the deficit by 20% because of lower interest payments on the federal debt. Lower inflation would cut expenditures and faster economic growth would stimulate revenues. The size of the increase in taxes and the cuts in expenditures could be quickly reduced. History suggests that over a period of a few years, economic growth would return to healthy levels, inflation would virtually disappear and every American who wanted to work would be able to find a job.

Don't we, in fact, owe this to our children?●

INTERNATIONAL LAW

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in the continuing and complex debate now abroad in the Nation respecting the proper role of international law in the development of American foreign policy, one is heartened and encouraged to find in the work of Richard N. Gardner calming wisdom and precise scholarship.

Richard Gardner is Henry L. Moses professor of international law and international law at Columbia University, and counsel to the law firm of Coudert Bros. He has served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, from 1961 to 1965, and as U.S. Ambassador to Italy, from 1977 to 1981.

He is, therefore, that rare combination of legal scholar and accomplished diplomat. Accordingly, he brings to discussions of the rule of law in world affairs an especial competence borne of practical experience.

In the current number of Trialogue, Ambassador Gardner brings this expertise to bear in an article he has written entitled "Sovereignty and Intervention: A Challenge of Law-Making for the Industrialized Democracies."

The essay addresses recent events in Grenada and Central America in the context of how certain American policies, undertaken without proper consideration of international law, has led to our country's political isolation—even from thse industrialized democracies with whom we have most in common and with whom we most need to act in concert.

I commend Professor Gardner's work to the attention of the Senate, and urge that Senators read this article with the care it warrants.

Mr. President, I ask that Professor Gardner's essay be printed in the RECORD.

The essay follows:

A CHALLENGE OF LAW MAKING FOR THE INDUSTRIALIZED DEMOCRACIES

(By Richard N. Gardner)

The controversy over the U.S. military action in Grenada is of the deepest significance for the trilateral countries of Western Europe, North America and Japan for two reasons. One is obvious; the other has been almost totally ignored.

The obvious reason is the political cost of the unprecedented isolation of the United States from its allies and friends on a military action deemed in the national interest by the American government and overwhelmingly supported by the American people. When the U.N. General Assembly voted by 108 to 27 abstentions on November 2, 1983, to "deplore" the occupation of Grenada as a "flagrant violation of international law," the United States could not muster a negative vote from a single trilateral country. Only Israel, El Salvador and six small Caribbean countries joined the United States in opposition. The United Kingdom, Canada, Germany, Belgium and Japan abstained. France, Italy, The Netherlands, Norway, Spain and Portugal all voted to deplore the U.S. action.

The less obvious significance of Grenada is the confusion it revealed among trilateral governments and leaders of public opinion over a question of central importance to the solidarity and survival of the trilateral countries: Just what legal and moral principles governing the use of armed forces are the trilateral countries prepared to live by and ask others to live by at this point in the nuclear age?

It is not a new question, nor an easy one. It is a question that was raised at the time of U.S. military actions in the Cuban missile crisis, in the Dominican Republic, and in Vietnam; by the Soviet military actions in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Afghanistan and Soviet interference in Poland; by Soviet and Cuban interventions in Central America; by Israel's raid on Entebbe, its invasion of Lebanon and its attack on Iraq's nuclear reactor; by the Argentine-British conflict in the Falklands; by French military actions in Africa; and by Chinese and Vietnamese attacks upon their neighbors. It arises today in El Salvador and Nicaragua. And it will undoubtedly arise in unforeseen ways in the years ahead.

But let us begin with Grenada. When armed forces of the United States occupied Grenada on October 25, 1983, accompanied by forces from six English-speaking Caribbean countries, the avowed purpose was to protect American citizens, restore order and liberate the country from Soviet-Cuban domination.

The military action of the United States was triggered by the murder on October 19 of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and other elected leaders by a militant communist faction led by Deputy Prime Minister Bernard Coard, an event accompanied by civil strife and the collapse of government authority. The United States declared that it acted in response to two requests for assistance: a formal request on October 23 from the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS), a regional grouping of seven Caribbean mini-states, and a confidential appeal from the Governor-General of Grenada as the sole remaining source of lawful government authority.[1]

Speaking in the United Nations Security Council on October 27, U.S. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick emphasized that Cuban and Soviet intervention in the internal affairs of Grenada was a major factor in the American decision. "Grenada's internal affairs," she said, "had fallen under the permanent intervention of one neighboring and one remote tyranny." Ambassador Kirkpatrick added that the U.S. action was justified by a "unique combination of circumstances" that included "danger to innocent United States nationals, the absence of a minimally responsible government in Grenada and the danger posed to the OECS by the relatively awesome military might that those responsible for the murder of the Bishop Government now had at their disposal."

"The United States response," she concluded, "was fully compatible with relevant international laws and practice." [2]

If this was the American justification for its action in Grenada, on what basis could the U.N. General Assembly find that the same action was a "flagrant violation of international law?" And why did so many leaders of public opinion in the industrialized democracies—quite a few in the United States itself—rush to the judgement expressed by the Times of London: "There is no getting around the fact that the United States and its Caribbean allies have committed an act of aggression against Grenada. They are in breach of international law and of the Charter of the U.N."

Clearly one explanation for these divergent judgements was lack of agreement on the facts. Were American citizens really in danger? Were the "invitations" by the Governor-General of Grenada and the OECS spontaneous—or made under pressure from the U.S.? Were those who overthrew the Bishop government really acting on behalf of the Soviet Union or Cuba to destroy the independence of the country? Did the Soviet-Cuban military build-up in Grenada constitute an imminent danger to the security of Grenada's tiny and defenseless neighbors? Was the purpose of the U.S.-led occupying forces exclusively to restore order and asssure the free exercise of sovereignty by the people of Grenada—or was it to impose a government to the liking of the United States? Finally, would the occupying forces really leave once order was restored and the conditions for free elections assured?

It is not my purpose in this essay to resolve these factual issues. Authoritative judgements on them, in any event, are difficult to make now on the basis of publicly available evidence. I will only note in passing that if the trilateral countries failed to support the United States because they disbelieved the U.S. version of events, this in itself is a commentary on the state of trust and confidence between countries that are supposed to be allies and close friends. The trilateral countries were not prepared, to put it mildly, "to give the U.S. the benefit of the doubt."

It would be even more ominous for their future relations, however, if the trilateral countries were in fundamental disagreement over the principles to be applied in judging the legality and morality of the use of armed force by themselves or other nations. If that should be the case, it would place in doubt one of the premises of the trilateral concept—that there is, in fact, a real community of industrialized democracies capable of common action based on shared concepts not only of national interest, but of fundamental human values.[3]

The rules of international law governing the use of force may be found in treaties and in international customary law, that is the rules nations follow in practice out of a sense of legal obligation. The most authoritative statements of the rules are to be found in the following provisions of the United Nations Charter:

All members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered. (Article 2(3)).

All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations. (Article 2(4)).

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the United Nations . . . (Article 51).

Another source of applicable law is the Charter of the Organization of American States, which declares in Article 15: No state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other state.

Although the OAS formulation set forth above does not appear in the U.N. Charter, the General Assembly has adopted the identical language in a resolution in 1970 purporting to be an authoritative interpretation of the U.N. Charter, the Declaration of Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation Among States in Accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

The search for principles to govern the use of armed force does not end, however, with the recitation of those broad propositions. International constitutions are not self-interpretating any more than national constitutions—nor are phrases like "armed attack," "self-defense" or "intervention" any more self-explanatory than "cruel and unusual punishments," "interstate commerce" or "due process of law." The process of interpretation requires sophisticated human judgement, which means at a minimum that interpretation of any single provision must take into account other provisions of the same document, the purposes of the international instrument as a whole, the drafting history, subsequent state practice and the applicability of rules of customary international law, possibly co-existing with the international agreement. Moreover, careful judgement must be used in the application of broad constitutional provisions in a variety of unique instances, many of which could not have been foreseen when the international constitution was drafted. As Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once put it: "General principles do not decide concrete cases."

The simple truth is that international law on this subject is far from clear, as evidenced by the widespread disagreement between government decision-makers and respected scholars both within and between nations. As everyone knows, international law differs from domestic law in that there is no court of compulsory jurisdiction for its authoritative interpretation, nor is there a legislature to adjust the law to changing circumstances or a police force to secure universal enforcement. This does not necessarily mean that international law does not exist; there are mutual restraints and reciprocal concessions embodied in treaties and customary international law that nations choose to regard as legally binding out of perceived self-interest. Indeed, on a large number of subjects ranging from the Law of the Sea to diplomatic immunity, the rules of international law are observed by almost all nations almost all of the time. But clearly the interpretation of these rules in the decentralized international system is a more difficult matter than in the domestic legal order, particularly when we are dealing with an issue like the use of force which touches vital national interests. What we are really talking about is "word politics"[4] between nations—a struggle to shape norms to govern national behavior in support of certain national interests and values.

The challenge to trilateral countries is one of creative and purposeful international law-making—among themselves as a kind of "law-bloc"—and with other members of the international community. This means, first of all, looking carefully at those various formulations governing the use of armed force that have some basis of support in contemporary international law and deciding which ones should be espoused or rejected in the interest of promoting the values the trilateral countries share—among which are certainly those of peace, justice, national self-determination, and human rights.

A second stage would be a concerted effort—now so notably lacking—to observe these formulations in their own behavior and to press for their wider recognition through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy. What these formulations might be, at least in barest outline, I shall suggest in a moment.

CHALLENGES TO A RULE OF LAW APPROACH

There are, however, a number of very fundamental objections to this "rule of law" approach. The starkest objection comes from those who believe, as the Wall Street Journal suggested in the aftermath of Grenada, that international law simply does not exist. A variant of this view would be that although international law exists in the majority of international situations, it does not exist, or does not apply when armed force is used by nations in what they conceive to be their supreme national interest. No less a figure than Dean Acheson drew that conclusion at the time of the U.S. quarantine of Cuba in 1962:

I must conclude that the propriety of the Cuban quarantine is not a legal issue. The power, position and prestige of the United States had been challenged by another state; and laws simply does not deal with such questions of ultimate power—power that comes close to the sources of sovereignty . . . The survival of states is not a matter of law.[5]

This statement has powerful appeal in an age when the Soviet Union and its allies have violated traditional international law principles with impunity—and when nations like Iran, Libya and Syria have raised terrorism to the level of state practice. But do we really want to take the view that there are no legal rules applicable to judge the actions of the Soviet Union and its allies, or the smaller terrorist nations, which threaten the safety of free nations and the achievement of a decent world order? We would do well to remember the wise observation of one of Britain's greatest international lawyers, J. L. Brierly: "The ultimate explanation of the binding force of all law is that man, whether he is a single individual or whether he is associated with other men in a state, is constrained, so far he is a reasonable being, to believe that order and not chaos is the governing principle of the world in which he has to live." [6]

In the nuclear age, it is precisely in dangerous confrontations of power that some ground rules are needed to preserve "order" and avert "chaos." A conclusion that "no law" is applicable would generally serve the interests of the Soviet Union and other challengers to the peace of free nations; it would create even more uncertainty and instability than we already have. There is no nation that denies the existence of international law, and all feel constrained to find legal justifications for their behavior. It is surely better to have nations arguing over what international law is than to assert that no international law applies at all.

I spoke earlier of "international law and morality." International law often codifies national interest and convenience, as in the Law of the Sea. In the sensitive area of the use of armed force, it seeks to codify morality as well. But it is precisely here that we come to a second fundamental objection to the "rule of law" approach: May there not be exceptional situations where the law may be disregarded if necessary to achieve some greater good? In real life, we all recognize extreme situations where violating the law may be appropriate to achieve some valid purpose—e.g., going through a red light to take an injured person to the hospital for urgent medical treatment.

Moreover, where traditional international law fails to take account of new realities and cannot be changed through negotiation and diplomacy, there may be exceptional situations where "law-making" through new state practice requires some temporary "law-breaking." A successful example of this phenomenon was the Truman Proclamation of 1945 taking jurisdiction over the resources of the continental shelf, a unilateral action that "broke" the old law before the new legal principle was "made" by general acceptance. Nevertheless, if we are to accept violations of traditional rules in exceptional cases, we should carefully consider whether the consequences are beneficial not just for the acting country, but for the majority of mankind as a whole—and whether the value of the objective being served outweighs the damage that the unilateral change in the rules may do to the future conduct of international relations. I do not suggest that this legal-moral calculation is an easy one. But I do reject the notion that in international affairs the end always justifies the means, a proposition that is readily available to totalitarian powers, as well as to free nations.

There is yet another objection to the "rule of law" approach, from those who argue that the rules of international law, particularly those governing the use of armed force, are capable of almost any interpretation, and should simply be manipulated by nations in each case to achieve whatever foreign policy goals seems valid at the moment. But the U.N. Charter and other sources of international law cannot be treated as pieces of India rubber to be stretched one way and then another in light of the short-term political necessities of each situation. There has to be some continuity in our day-to-day interpretation. If we "bend" the principles to fit one case, we must be willing to live with the new configuration in the next. The Soviet Union cannot very well be denied the same freedom to resort to force which the United States claims through "liberal interpretations" of existing norms. As Justice Robert Jackson once put it in a domestic context:

A military order, however unconstitutional, is not apt to last longer than the military emergency . . . But once a judicial opinion rationalizes such an order to show that it conforms to the Constitution, or rather rationalizes the Constitution to show that the Constitution sanctions such an order, the Court for all time has validated the principle . . . The principle then lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need.[7]

Yet another challenge to the "rule of law" approach comes from the believers in "spheres of influence." According to this view, the United States must be conceded the same freedom to defend its interests in Latin America as the Soviet Union claims in Eastern Europe. In other words, accept the Brezhnev doctrine of limited sovereignty for Eastern Europe in return for a "reverse" Brezhnev doctrine of limited sovereignty for Latin America, with perhaps other such doctrines for China, Vietnam, Britain, France, Japan and other countries in areas of historic interest to them.

It scarcely needs emphasis that this approach does violence to the principles of sovereign equality and self-determination embodied in the United Nations Charter and other treaties in force, and that it would never be accepted by the small nations of the world, least of all by those in the "spheres of influence" that are principally at issue. Nor is such a concept likely to appeal to the citizens of the United States and other industrialized democracies, most of whom profess a principled concern for freedom and human rights in all parts of the world, from Poland and Grenada to Tibet and Cambodia.

A similar challenge to the "rule of law" approach might be described as a rough and ready theory of "reciprocity." It is a principle well-recognized in the common law—and perhaps more generally in all legal systems—that when one party violates a material provision in a contract, the other party is relieved of its obligations under the same instrument. It is argued by analogy that as long as the Soviet Union and other totalitarian powers persistently violate the norms laid down in the Charter and other sources of international law, the United States and other free nations must have the right to do so when necessary to defend their interests. To quote Dean Acheson again: "We must never forget that between an opponent who is prepared to use force to gain his end and one who is not prepared to use force to defend his interests—the former is usually the winner." [8]

International law clearly permits the United States to refuse to perform its commitments in a bilateral agreement with the Soviet Union if the Soviet Union has breached a material provision of that same agreement. It may also permit the United States to take broader measures against the Soviet Union—measures that might otherwise be considered illegal—in response to Soviet violations of international law directed against the United States. But it is quite another thing to claim that the United States should be released from its obligations to innocent third countries because the Soviet Union is disobeying the rules.

The concept that we must be free to "fight fire with fire" has undoubted political appeal and certainly would make it easier for the industrialized democracies to defend their security interests in particular situations. But if the trilateral countries accept the Soviet standard of international behavior as their own, do they then forfeit any claim before the rest of the world to stand on a higher plane of morality? Do they abandon all legal restraints on the use of force or only some, and do they cast aside the restraints on forcible intervention everywhere or only in countries where the rules have already been violated by their adversaries? A "tit-for-tat" rejection of legal restraints on the use of force—"you invaded Afghanistan so we can invade anyone we like"—will encounter violent opposition from almost everyone but the superpowers and will quickly bring the standards of international behavior down to the lowest common denominator. As I shall suggest in a moment, most of the benefits of the "reciprocity" approach can be achieved with less cost to the trilateral countries by a judicious use of the concept of "self-defense" consistently with respect for international law.

In this catalogue of challenges to a "rule of law" approach there is one, however, that merits more sympathetic consideration. This is the view that reads as interdependent and correlative the provisions of the U.N. charter restraining the use of force by member states and the provisions of the Charter placing on the United Nations the duty to establish international peace and justice. With the frustration of the Charter system for collective security and the peaceful settlement of disputes, it is argued, the member states must recover their pre-existing freedom of action to protect their interests by means of individual or collective self-help. As Professor Arthur Goodhart of Oxford put it during the Suez crisis of 1956: "The renunciation of the use of force in Article 2(4) is not of an absolute character, but is dependent on the proper enforcement of international order by the United Nations." If a different view were accepted, he argued, U.N. members would be obliged to stand idly by in the face of the most extreme violations of their rights and "membership in the United Nations would be a source of danger and of weakness to the law-abiding nations." [9]

This "frustration of Charter purposes" concept, however, still leaves us with some of the same problems that we found with the other challenges to a "rule of law" approach. If Article 2(4) of the Charter is set aside, what forms are then applicable? To abandon all restraints in the Charter because of the U.N.'s weakness would serve neither peace nor justice, nor would it advance the cause of rebuilding the U.N.'s collective processes. At the same time, there is merit in the view than the Charter restraints on the use of force must be interpreted differently in today's world than they would have been in the world envisaged at San Francisco. How this might be done is the question to which we now turn.

ELEMENTS OF A RULE OF LAW APPROACH

If it is in the interest of the industrialized democracies, subject to the qualifications noted above, to follow a "rule of law" approach to the use of armed force, what should be the applicable legal principles? Volumes of learned scholarship have been written on this enormously difficult and complex subject. What follows is a brief review of five concepts of varying degrees of persuasiveness from which the trilateral countries will need to fashion a common approach:

Self-defense: the United Nations Charter codifies "the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the United Nations." There is general agreement in the international community that this gives a nation the right to use force when its territory or its armed forces are attacked or when an attack is made on the territory or armed forces of another nation to which it is bound in a collective self-defense arrangement like NATO.

There are some specific questions about the self-defense concept, however, that are more difficult to resolve. For example: Can the concept of self-defense be stretched to legitimize a use of force in anticipation of an "armed attack?" In the Cuban missile crisis, the United States deliberately declined to use "anticipatory self-defense" as a justification for the quarantine of Cuba, and with good reason. If the deployment of Soviet missiles in Cuba could provide a legal basis for a blockade of Cuba in 1962, could not the Soviet Union use "anticipatory self-defense" to justify forcible action to stop the deployment of the Pershing and cruise missiles in Europe in 1984? It would be a dangerous doctrine, particularly in an age of nuclear weapons, to say that the mere deployment and readying of weapons justified the preemptive use of force by others. Yet international law before the U.N. Charter did recognize the right of anticipatory self-defense when the "necessity of that self-defense is instant, overwhelming, and leaving no choice of means, and no moment for deliberation." [10] It is doubtful that the U.N. Charter was intended to deny a nation the right to defend itself against an armed attack that was already underway. Where to draw the line between permissible response to an imminent attack and impermissible response against the readying of weapons will not always be easy, but the principle seems clear enough and finds support in existing practice. Israel, for example, received no support in the United Nations for its preemptive strike against Iraq's nuclear reactor in 1981, but it received widespread support (and no U.N. condemnation) when it began hostilities in 1967 after President Nassar blockaded the Gulf of Aquaba.

Another question concerns self-defense in the face of "indirect aggression." In today's world, an "armed attack" can occur not only through the marching of troops or the launching of weapons across borders, but by the forcible seizure of power within one country by persons acting as agents of another country with the aim of destroying the first country's independence. This would suggest that "collective self-defense" should also embrace military action to defend the freedom and independence of a country that is being subjected to a previous indirect aggression by others. Putting it another way, "counter-intervention" in response to a prior illegal intervention should not be regarded as illegal provided it has as its motive and actual consequence the preservation of the freedom and independence of the people on whose behalf the "counter-intervention" is carried out. John Stuart Mill was an advocate of this principle as far back as 1848 in an eloquent passage that has particular application today:

The doctrine of non-intervention, to be a legitimate principle of morality, must be accepted by all governments. The despots must consent to be bound by it as well as the free states. Unless they do, the profession of it by free countries comes but to this miserable issue: that the wrong side may help the wrong but the right must not help the right. Intervention to enforce non-intervention is always rightful, always moral, if not always prudent.

Since the first Hague conference in 1899, the international community has sought to develop rules of warfare to limit the destructiveness of conflicts and particularly the damage to innocent civilians. When armed force is used in self-defense or under any other legal theory, therefore, there is not only the question of when force may be used, but how it is used. One principle of continued vitality is that of "military necessity"—that is, a use of force in self-defense or on some other basis should be limited so far as possible to military objectives. No doubt this is a difficult principle to apply in the nuclear age; yet in its humane purpose it is a principle that merits support from the community of nations.

Protection of Nationals: The United States and other trilateral countries have long asserted a right to use force on the territory of another nation to protect their nationals from an imminent threat of injury where the territorial sovereign was unable or unwilling to protect them. The U.S.-Belgian rescue effort in the Congo in 1964. Israel's raid on Entebbe, and the initial phase of the American landings in the Dominican Republic in 1965 and in Grenada all relied on this principle. To avoid abuse of the concept, it is generally conceded that the measures taken must be strictly confined to the purpose of protection—thus there would be no justification in occupying a country after endangered citizens had been removed. Most developing countries still challenge this legal concept, even when so strictly limited. Yet it seems evident that the industralized democracies should continue to support it in an age where terrorist acts and the collapse of civil authority are all too frequent occurrences.

Military Assistance Upon Request: Traditional international law has recognized the right of one country to give military assistance to another at the latter's request, including the deployment of armed forces on its territory. It is still a widely held view that it is legal to assist the established government in a civil war situation, but not the insurgent group, at least not until the insurgents have become sufficiently established that other countries may appropriately grant them belligerent status. But this whole question of assistance upon request and intervention in civil wars is one of the most controversial areas of international law, with the Soviet Union, Cuba, and many developing countries challenging the traditional customary law rule and insisting on a right to support "wars of national liberation" against established governments. Here is an area where the U.N. Charter is silent and the practice of states offers no clear guide for judgement, for the evident reason that no clear consensus exists within the international community.

It seems clear that the trilateral countries have a common interest in supporting the traditional international law rule prohibiting outside military support on behalf of revolutionary movements seeking to overthrow existing governments. They also have a common interest in affirming the right to provide military support to established governments defending themselves against a foreign-supported revolution. A closer question for the trilateral countries is whether, in the absence of any foreign intervention whatsoever, they should continue to assert a right to assist established governments to put down indigenous revolutionary movements. One problem with this traditional doctrine is that it provides ready justification for the use of armed force by the United States and other trilateral countries in support of any government, no matter how dictatorial or unpopular, to help it suppress popular forces seeking political and social reform. Moreover, it may help the Soviet Union to justify its uses of force to achieve the permanent incorporation into the Soviet orbit of any country which has once been taken over by a Soviet-supported communist coup. Soviet troops went into Hungary and Afghanistan, after all, in response to "requests" by pro-Soviet leaders falsely purporting to speak for the legitimate government of the country. Had they gone into Poland, they could probably have produced a request from General Jaruzelski.

On the other hand, military assistance upon request aimed merely at the restoration of law and order and not at the suppression of an indigenous revolutionary movement would seem to offer less problems as a legal concept for the trilateral countries and others. Here again, it will not always be easy to draw the line.

Regional Action: Article 52 of the United Nations Charter permits regional organizations to deal with "such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action," provided that their activities "are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations." Article 53 further provides that no "enforcement action" shall be taken by regional organizations without the authorization of the Security Council.

The United States has sought to justify as a legitimate use of regional peace-keeping the OAS-authorized quarantine of Cuba in 1962 and the OAS-authorized peace force which occupied the Dominican Republic in 1965 after the collapse of order in that country. It has also sought to justify the occupation of Grenada as a valid regional peacekeeping effort by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States. In the Dominican and Grenada cases, the United States argued that no "enforcement action" requiring Security Council approval was involved, since force was not being exercised against the will of a state, but only to maintain order after the collapse of government authority. In the Cuban quarantine, the U.S. argued that there was no "enforcement action" because the members of the OAS acted pursuant to a recommendation rather than a mandatory decision—a questionable theory to say the least, since certainly there was "enforcement" of the blockade against the ships of the Soviet Union and other countries.

It is not clear that the concept of regional peacekeeping adds to the uses of force that would otherwise be legally available to individual countries. Article 52 requires that actions by regional agencies must be consistent with United Nations principles. One of those principles is the prohibition in Article 2(4) of the use of force against the "territorial integrity of political independence of any state." Uses of force that would be illegal if undertaken by a single nation are not validated therefore simply because they are undertaken by several states pursuant to recommendations by regional agencies. In the Grenada and Dominican Republic cases, reliance on the concept of regional action would require a demonstration that the "territorial integrity" or "political independence" of those nations was not violated. In short, the prohibition in Article 2(4) could be given a limited interpretation. But in that event, action by the United States alone would have been just as lawful (though less politically attractive) as action by the regional group.

"Humanitarian" or "Democratic" Intervention: Some scholars now argue that international law permits one or more countries to use force in the territory of another to put an end to human rights abuses or vindicate the rights of the people to democratic institutions. Indeed, Ambassador Kirkpatrick has used this argument to justify U.S. military support for the "Contras" seeking to overthrow the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.[11] The concept of "humanitarian" or "democratic" intervention is undeniably attractive when the world is faced with extreme situations such as Hitler's campaign of genocide against six million Jews or Idi Amin's wanton slaughter of his own countrymen. It is, however, a principle that finds little support in treaty law or the customary rules that derive from consistent state practice. It is also vulnerable to an obvious practical objection. Two thirds of the members of the international community are less than fully functioning democracies and at least one third engage in gross and persistent human rights violations. A legal principle that would authorize unilateral or collective intervention against such a large number of countries would be an invitation to an unrestrained world civil war—too threatening to international peace and stability to command broad support within the international community or by the trilateral countries themselves.

What is the application of the five concepts outlined above to the Grenada situation? If the facts as given by the United States government are accepted, the principle that force may be used to protect endangered citizens clearly justifies the initial Grenada landings. The continued occupation of Grenada once that purpose had been accomplished can be justified on the basis of the invitation by the Governor-General to put an end to foreign intervention and/or maintain domestic order, assuming the constitution of Grenada provides him with the necessary authority to issue such an invitation.

For the reasons given earlier, the concepts of "regional action" and "humanitarian" or "democratic" intervention are not good legal arguments for the Grenada action. But "collective self-defense" is a concept that can apply to Grenada. This is not the "anticipatory self-defense" of Grenada's neighbors, which would stretch the concept too far since no attack upon them was imminent. Rather it would be the murder of Bishop and the seizure of power by persons allegedly acting as agents of the Soviet Union or Cuba for the purpose of subordinating Grenada's sovereignty to one or both of those countries that could be regarded as a "use of force" against the political independence of Grenada, justifying a collective self-defense action by the United States and Grenada's neighbors. To put it another way, and assuming once again that the facts presented by the United States are accepted, the Soviet Union and Cuba "intervened" illegally in Grenada to suppress freedom; the United States lawfully "counter-intervened" with Grenada's neighbors to restore freedom. The use of force observed the requirement of military necessity since a genuine effort was made to avoid harm to innocent civilians.

This brief exposition of applicable legal theories,[12] simplified in the extreme for the purpose of brevity, may well raise more questions than it resolves. Some will challenge the validity of my necessarily abbreviated formulations and subjective judgments. Fair enough. The basic purpose of this essay is not to suggest that the answers to these questions are clear, but rather that the trilateral countries should accord high priority in thinking about them at senior levels of government in an effort to develop a trilateral consensus.

The Soviet Union and its allies in the developing world are actively promoting legal doctrines to serve their interests in international fora like the United Nations, in their bilateral diplomacy and in their unilateral official pronouncements. Their purpose is obvious—to prohibit all "imperialist interventions" by the trilateral countries while legitimizing all Soviet-sponsored uses of armed force in support of "wars of national liberation." If the trilateral countries wish to shape a world order conducive to the promotion of peace and freedom, they will need in their turn to develop a more unified and purposeful approach on these questions than they have thus far.

A trilateral report on the international law of armed force, written by scholars from Western Europe, North America and Japan, on the basis of broad consultation with governmental and private authorities throughout the world could be a useful first step toward achieving some consensus on an issue of central importance to the industrialized democracies and all other free nations.

[3] The issue raised is when the use of force is legal and moral, not when it serves the national interest. The two issues should be clearly distinguished: There may be cases where the use of armed force by one or more of the trilateral countries would find a clear basis in law and morality but would be politically inexpedient. Conversely, a use of force may be politically expedient but neither legal nor moral.

[12] In the interest of brevity, there has been no discussion of a sixth possible justification for the use of armed force—reprisal by one nation against the illegal action of another. As a practical matter, this justification is not usually invoked in the major uses of armed force with which we have been concerned here. There is much disagreement, in any event, on whether and under what conditions armed reprisals are permitted under the U.N. Charter.●

THE KANSAS CITY STAR TRIBUTE TO FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN

● Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, many tributes have been paid to Harry S. Truman in honor of his centennial, which we are celebrating today. Among the finest efforts I have seen is the four-section tribute published by the Kansas City Star this past Sunday, May 6.

Numerous staff members of the Star, as well as scholars and contemporaries of Mr. Truman, including Clark M. Clifford, Dean Rusk, and former Representative Richard W. Bolling, contributed their best efforts to the sections.

There was superb original artwork and graphics and hand-tinted photographs. In all, the sections were an outstanding tribute, and I am sending copies to my House and Senate colleagues. I know they will enjoy reading them as much as I did.

The Star's publisher and chairman of the board, James H. Hale, and Pam Johnson, editor of the sections, are to be congratulated.●

REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD BOLAND'S RECEIPT OF THE NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION'S DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, Members of this body as well as the other body often receive recognition and awards for a multitude of different reasons, but there is one in particular which I think we should take note of today. On Wednesday, May 9, the distinguished chairman from the other body's Appropriations Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies, Congressman EDWARD BOLAND will be awarded the Distinguished Public Service Award by Dr. Edward Knapp, Director of the National Science Foundation.

As chairman of the Senate's Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies, I have been fortunate to work with Congressman BOLAND annually on our subcommittee's appropriations bills. As a result of these opportunities, I have come to admire and respect the Congressman from Massachusetts. He is one of the most knowledgeable and thoughtful Members in either body and is thoroughly deserving of this coveted award.

Mr. BOLAND was elected to the Congress in 1952 and has served continuously since then as the Representative of the Second Congressional District of Massachusetts. He is the ranking member of the House Appropriations Committee. As chairman of its HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee, he has given unwavering support to basic scientific research and education. "Even before the shock of sputnik," the Foundation's citation says, "he saw the necessity of improving the competence of teachers of science and mathematics, and of insuring the Nation's strength through fellowships for the education of scientists and engineers. For more than three decades, he has remained dedicated to excellence in science education."

A reception given in honor of Mr. BOLAND on May 8 at the National Air and Space Museum and the presentation to him of the Distinguished Public Service Award at the National Science Board dinner on May 9 are part of the National Science Foundation's Science Week activities. It is the intention of the Foundation during Science Week to convey to the public the importance of science in the American way of life.

Mr. President, I am sure that all Members of the Senate will join me in congratulating Mr. BOLAND on the Foundation's recognition of his outstanding contributions to the advancement of American science and education.●

JOHN M. WALSH: TENNESSEE'S SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF 1984

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, as many of my colleagues know May 6 to 12, 1984, has been proclaimed small business week, a period during which we honor our Nation's entrepreneurial leaders. It is fitting that we honor the men and women who are leaders in our small business community given the tremendous impact small firms continue to have on our economy.

On the national level, small businesses continue to set a sterling example of job creation in the marketplace. Between 1980 and 1982, small business produced 2,650,000 new jobs compared with a loss of 1,664,000 jobs in this same period for larger businesses. Small firms led employment growth during the initial stages of our economic recovery registering a net employment gain of 2.6 percent from September 1982 to September 1983. Larger firms only experienced an employment gain rate of 1.2 percent for this period.

In total, small business employs nearly 48 percent of the nonfarm work force in America. These firms contribute 42 percent of the sales and generate close to 38 percent of our country's gross national product.

This same business strength is evident at the State level. In Tennessee, there are approximately 83,000 business establishments. Of these, about 79,000 employ less than 100 workers. This small business community in Tennessee produces roughly half of our State's goods and services and contributes nearly 45 percent of the State's total payroll. Tennessee's small firms constitute 80 percent of the manufacturing companies in the State, nearly 100 percent of the construction, service, finance, insurance, and real estate firms in the State and over 60 percent of Tennessee's wholesale and retail operations.

Representing Tennessee's small firms as our small business person of the year for 1984 is John M. Walsh, president and owner of Porcelain Industries of Nashville, TN. Mr. Walsh and his firm exemplify many of the positive traits those of us on the small business committee have come to recognize as hallmarks of successful companies.

Porcelain Industries was established in 1956 in a small rented building. The firm got underway with initial capital totaling $4,000. Employment at this early stage included eight people. Over the years, Porcelain Industries has met numerous challenges in the marketplace, faced economic adversity and gone through significant changes in its basic manufacturing process. Yet, Mr. Walsh's company has come through these trials in stronger shape. The company has experienced a compounded annual employment growth rate of over 10 percent. The present work force stands at 110 persons. Firm sales have grown almost every year and stood at $6.2 million at the end of the last fiscal year.

Perhaps the most significant attribute displayed by Mr. Walsh's firm is the innovativeness he has displayed in his product. Procelain Industries manufactures component parts used in such products as barbecue grills, hot water heaters, gas stoves, kerosene heaters, and parts used in chemical and petrochemical industries. A trend setter in this industry, Mr. Walsh's firm introduced porcelain enamel cooking grids to the gas barbecue grill industry. The company was also the first to introduce porcelain-enameled woodburning stove mats. The company is also involved in the design of kerosene heaters.

Further evidence of the innovativeness displayed by Mr. Walsh and his workers can be seen in the installation of a new, highly efficient enamel furnace which cut the company's electrical costs by 30 percent. In addition, while other firms in this industry have experienced waste-water disposal problems, Porcelain Industries initiated a method of reusing water throughout its processing areas. This reduction in water usage has not only lowered operating costs, it has had a positive impact on the environment.

Mr. President, the history of John Walsh and Porcelain Industries serve as a reminder to us all of the many benefits generated by the small business community. I am proud to join in honoring John Walsh as Tennessee's Small Business Person of 1984.●

LAW DAY 1984

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I commend to the attention of the Senate, and the many readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a recent address by the attorney general of the State of New York, the Honorable Robert Abrams.

At the New York State Court of Appeals Law Day ceremony on May 1, Attorney General Abrams spoke to the timely subject of the importance of international law in the advancement and protection of human rights around the world.

It is an insightful and thoughtful presentation, and I ask that the complete text of this address be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The material follows:

HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE RULE OF LAW

(Remarks of Attorney General Robert Abrams, Law Day 1984)

Chief Judge Cook, Honorable Judges of the Court of Appeals, Governor Cuomo, Mr. Fales, ladies and gentlemen, a few weeks ago, in proclaiming May 1, 1984 as Law Day USA, President Reagan stated, "Without law, there can be no freedom, only chaos and disorder . . . [A]nd without freedom, law is but a cynical veneer for injustice and oppression."

This is a fitting observation for Law Day. It echoes a line in the preamble of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights: "[I]t is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law . . . " Simply put, laws exist to protect basic human rights, and without those rights, the rule of law has no meaning. As lawyers, we have dedicated ourselves to the rule of law and to the fundamental human rights it is meant to uphold, not only in this country, but in all parts of the world.

On Law Day it is also fitting to note just how fragile the rule of law is in the world today. At about the same time the President was issuing his Law Day proclamation, the United States government was notifying the International Court of Justice that it was withdrawing its consent to the Court's compulsory jurisdiction with respect to disputes with any Central American state or disputes arising out of events in Central America.

This event is without precedent in the 38 years since the United States agreed to submit itself to the World Court's jurisdiction, and casts a shadow over our celebrations today. It was precipitated, of course, by U.S. participation in the mining of Nicaraguan harbors and the intention of Nicaragua to bring an action before the Court charging that the United States had violated international law by this and other actions in support of anti-Sandinista insurgents.

This is an interesting legal issue over which reasonable men and women can disagree. For example, Ambassador Kirkpatrick, our government's chief representative before the United Nations and one of the Administration's most effective advocates, has asserted that the United States and its allies in Central America have a right to act in "individual and collective self-defense" against Nicaraguan aggression. Senator Goldwater, on the other hand, in a characteristically blunt letter to the Director of the CIA, has concluded that mining harbors in Nicaragua "is an act violating international law [and] an act of war."

Without choosing sides on this question one can go to the larger issue, namely: How this dispute ought to be resolved. If we have learned no other lesson in this century after the terrible cost of two world wars and countless smaller wars, it must be that disputes between nations are far better resolved in a court of law. That is precisely why the International Court of Justice was established, and why the United States agreed to accept its authority in 1946.

The recent events involving Central America raise two important questions that we—as lawyers—ought to examine.

They are whether the United States ought to assign any importance to the rule of law and human rights in formulating its foreign policy goals and, if so, what we as a nation are doing to promote these concepts.

There is no question that many countries honor human rights mainly in the breach. Human rights organizations report that more than 60 nations practice torture as an instrument of government power. Political killings are commonplace in many of these countries. The governments of many other nations are less brutal but no less effective in suppressing freedoms of speech, assembly and religious expression; the right to travel or emigrate; the right to work and share equitably in society's benefits; and the freedom to form free political parties and participate fully in government. Many of these governments are our adversaries in the world arena; many others are our friends and allies.

Those who oppose a strong human rights policy argue that it puts us at a competitive disadvantage with other nations—chiefly the Soviet Union and its allies—who play by different rules. They assert that it hinders our ability to meet vital security and economic needs; that it has a purely moral and very little political significance. To them, human rights is an occasionally useful propaganda tool to use against the Soviets, but not to criticize our allies.

In my view, these arguments overlook two important facts. First, our nation's dedication to the protection of basic rights and the rule of law is the one thing that separates us most fundamentally from the Soviet Union. There can be no dispute that the Soviet Union and what it represents present the most serious threat to our national interests. But this threat cannot just be measured in material terms of military power or economic resources; it is equally a threat represented by ideas and ideology. We must be as prepared to meet our adversary on the field of ideas as we are on the field of battle.

I could not articulate this notion as well as it has been stated by a distinguished American lawyer, Dean Thomas—Buergenthal of the Washington College of Law at American University, who sits on the Inter-American Court of Human Rights:

"A sound human rights policy provides the United States with an ideology that distinguishes us most clearly from the Soviet Union and seriously undercuts the ideological appeal of Communism. It is the only ideology, the only dream, if you will, that the people of the U.S. share with the vast majority of the people of the second and third worlds. The quest for human rights and human dignity is a phenomenon of contemporary life of universal dimensions and immense significance in the struggle between East and West. And those who do not grasp its significance do not know much about the world we live in and the forces that shape it."

Nor can we ignore the fact that in our shrinking world, the systematic deprivation of fundamental human rights, wherever it occurs, ultimately touches each of us.

As this State's chief legal officer, my responsibilities are purely domestic. But even in this position I have been confronted with the brutal effects of human rights violations in other parts of the world. Last year, I was asked by the government of El Salvador to certify the results of an autopsy examination performed by a coroner in New York on the remains of a body believed to be that of John Sullivan, an American journalist who was murdered in El Salvador in December, 1980. My agreement to make this certification was a condition imposed by the Salvadoran government to permit Mr. Sullivan's family to remove the body from that country. The autopsy confirmed that the body was that of Mr. Sullivan.

At about this time, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York issued a report of a mission it sent to El Salvador to examine the Salvadoran criminal justice system. The City Bar Association mission reported that there had been over 30,000 unsolved murders over a three year period in El Salvador, and that none was the subject of an investigation, let alone prosecution of those responsible, save a few isolated cases involving American citizens who happened to be among the victims. Having lent the good name and offices of the Attorney General of New York to an important aspect of the investigation of Mr. Sullivan's murder, I felt compelled to convey to the Salvadoran government the growing sense of frustration with which our legal community views events in that country.

Many of us in this room tonight are the sons and daughters or grandchildren of men and women who sought refuge in this country from the brutality of foreign governments. There are in the world today tens of millions of individuals who are victims of racial, religious or political persecution, of social or economic injustice, who aspire to join us in the United States. There is simply not room enough for everyone who wishes to come. Knowing that, how can we ignore their plight by failing to promote the protection of human rights throughout the world?

In short, the United States has both a moral and a pragmatic duty to protect and promote fundamental human rights throughout the world, and this ought to be one of the highest priorities of our foreign policy.

The remaining question is whether we—as a nation—are meeting that duty. What kind of example for the world have we set? What kind of leadership have we exercised?

Fundamental to protection of human rights is the rule of law, and I believe that one measure of our performance as a nation is what the United States has done to promote the rule of law throughout the world.

The basic instrument of human rights is of course the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 10, 1948. This act represented the first important step by the community of nations to articulate the fundamental rights of all individuals and implement the rule of law in all parts of the world. Like the United Nations itself, the Universal Declaration is a product of American leadership. It was borne of the Wilsonian idealism that marked America's entrance onto the world stage in the early part of this century. It is the embodiment of Franklin Roosevelt's "four essential human freedoms"—freedom of speech and expression, freedom to worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear. The purpose of the declaration was to establish "a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations" guaranteeing the full scope of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights.

It is a magnificent document, and the United States can rightly claim credit for its inspiration and its adoption. But the Univeral Declaration was never intended to be an end in itself. In the words of the U.S. Representative to the General Assembly when the Declaration was adopted, "It is not and does not purport to be a statement of law or of legal obligation." Rather, the Declaration was simply meant to be a first step towards the implementation of a set of binding legal principles to govern the conduct of nations.

The next essential step toward this goal was articulated in 1948, by John Foster Dulles, the American Delegate to the General Assembly, who stated: "I hope and believe this Assembly will endorse this Declaration [of Human Rights]. But we must not stop there. We must go on with the drafting of a convenant that will seek to translate human rights into law. . . ."

While the community of nations has largely followed this injunction, it is here that the United States record of inspiration and leadership has sadly and ironically broken down. Today, more than three decades after the adoption of the Universal Declaration, five treaties which are vital to the implementation of the rule of law throughout the world have yet to be ratified by the United States. It is an unfortunate record, and one which must be corrected if the United States is to take its rightful place among the nations of the world as the leading proponent of human rights and the rule of law.

I would like to briefly describe each of these treaties.

Two of them, the United Nations Convenant on Civil and Political Rights and the United Nations Convenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, were signed on behalf of the United States by President Carter on October 5, 1977 and transmitted to the Senate for its assent to ratification in 1978. The Civil and Political Rights Convenant establishes a minimum standard of conduct requiring all participating governments to respect fundamental civil rights, including equality, life, liberty and physical integrity, freedom of movement, fair and speedy trial of criminal charges, free expression, peaceful assembly, free association, and participation in public affairs. It forbids, torture, cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment, slavery, arbitrary arrest, double jeopardy, and imprisonment for debts. The Civil and Political Rights Covenant is, in essence, the international embodiment of our own Bill of Rights.

The Economic, Social and Cultural Rights Convenant requires governments to work to the full extent of their available resources to achieve for their inhabitants the rights to gainful employment, safe and healthy working conditions, trade union membership, social security, protection for the family, adequate food, housing and clothing, health care, and primary education. It does not purport to establish present rights, but sets aspirational goals that all nations should seek to realize progressively as their resources permit. It establishes governmental aims that are entirely consistent with social and economic policy goals followed by our country since the 1930's, and articulates international standards which our country ought to be working to achieve.

The two United Nations Convenants entered into force in 1976, have each been ratified by at least 59 countries, including every major Western nation except the United States.

A third unratified treaty is the American Convention on Human Rights, which was signed on behalf of the United States on June 1, 1977. It has been pending in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee since February 23, 1978. Like the Civil and Political Rights Covenant, it requires governments to respect and ensure the fundamental rights of individuals that are guaranteed by our own Bill of Rights. It also establishes an Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and an Inter-American Court of Human Rights. The court is composed of seven judges elected in an individual capacity with jurisdiction to hear cases submitted by the Commission and states that are parties to the treaty. It is a sad and unacceptable irony that a distinguished American lawyer has already been elected to serve on the Inter-American Court, Thomas Buergenthal, who was nominated by Costa Rica rather than his own country, which has not ratified the Convention.

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination is a fourth treaty unratified by the United States. It was signed on behalf of the United States on September 28, 1966, and has been pending before the Senate since February, 1978. It outlaws discrimination on the basis of race, color, descent or national or ethnic origin. The Convention requires nations to pursue a policy of eliminating such discrimination by refraining from discriminatory practices, guaranteeing equal protection of law, and providing remedies against discriminatory treatment.

The Racial Discrimination Convention is entirely consistent with the law and policy this country has followed over the last one hundred years through the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Civil Rights Acts of the 1960's. Like the two United Nations Covenants, the Racial Discrimination Convention has been ratified by every major Western nation except the United States.

The oldest of the five international human rights treaties not yet ratified by the United States is the most stunningly shameful example of our failure to lead the world toward the rule of law. It is the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, which was signed by President Truman on December 11, 1948. It was transmitted to the Senate for its assent to ratification on June 16, 1949, and has been awaiting action for nearly 35 years.

The Genocide Convention was inspired by the Holocaust and the shocking discovery that many of the most horrible acts presented to the Nuremberg Tribunal were not in fact legally prohibited by the law of nations. The Convention affirms that genocide "whether committed in time of peace or in time of war" is a crime under international law. It prohibits specified acts committed "with intent to destroy . . . a national, ethnical, racial or religious group," and provides that no individual guilty of genocide would be immune from punishment.

Eighty-six Nations have ratified the Genocide Convention, including every democratic country in the world except the United States. As Chief Justice Earl Warren stated in 1968, on the twentieth anniversary of the Convention, "We as a nation should have been the first to ratify the Genocide Convention. . . instead, we may be near the last."

No treaty or convention ranks higher than the Genocide Convention as a symbol of the commitment of the world community to the rule of law and civilized behavior by nations. In his 1970 report recommending ratification of the Genocide Convention, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said:

"I am convinced that the American people together with all the peoples of the world will hail United States ratification of this convention as a concrete example of our dedication to safeguarding human rights and basic freedoms."

Today, fourteen years after those words were spoken, the people of the world can only see America's continuing failure to ratify the Genocide Convention as a tragic betrayal of its own ideals.

None of these treaties will change the world overnight. Words alone cannot feed the hungry, clothe or shelter the poor and homeless, end discrimination or stop nations from brutalizing their own citizens. But, these five treaties give some reason to hope that some day these evils will be eliminated from the earth. One thing is certain: Any hope that the rule of law will one day govern the conduct of all nations is futile unless the United States ratifies these five basic treaties.

We, as lawyers, have a duty to help bring this about. None of the treaties should be controversial. They have all been the subject of extensive hearings in the United States Senate. Questions once raised relating to our sovereignty and the integrity of our Constitution and laws have long since been resolved. The American Bar Association, together with a multitude of individuals and organizations throughout the United States, has urged the ratification of all five treaties. Ratification of the Genocide Convention in particular is one of the legislative priorities of the American Bar Association, which has undertaken a special project to accomplish this at the earliest possible time.

As Americans, we have a responsibility to serve the principles of democracy, humanity and justice upon which our nation was established. As lawyers, we have a special responsibility to serve these principles by promoting the rule of law. I can think of no better way to meet this duty than joining together to urge the ratification of the five international human rights treaties now pending before the United States Senate.

The very words inscribed on the Liberty Bell are the words from Leviticus that refer to the teaching that all should have a fair and equal chance for freedom.

"And you shall proclaim liberty throughout the land and to all its inhabitants thereof."

Let us never fail to keep this ancient injunction, never more important that it is today throughout the world.●

PRAISING JUSTICE FRANCIS T. MURPHY AND FEDERATION OF NEW YORK STATE JUDGES CALLING FOR MORE PRISON CONSTRUCTION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, at some point during the debate on this budget bill, Senator SPECTER and I along with several of our colleagues, intend to raise a revenue neutral amendment to earmark $200 million in 1985 for much needed prison construction. First, however, there are three documents I would very much like my colleagues to review.

The first of these is the formal resolution of the largest judicial organization in the history of New York, the Federation of New York Judges. This resolution, issued on April 23, 1984, calls upon the judges of New York not only to impose severe sentences upon defendants "who, if at liberty, would be a threat to the lives of the men, women, and children" of the State, but also to impose such sentences "regardless of the existence of prisons sufficient in size or number to receive such prisoners."

Accompanying this resolution is the strong, forthright, and very correct statement of the Federation's President, Francis T. Murphy, Presiding Justice, Appellate Division, First Department. Justice Murphy states:

When the safety of the people • • • cannot be assured except by the severe punishment of those who brutalize them, then the prisons to which such defendants should be sent should be built.

Finally, the Justice Department's recent report—Prisoners 1983—tells us that last year 21,420 felons were released from State prisons, not because they were rehabilitated or had completed their sentence, but simply because we had run out of room for them.

Mr. President, I ask that the judges' resolution, Justice Murphy's statement, and tables 9 and 15—profiles of jail and prison crowding—and the "Summary of 1983 Prison Population" from the Justice Department report be printed in their entirety at the conclusion of these remarks.

We should all applaud Justice Murphy and the Federation of New York State Judges for their courageous and absolutely accurate statement and policy resolution. As they so rightly declare, the time to focus and force the crime issue is now.

The material follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE FEDERATION OF NEW YORK STATE JUDGES

The residences of people of this State having become barricaded places in which they live behind chained and bolted doors;

The streets having become the lawless marches of robbers, rapists and felons of every kind who victimize men, women and children;

The night having become the time for retreat by the lawful, and for invasion by the criminal;

And the fear of the law and the courts having been diminished by the true and common perception of a failing criminal justice system;

Now be it resolved by the Federation of New York State Judges, acting in defense of the liberty and safety of the people of this State, that:

The law of New York requires the imprisonment of every convicted defendant who, if at liberty, would be a threat to the lives of the men, women and children of this state.

The moral law, the oath of judicial office, and the Canons of Judicial Ethics require every judge to execute the law by sentencing such defendants to prison terms that will effectively punish them for the crimes that they have committed.

Accordingly, the Federation of New York State Judges calls upon every New York judge to continue to sentence such defendants to terms of imprisonment which, by their severity, will isolate them from the men, women and children they threaten.

Further, the Federation of New York State Judges resolves that such sentences should continue to be imposed regardless of the existence of prisons sufficient in size or number to receive such prisoners. When the safety of the people of this State cannot be assured except by the severe punishment of those who brutalize them, then the prisons to which such defendants should be sent should be built. Swift and severe punishment is the only defense against predators.

Statement of Presiding Justice Francis T. Murphy

Presiding Justice Francis T. Murphy of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, First Department, speaking as president of the Federation of New York State Judges, announced today that the Federation by formal resolution has called upon New York judges not only to impose severe sentences upon defendants "who, if at liberty, would be a threat to the lives of the men, women and children of this State", but to impose such sentences "regardless of the existence of prisons sufficient in size or number to receive such prisoners."

Presiding Justice Murphy stated: "When the safety of the people of this State cannot be assured except by the severe punishment of those who brutalize them, then the prisons to which such defendants should be sent should be built."

"No more essential duty of government exists than the protection of the lives of its people. Fail in this, and we fail in everything. Then take down the museums, dismantle the theatres, close the parks and beaches, shut the schools, the subways, and the hospitals, turn out the lights, let every decent person become his own keeper and lock himself in his apartment cell. Such a society is unthinkable, yet the one in which we now live was unthinkable only a generation ago. If then someone had said that in 1984 hundreds of thousands of apartment windows in New York City would be covered with metal gates, and that private security guards would patrol the lobbies, hallways and rooftops of apartment buildings, we would have thought him insane.

"We hear but do not listen to the ordinary man and woman. It is they who are the victims of crime, and they in their anguish have something of value to say.

"They tell us that their lives, burdened by personal problems involved in simply living, must be led in a society in which a brutal attack upon them by a robber would surprise no one. They tell us that they are denied the small pleasures of life—a morning's visit to a church or synagogue, an evening's stroll in summer by a husband and wife, a subway ride with their children to a park. They say that such a half life is not life at all. They tell us that criminals have taken the city, that crime has beaten government to its knees, that the moral passion for justice has been drained out of society and, in its place, there is an overwhelming sense of helplessness. They say that they fear that they have grown too used to crime, and they wonder whether society, for all its pretensions, has become pitiless.

"The ordinary man and woman are right, and everyone knows it because we are that man and woman.

"For at least 200 years the causes of crime and its prevention have been studied, yet prisons have multiplied and crimes have so increased in number and savagery that there is no crime that would shock anyone for longer than the life of the news story that reports it. As for rehabilitation of the criminal, there are no rehabilitative techniques, and no rehabilitative prisons. Looking back over the past two centuries, we see that science, as a new way of knowing, not only promised to augment man's power but dramatically delivered on that promise. The power it delivered, however, proved to be over nature only. It did not increase our power over ourselves to become better people. It has left man unchanged, sitting in the evening of his life in a warehouse filled with his technology.

"Society, therefore, is pressed to its ancient and only defense against the violent criminal, the inculcation in him of the fear of swift and severe punishment by a morally outraged people. No other road is open. Either we take that road now, or we will live in the sickly twilight of a soulless people too weak to drive predators out of their own house."

1983 Prison Population: A Summary

While the rate of increase in prison population during 1983 slowed to about half that of 1981 and 1982 (5.9% compared to 12.2% in 1981 and 12.0% in 1982), the number of inmates gained was approximately equal to the average annual growth during the preceding six years. The yearend 1983 population reached a new high of 438,830, nearly 93% of which was under the jurisdiction of State correctional systems. Males accounted for approximately 96% of the overall population.

Prison administrators and staff continued to grapple with a shortage of available housing capacity to accommodate the 1983 population. Correctional systems reported that:

The entire prison system in seven States (and all male penal facilities in one additional State) were operating under court order;

24 jurisdictions were operating one or more facilities under court order or consent decree, and 9 others had litigation pending;

18 States reported a total of nearly 8,100 sentenced prisoners held in local jails because of State prison crowding;

15 States reported 21,420 prisoners who received early release during 1983 because of crowding in State prisons;

State and Federal prison systems reported that, on the average, they were operating at about 110% of capacity; and,

1 in every 10 inmates was estimated to reside in a prison built before 1875; the average inmate resided in a prison nearly 40 years old.

In response to the dual demands to house inmates and to replace outdated facilities, substantial capital expenditures have been undertaken by correctional systems. During FY 82 and FY 83, State correctional systems reported more than $900 million in capital outlays and approximately $2.25 billion in bonds and other revenue-raising mechanisms to support capital improvements. Annual expenditures by State correctional systems during FY 83 were reported to be approaching $6 billion.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notifications which have been received. Any portion which is classified information has been deleted for publication, but is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The notifications follow:

DEFENSE SECURITY
ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, April 19, 1984.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding under separate cover Transmittal No. 84-42, concerning the Department of the Navy's proposed Letter of Offer to Korea for defense articles and services in excess of $14 million. Since most of the essential elements of this proposed sale are to remain classified, we will not notify the news media.

Sincerely,

GLENN A. RUDD,
Deputy Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 84-42—NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i)(U) Prospective purchaser: Korea.

(ii) Total estimated value: Total, $29 million.

(iii) Description of articles or services offered: A quantity of air-to-air missiles with spare parts, support equipment, a site survey, contractor technical assistance, missile maintenance training, publications, and documentation.

(iv)(U) Military Department: Navy (SBR).

(v)(U) Sales Commission, fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi)(U) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: See attached Annex.

(vii)(U) Section 28 Report: Included in report for quarter ending December 31, 1983.

(viii)(U) Date Report Delivered to Congress: April 19, 1984.

As defined in section 47(6) of the Arms Export Control Act.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

(U) This sale will contribute to the foreign policy objectives of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly country which has been and continues to be an impetus for modernization and progress in Eastern Asia. The sale of this equipment and support will enhance deterrence and contribute to the preservation of peace and stability on the Korean peninsula.

(U) The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

(U) Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel to Korea; however, one contractor representative will be required in Korea for nine months.

(U) There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

DEFENSE SECURITY
ASSISTANCE AGENCY,

CANADA—AIM-7M SPARROW MISSILES

The Government of Canada has requested the purchase of a quantity of 408 AIM-7M SPARROW missiles, related support and training equipment, spares, repair parts, publications, support, and training at an estimated cost of $113 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of Canada; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defenses of the Western Alliance.

The Government of Canada intends to use these AIM-7M SPARROW missiles on its CF-18 fighter aircraft.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The principal contractors will be the Raytheon Corporation of Lowell, Massachusetts, General Dynamics Corporation of Camden, Arkansas, and Hercules ABL of Cumberland, Maryland.

Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of one additional contractor representative to Canada for one year.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

ANDREW M. GREELEY

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, among the most eminent of American intellectual figures of the 20th century, few indeed have been so consistently impressive for the diversity of the fields of their accomplishment as Father Andrew M. Greeley.

Most widely known at present for his popular success as an author of four best-selling novels, Father Greeley has also established an enviable reputation as theologian, scholar, sociologist, teacher, journalist.

It happens also that the senior Senator from New York counts Father Greeley among his closest and most treasured friends. Having long admired Father Greeley for the breadth of his scholarship, the precision of his insight—and for the pleasure of his conversation when his full schedule permits—I am pleased to be able to share with my colleagues a story about this remarkable man that was published in Sunday's New York Times Magazine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of an article by Mark Harris be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The material follows:

[From the New York Times Magazine, May 6, 1984]

NOVELIST, JOURNALIST, SOCIOLOGIST, PRIEST—ANDREW GREELEY

(By Mark Harris)

Father Andrew M. Greeley owns three houses—a city house in Chicago, a beach house in Michigan and a winter house in Tucson, Ariz. "Not bad," said an Arizonan, "but why isn't he back in Chicago ministering to the faithful?"

"Yes," says Father Greeley, "People seem to take offense at that. They don't realize how hard it is to have three houses. I say, 'Hey, I work awfully hard, and if you don't believe that, look at my output. If it offends you that I seem to live a life of luxury, at least consider the fact that I don't have much time to enjoy it.' "

Chicagoan in Arizona, a self-described parish priest, Andrew Greeley has not ministered full time to a parish in 20 years. He wishes he could. In Tucson, he is a weekend priest, a sometime celebrant at mass. Around the world, he ministers to a parish of millions of readers. Canonically, he is a priest of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago officially detached to scholarship, teaching and writing.

Father Greeley has chosen to serve the church by communicating through his writings for 30 years, most spectacularly since 1981 through best-selling novels to several million readers, most of them Catholics. A startling characteristic of his novels has been their daring sexual frankness.

Suddenly rich, he has really never changed his style of life. He owned the houses before he wrote the novels. "Correction," says he, "the bank owns them." The summer house in Grand Beach, Mich., is a cottage. The "house" in Chicago is actually an apartment—"three small, perfectly plain rooms" on the 47th floor of the John Hancock Center. But isn't that one of the world's great buildings? "Yes," Father Greeley agrees, "but it's not one of the world's great apartments." He requires a residence in Arizona because he teaches there.

Novelist, priest, reporter, poet, newspaper columnist, Andrew Greeley is also a tenured professor of sociology at the University of Arizona in Tucson. He no longer accepts a salary. If the royalties of his books decline, he will resume taking a salary. "I didn't become a priest to make money," he says, "and I didn't write books to make money."

When he made his first million he gave it away.

Earlier this year, in the name of his mother and father, he pledged $850,000 to the University of Chicago for a chair in Roman Catholic studies. In the same giving mood, he endowed a lectureship of $150,000 to St. Mary of the Lake Seminary in Mundelein, Ill., where he had been ordained. There he had first tried writing, an effort the then-rector had greeted with: "You're not going to publish this, are you?" The seminary, he says, has yet to thank him. He smiles.

Father Greeley recognizes that many people suppose him to be "an embarrassment" to the Roman Catholic Church, but the church has never formally rebuked or punished him for anything he has said or written.

He has been widely accused of washing clerical linen in public over the course of four novels, the most recent of which, "Lord of the Dance," has just appeared. Well, he washes linen in public when he thinks it's dirty.

The example his critics chiefly cite is his 1981 novel "The Cardinal Sins" about a high churchman in deep financial fraud. In spite of Father Greeley's denials, many people have persisted in identifying the fictional churchman as Chicago's own John Cardinal Cody, with whom Father Greeley had often battled on several issues, among them his own role in the Chicago diocese. But Father Greeley contends that his principal opposition to the late Cardinal was substantially based upon the prelate's administrative policies—in particular, his closing of four inner-city schools.

At the time of Cardinal Cody's death in 1982, his financial affairs were under investigation by a Federal grand jury, a story first reported by The Chicago Sun-Times. Certain documents that Father Greeley has claimed in court were stolen from his private archives were reported in an article in The Chicago Lawyer to reveal a plan by him to expose the Cardinal. Father Greeley has described the principal document as being a novelist's "feelings, fantasies . . . late-night, sleepy musings in a hotel in Rome." He asserts the material was stolen by James Winters, managing editor of The Notre Dame Magazine, an alumni publication, who came upon it while researching an as-yet-unpublished article about Father Greeley. Mr. Winters, who claims he reviewed Father Greeley's files with his "full knowledge and consent," has filed a $3 million libel suit charging Father Greeley with damaging his reputation as a writer. The suit is currently pending in Cook County Court in Illinois. Father Greeley has in turn filed a $5.5 million suit against Mr. Winters for "invasion of privacy, alienation of property and constructive fraud."

Until recently, Father Greeley thought it impossible that the Chicago Archdiocese would ever summon him home, but the other day he received a friendly phone call from Joseph Cardinal Bernardin. "Nothing of substance," Father Greeley reports, but it ended a long silence between him and the Chicago hierarchy. "I think I'd easily be welcomed back into the Chicago diocese if I stopped writing novels. The past could be forgiven. The present could not be forgiven. And everybody's anxious about the future.

I visited Father Greeley at his house on a rugged mountainside in Arizona. He was in good health. He swims a mile a day in his private pool. He does not smoke. He was a teetotaller, too during the first 10 years of his priesthood, "but I started going to Rome and got corrupted by wine." His voice is resonant, agreeable—a big voice out of a big chest. Now and again he punctuates a serious point by dipping for a moment into brogue. Sometimes in the same tongue he plays the role of the leprechaun—the tricky old man who knows where the treasure is hidden. And why not? For he resembles the leprechaun, his eyes impishly taking in all they can see. At 56 years of age, his face is lined and weathered, as if perhaps his eyes have seen too much. But in a Mexican restaurant in Tucson, waitresses cluster about him, eager to touch him, evidently perceiving him as handsome.

We sit later facing each other in his sunswept living room. On a wall behind him hangs a serigraph entitled "Chicago's Loop El," by an artist named Hellman. Why wasn't this priest back in Chicago ministering to the faithful?

But what is a priest? Andrew Greeley decided to become a priest when he was a child in second grade on the West Side of Chicago. Nobody ever opposed him. His father, who earned a modest living as a broker and was a bit of a writer, died when his son was 19. The support of the family fell to Mrs. Greeley, who saw to it that her son's education was never interrrupted. Andrew Greeley has two sisters, with one of whom, the theologian Mary Jule Durkin, he frequently works closely on church-related sociological studies.

Andrew Moran Greeley, ordained in 1954, received his doctoral degree in sociology from the University of Chicago in 1962. He was 34. Efficient, speedy, thorough, highly organized, he had been a graduate student only 20 months. He has published (as well as I can count them) 67 books in 25 years at 26 publishing houses, large and small, secular and Catholic. His books cover a broad variety of subjects, such as community ethnicity, children, politics, education, love, sex, career, theology and religious "myth." His frequent use of the idea of "myth"—"The Mary Myth," "The Jesus Myth," "The Sinai Myth"—should not suggest religious debunking. By "Myth," Father Greeley means the essence of the tales of the Bible, describing God as "implacably passionate." Nothing we can do can cause God to change His/Her mind about us. This is the basis of Father Greeley's disagreement with the church on earth—not that its clergy sometimes creates scandal but that it teaches love too little and mere rule book obedience too much.

One of his books is poetry, some of his books are illustrated with his own skillful photographs and many of them are supported with groaning tables of data gathered by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) in Chicago, of which he is a senior research associate. His writing is sometimes scholarly and happily readable, sometimes peppy and vernacular, as in his syndicated newspaper column. He displays a wide acquaintance with the arts of the ages, and with poetry and literature, such as one does not often associate with the voluntary reading of a sociologist.

Publish or perish. But in 1973, the University of Chicago denied Father Greeley tenure. He had taught there 10 years. He had published 40 books. One would have imagined him qualified.

The first cause of his downfall at the University of Chicago, he believes, was his "blurred identity."

"There's a certain portion of the human race that has a hard time accepting people that blur categories," he says.

It was, according to his biographer, John N. Kotre, "the nadir of his career." Early this year, Father Greeley came back strong by endowing a chair at the school that had denied him tenure. Was this a perverse revenge? "Oh, but that would be extravagant revenge," he says. "No, it's to create a dialogue between church and scholarship. It's dialogue we need, not revenge."

Never has he allowed himself to be diverted from his calling. Cardinal Cody's denying him a Chicago parish pushed Father Greeley to the margins of the church, but never out. "On the margins I may be, but the margins are still inside. My commitment is the same as the day I was ordained. I'm a priest. I'm Catholic. It's the only church I have. At times it may not be very attractive, very efficient, or very intelligent, but I won't leave it until the day after the Pope does."

What was the true work of a priest? "I saw priests helping people. They were men to whom people felt free to go when they needed help. It was uncomplicated. A priest lived in a parish. His ministry was poor people." Years later, after he had begun to see enlarged dimensions to the idea of a priest, he envisioned women as priests, too, and championed their ordination.

At St. Mary of the Lake Seminary, Andrew Greeley gathered that American Catholics were without much education and cared little for it, and he assumed that to be true. He was a good student, a serious young man who read many books, classical and modern. Essentially he was happy, and at this time of his life he was obedient. "I kept my mouth shut in the seminary. I was really very docile."

It was at this time of his life, on a summer day when he was 22, standing on the platform of an elevated station, that Andrew Greeley was transformed by a revelation—not precisely a religious revelation, not even a miracle, only a new image of himself. He had formed friendships that summer with young Irish Catholic men attending the University of Chicago, one of the world's notable secular institutions, and had been impressed by their acquaintance with radical ideas never admitted to St. Mary of the Lake. "It was my turning point," he says. "I realized that the Catholic world in which I was going to be a priest in a few years was to be an astonishingly different world from the world I'd grown up in, and I thought I ought to prepare myself for it because they certainly weren't preparing me for it in the seminary."

Thirty years later he recalled the event with undiminished vexation. "What they'd been doing at the seminary was training functionaries for a social institution that had not changed and would not change. Only it did change. We were about to live through one of the most historically interesting and important interludes in the history of the Catholic heritage. For some of us this was enormously exciting."

Andrew Greeley went on to become a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, as he had always meant to be. He also became something else, something he had not quite counted on: a member of the first modern generation of American Catholic intellectuals. "I didn't understand how different the Catholic world was going to be, I didn't understand the directions of the difference. But I knew it was going to be different."

Father Greeley's first parish was his last. He was there for 10 years. Instead of the "cap and sweater" people he had expected to serve, he found himself in the midst of plenty at Christ the King parish in the southwest corner of Chicago. "I knew theoretically that American Catholicism was changing . . . but I was totally unprepared," he later wrote in "Nothing But a Loud-Mouthed Irish Priest," "to find myself dropped into the middle of what quite obviously was the parish of the future. . . . Here it was not only possible for all the young people to go to college, it was unthinkable that they should not. Here the Americanization of the Catholic immigrant groups was entering its last phase. The Irish had arrived."

Vastly significant was the fact that affluence and education did not decrease interest in the Church but instead spurred the growth of the parish church as a center for learning and culture, apart from its place as a house of worship. It was at Christ the King that Father Greeley identified the young Catholics whom he would later call "the new breed." They believe, he wrote in a widely read article in America magazine, that "all issues, minor or major, must be brought into the open and discussed. . . . They are appalled when their honesty is taken as disrespect and their desire to discuss is understood as disobedience. * * * They think that they are being much more open with their superiors than those who comply with an external show of docility." He was describing not only his young parishioners but himself.

Until then, he had been a closet writer, partly because he had never carried in his head the image of a priest as writer. "I really did just stumble into it quite by chance," Father Greeley says. "I discovered that I could do it reasonably well, and I enjoyed it. Once you begin, it's like dope."

His work came to the attention of an editor at Sheed & Ward, who encouraged Father Greeley, then 31 years old, to make a book of his experiences, which was published in 1959 as "The Church and the Suburbs."

His first work carried the imprimatur—"free of doctrinal or moral error"—of Albert G. Meyer, then Archbishop of Chicago and later a cardinal, who was soon to actively enter Father Greeley's life as the first and best intellectual supporter he was to know among the church hierarchy. The Archbishop would later enter Father Greeley's novel, "The Cardinal Sins," as the valuable and admirable mentor to the young priest Kevin, like Father Greeley, one of the new breed of Catholic intellectuals.

Sponsored by Cardinal Meyer, Father Greeley was reassigned to the parish of St. Thomas the Apostle, near the University of Chicago. No longer a parish priest in the sense that he had envisioned as a schoolboy, his duty now consisted of an obligation to extend his intellect, deepen his comprehension and serve his church with everything he could carry to it of knowledge or information.

In order to push forward his work on his doctoral dissertation in sociology, Father Greely formed an association with the Chicago-based National Opinion Research Center. Over the years, through NORC's facilities for data gathering, Father Greeley was to learn many things about life in general, American Catholic life in particular and, finally about himself and his "blurred identity."

His doctoral study began as "an attempt to find out why Catholics weren't going to graduate school and were not choosing academic careers." With questionnaires, he surveyed 33,000 students in 135 colleges and learned, almost instantly, that the assumption with which he had begun was groundless: Catholic students were as ambitious as those in any other religious group, and as deeply involved in academic studies. As the data began to assume shape, Father Greeley received a memorable note from a colleague at NORC: "Looks like Notre Dame beat Southern Methodist this year."

Everything he had suspected at Christ the King parish was apparently manifest all over America. The church of the obedient seminarian had become the "informal, voluntaristic, open-ended" church characterized by youth, intellect, logical skepticism, language, learning and democratic participation.

For personal excitement it was unbeatable. The investigator was also the subject. "I was living in the changes the data were showing," says Father Greeley. "My flesh was already on the statistical skeleton."

Over the years, data gave a basis to vision. By 1979 he could write the bottom line with some satisfaction in The Annual Review of Sociology. Irish Catholics "are actually the most successful Gentile ethnic group in America," and "second only to Jews in income, occupational prestige and education."

Father Greeley—Dr. Greeley—traveled a little and wrote a lot. His books tumbled into the world. People began to say of him that he had never had an unpublished thought.

He tended not to hold his tongue. He once said of priests and religious educators that they "are presently completely uninterested in theology." He felt that his criticism was amiable and professional. He was frequently startled to hear cries of indignation from the objects of his evaluation.

With a subsidy from the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Father Greeley led the staff of NORC in a study in 1969 of attitudes among American priests, from whom the bishops had lately felt themselves at a nervous distance. Fifteen to 20 percent of newly ordained priests had left their callings over the last decade. That much was known.

A 46-page questionnaire was distributed to 7,500 clergy, whose responses overwhelmingly rejected Pope Paul VI's encyclical on artificial birth control, "Humanae Vitae," and supported American parishioners in their rejection to it. In numbers proportionate to their differences on birth control, the priests polled also opposed the bishops on questions of celibacy and divorce.

When Father Greeley carried the results of the NORC survey to a committee meeting of the bishops, his findings were received with hostility by men whose isolation he had statistically verified. "When the presentation was complete," he later wrote, "not a single question was asked, not a single word said. All the faces around the table were grim and stony." He had raised questions the bishops preferred not to discuss.

"I could have done two things," Father Greeley said, according to The National Catholic Reporter. "One was just sit back and let them destroy the study. Or I could have chosen to fight them—which I did. In either case, they were through with me." After he made his final report, Father Greeley declared the impossibility of a scholar's working with the bishops with "any standards of professional self-respect." As a closing salute, he described the "present leadership of the church" as "morally, intellectually and religiously bankrupt." Now he was swept onto the margins of his church.

Personal difficulty pursued him farther. The University of Chicago denied him tenure. When he had begun his graduate work, academic tenure was not a concern. His church was his tenure. But now he began to feel with full force the effect of his blurred identity. "What they'd say they said is that I wasn't a very good sociologist. Or they'd say, 'How can you be serious when you write as much as you do?' I should never have gotten into it. I discovered that academics live up to their principles about as well as priests do."

However, his rejection by the department of sociology had followed a prolonged struggle among its fiercely divided members. More than a decade later, the then-occupant of the chair of sociology, Morris Janowitz declined to discuss the matter, saying, "It's too painful. It would reopen too many wounds."

Some of his former colleagues recently assessed Father Greeley's standing as a sociologist in terms ranging from unequivocal praise to critical skepticism. "Andy puts it to the fact that he was a professed Catholic," says James S. Coleman, a longstanding member of the department and the principal author of the 1966 landmark study of segregated education. "It wasn't quite that way, but if he hadn't been a priest, or if his work had been completely outside Catholic schools or religion, or if his personal style had been a little less cantankerous, he'd have been accepted. There's no question about his present status as a sociologist. He's well-regarded in the discipline. He does quite good data analysis and his empirical work is quite solid." Professor Coleman is currently collaborating with Father Greeley on a study of the effects of Catholic high schools on minority students.

"It was his style," Professor Coleman concludes. "That's what the trouble was. Andy's his own worst enemy in the sense that if something goes wrong he'll fire off an angry letter to someone."

Another former colleague indicated that the department has always felt that it has some kind of collective responsibility for what its members say. "You know, Andy writes so much, it stands against him as well as for him. There was something about him of showmanship and bluster. He always lived the good life. But then, he hadn't taken vows of poverty, had he?"

Turning things over in his memory, the professor says, "He was a good teacher. He showed up. He was prepared. Some of the people at Chicago were piqued by his Catholic advocacy. They'd say, 'We don't push our case, don't push yours,' But everyone to some extent pushes his own case, doesn't he? The closer you come to the Catholic community, the more relevant his work is. He wanted to establish the authenticity of Catholic ethnic culture. He wasn't the New Left, he wasn't the Old Left, he wasn't the Socialist Left, he wasn't a Marxist out of the French, he wasn't a trendy Maoist. He should have been a part of the Jesuits. He was an attractive fellow, an enormously gracious fellow."

Whatever he was, Andrew Greeley failed of perfect identity. He became that rarity, a free-lance priest. He was 45 years old and he had burned big bridges behind him.

Five years after the disappointment of the tenure decision at Chicago, his biographer John Kotre published "The Best of Times, the Worst of Times: Andrew Greeley and American Catholicism, 1950–1975." When Father Greeley read the book, he says, he was "really sleepless for several nights" contemplating those "trajectories" of his life which it revealed to him. He was now, with unfamiliar clarity, where he had been, what he had tried to do and the nature of that fate which, at the worst moments of his depression, he called failure.

In 1978, the year of Kotre's book, Andrew Greeeley was appointed with tenure to a professorship in the department of sociology at the University of Arizona. He acquired the Tucson house, moving in with his memories, grateful, restless and rueful, replaying in this mind scenarios of recent bitter dramas. Here be began what became known as his "stories."

Although he had written a bit of fiction over the years, his essential work had been in other forms. How did one go about it? "If I'd had time I'd have taken some courses in creative writing." But he was 50 years old and didn't have forever. He learned to hypnotize himself, which he says "put me in touch with the imagery of my past. It made the early years of my life far more vivid. It almost compelled me to want to get everything down on paper. It was now or never, and I plunged."

Did he mean that self-hypnotism exposed his subconscious to Him? "No, I'd rather say it permitted things to come to my consciousness that I would not necessarily have adverted to." This is marvelous understatement. A priest is "a man like any other," Father Greeley has contended, "but with special commitments." When a priest, or any man, commits himself to fiction writing he will soon have "adverted to" scenes and events formerly unexplored. He will draw for the scenes of his fictional action upon the experiential capital of his life.

Fiction about priests had tradionally presented them as kind, gentle, sympathetic, sentimental. The model had been Bing Crosby whistling a merry tune. In his novels, however, Father Greeley appears at first glance to have plundered all ecclesiastical privacy, exhibiting priests and prelates possessed of all the passions for powers, riches and sex, whether in the archdiocese of Chicago, where Father Greeley has lived, or at the Vatican, where he has often visited.

The author's listing opposite the title page of Father Greeley's new 401-page novel, "Lord of the Dance," names three earlier "stories" by him: "The Cardinal Sins," "Thy Brother's Wife" and "Ascent Into Hell."

The first of these appeared in 1981 and has sold about three million copies, hardbound and paperback—roughly 12 times the aggregate sales of his first 63 books. These "stories" are not, in fact, his first novels, but the early attempts, in his words, have "vanished."

The immense popular reception for his books amazed him. With sums of money beyond every self-expectation came bruising criticism, deepening the ambiguity of his blurred identity. He was now known as the priest who wrote dirty books. The words most often used to describe his novels have been "steamy" and "trash." A Chicago Sun-Times book reviewer wrote: "The Cardinal Sins' is enough to give trash a bad name." He was accused of exploiting sex for bucks.

The charges dizzied him. "This priest knows nothing about sex," went one. "How does this priest know so much about sex?" went another, paradoxically. He was a figure of curiosity for the media, which badgered him with repetitive questions: "Why did you write that novel? What's your relationship to the bishop? What's the church's reaction to you? What do you do with the money?"

Among discerning readers of literature, Andrew Greeley's name sounded a faintest bell—best-selling authors come and go. And in fact, on my own first reading of an Andrew Greeley novel, I perceived him as a rough-and-ready novelist, light on style. His characters had little depth to them. Their dialogue was unconvincing. Often it seemed that the author stifled the growth of his characters in the interest of an insistent message whether or not the message was consistent with the characters' probable direction. His books had so many plots and subplots I couldn't remember the beginning when I reached the end. The defects of his books were the result, I supposed, of their having been written in haste.

Through his novels moved hero-priests modeled, I supposed, on the author. Unlike clear sinners, they remained true to their vows to celibacy, never stole money, never lusted to be Pope or President. The spotless author employing his novels to justify his life was an old spectacle, and I blamed his transparency upon Father Greeley's having come so late to the complex craft.

He himself has described literature as "an art where every reader is his own critic." To me, he said, "Who's to say what literature is? I don't know what literature is."

Andrew Greeley does not read his books as either autobiograhical or topical. He does not think of his readers as "market" or his books as "product." He locates his books in ancient religious tradition.

In notes to his novels, he has tried to explain to his readers how a religious experience may arise from seemingly worldly fiction. An early note appeared as an afterword to the paperbound edition of "The Cardinal Sins." For that novel he wrote:

" 'Why would a priest write a novel,?' I am frequently asked. The answer is simple: Stories have always been the best way to talk about religion because stories appeal to the emotions and the whole personality and not just to the mind. Jesus told parables; the authors of the David and Joseph cycles and the Song of Songs in the Jewish scriptures, for example, also told stories. Both Jesus, and the earlier story-tellers did not try to edify with their stories. Rather, their tales were about secular events—kings and generals, women, family feuds, passionate love affairs, farmers, treasure hunters, merchants going on journeys, crooked judges, wedding feasts, gardeners, women taken in adultery."

If Father Greeley's novels have noble purposes they also have intricate designs. He cites their structures, their historical parallels, their classical borrowing and their calculated symbols. Indeed, in his newest book, "Lord of the Dance," the third of his Passover Trilogy, the action replicates the return of Jesus from the dead and the consummation of His marriage to "His spouse, the church." Old poetry and new sprinkled among his pages illuminate his intention.

At first he is astonished that I had not made these connections for myself, but then admits, "It's a somewhat subtle point. I leaned over too far to avoid pointing to the religious." He had been surprised, he says, "how much publishers and editors let me get away with the theological themes," adding with a touch of perplexity, "Maybe they don't catch them, maybe they're not aware they're there."

Each time a new novel is published or new editions of older novels are issued, hundreds of people sit down to write letters to Father Greeley. He replies at least briefly to each reader.

Recently I read about 500 of those letters. They came mostly, not entirely, from Catholics of all ages and stations for whom the Greeley novels are the first expression they have encountered of feelings they secretly harbored about the church in which they were raised, for which they held high hope, which somehow disappointed them and to which those who have fallen away desire to return. One priest humanized restores all religion.

A female convert to Catholicism from Salt Lake City wrote to congratulate Father Greeley on his "writings about priests . . . people like me used to put them up on a pedestal . . . considering them above reproach or temptation. After reading your novels, it has finally come to me that priests are, first and above all—people."

Many of the letters are confessions from readers who, having sinned, seem to receive the novels of Father Greeley as absolution. The schemes of his novels reveal a moral system that makes modern sense to them. They do not view the "good" hero-priest as necessarily good or heroic, nor do they see him, as I did, as merely Father Greeley prettified. They recognize him as sinner-priest, for he is rigid and prideful. He is aloof, hyperresponsible, and therefore, unnatural. He is hidden and remote, intent upon earning God's love.

It is the "bad" priest who is recognized by Father Greeley's readers as most real because he is most like them. He surrenders to fleshly weakness without losing God's love, for God loves everyone. God's love need not be "earned." God is not a moralist but an "implacably passionate" deity. We are all part of God's design. God draws straight with crooked lines.

"Life," according to Father Greeley, "needs more joy, more love, more celebration, and that means more justice. Life might be a wedding feast. We've been given an invitation to a great party and we're crazy not to go."

His readers apparently understand, without literary coaching, how to read his works. One must, for example, read the title "The Cardinal Sins" as a pun. It is not so much a topical book about a sinning cardinal as about the cardinal sins and their sources in human beings. Those actions that are the evil in us, the foreword to "The Cardinal Sins" tells us, emanate from "fundamental goodness running out of control, from human love that is confused and frightened and not trusting enough of love."

Most of Father Greeley's readers had never heard such things from their own parish priests. A woman in Canada wrote: "I have always felt I had to earn God's love & forgiveness & have seen him as Judge rather than Lover. Thank you for new insights."

For these readers, the memory of the church's teachings is only of thou-shalt-nots and punishment: "You made me glad that I decided to remain a Catholic, even though the Church has 10,000 stupid rules. * * * But the criticism is needed. How else could it ever become better and reach its people who are crying out to someone to help us find God in our everyday lives."

From a Catholic theologian: "I never fail to profit from your works and consider you a singular blessing to the church in the United States. * * * You always say what I am thinking."

A nurse, "mother of three, brought up in a poor Irish Catholic Ghetto in the Dorchester section of Boston" writes: "You make these difficult theological premises so easy to understand. * * * You have helped greatly to see God's will for me."

Hour after hour, I read Father Greeley's letters. They dissolved his "blurred identity." He is a parish priest. And there his ministry is. In his mailbox.●

MARTHA GRAHAM: HAPPY BIRTHDAY AND THANKS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, were this Japan, and had we the possibility of naming individuals, "living national treasures," I would petition that such an honor be bestowed on Martha Graham.

Martha Graham choreographed the awakening of dance in the United States. Her work and life have graced our civilization and nurtured and advanced dance as an art form and discipline.

Today is Martha Graham's 90th birthday, and I can think of no more appropriate person to pay her homage than her friend, Agnes de Mille. Accordingly, I ask to have printed in the RECORD her "Tribute."

The tribute follows:

IN TRIBUTE

(By Agnes de Mille)

Martha Graham is the most famous of the Denishawn students. She is probably the greatest American choreographer and stands high among the great performing theater personalities of our time. A teacher of inspirational force as well, and an international cultural influence in fields beyond her immediate profession, she is one of the rare people in dance history who have created new styles and techniques of moving.

Her invention is prodigious; like Picasso's, her art has changed deeply in style and technique many times during her career. For every new work there was not only a new design in steps, but a new concept in technique and dynamics, a restudying of the basis of movement. No other choreographer has attempted this.

She unquestionably was influenced at first by St. Denis' Oriental studies and she ackowledges her debt in point of view. But the heritage goes deeper. The use of the ground, the kneeling, squatting, rising and sinking, which is an essential part of Oriental dancing and found nowhere in any Western form, she incorporated into her style. She also appropriated the oriental use of the foot, the shifting and sliding on the earth, the curling in of the toes to act as a hinge.

But she is no imitator or adaptor. She is an original, a generic force. There was never anything quite like her before, and everyone who comes after will dance a little differently.

In classic ballet, dance movement had hitherto consisted of moving from position to position, raising or lowering the feet, bending smoothly, going from place to place, always serenely, always lightly. The internal workings of the action, the machinery and combustion, were carefully hidden, and only the lovely results were shown. Martha Graham exposed the engineering, the effort. Life, she said, is effort. She realized also that the resolution of movement was as important as the spasm, that movement had a cycle, flowed to a climax, and ebbed away in relaxation.

She threw aside all the traditional steps and techniques of ballet, the straight long leg, the pointed toe, the quiet even hips, the flexed foot, the relaxed hand. She stressed continuous unfolding movement from a central core, as in all Oriental movement, but she added spasms and resistance, which are not characteristic of the East at all.

She incorporated the ground, making the floor a partner of movement in a manner of far greater virtuosity than anything found elsewhere. She invented many beautiful falls and recoveries from the ground. She discovered a whole technique of balancing on bent knees, with her thighs as a hinge and the spine cantilevered and suspended in counter balance. She invented turns with a changing and swinging body axis.

At first it seemed she was speaking in a language we had not inherited and one quite unintelligible to most of us, but in reality her dance was far closer to natural acting than ballet dancing. It was not a realistic imitation of emotion, as in acting, however, it was an imaginative expansion of acting. Children today who have not been trained in a balletic heritage find her style sympathetic and easy to understand.

She began working like Isadora Duncan on a bare stage with only costumes and lights, striving to break all the old romantic molds. Later, she added scenic and costume effects of great imaginative beauty. Her music was contemporary and much of it was composed to order.

She has always been daring as to subject matter and collaborators, prefiguring many theater vogues and introducing through her works a number of unknowns who became famous, such as composer Aaron Copland and sculptor Isamu Noguchi.

She inaugurated several stage techniques that were taken for granted later: mobile scenery, symbolic props and set pieces, speech with dancing, the chorus of commenting dancers as in the Orient. And she was the first to integrate her group racially, using Asians and Negroes in the regular company.

Her costumes have had a marked influence on dress style, both on and off the stage. The straight, dark, longskirted costume and the leotard, replacing the ballet tutu or folk dress, were her invention. The accepted work uniform today for all dancers, ballet and modern, has become the Graham leotard. The American ballet students wear it with traditional tights and point shoes, and the Europeans are gradually adopting it also. No ballet student anywhere in America works in tutu and bloomers. The leotard has become ubiquitous in civil life.

Historically speaking, Graham has had as forceful an impact on all branches of the contemporary theater as Duncan. Technically, in terms of invented and added steps and style, hers is the greatest single life contribution in the records of dancing. Her dance dramas compare with the work of America's greatest playwrights.

In the words of William Schuman, the composer who was president of New York's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, at the ninth annual Capezio Dance Award Luncheon honoring Martha Graham:

She has created an original vocabulary of dance movement that has added a new dimension to the expressivity of the choreographic art. She has been gloriously incapable, ever, of being slight, captious or superficial. Her works—whether tragic or comic—always probe, distill, and illuminate. She continues to create with undiminished zeal. Each new work brings the excitement of discovery of previously unexplored facets of her endlessly fertile imagination.

"For these reasons she has achieved a position which is not adequately to be described solely as one of pre-eminence in her field. For whether we speak of the world of Dance, of Music, of Literature, or of the Graphic Arts, Martha Graham is one of the greatest artists America has ever produced."

Nothing stops Graham, age nor change of country nor condition. She no longer dances as she once did, but her stage presence still is oceanic and each year sees new works of originality and invention. Graham seems to live at the fountainhead, and what she expresses foretells our passion and our intent.

Graham maintains a school in New York and teaches master courses. Her annual season on Broadway is the object of pilgrimages from all over the Americas, indeed, from all parts of the world. Her present company, in points of execution, style, and finesse of presentation, places her theater on a par with the great historic companies—with the Diaghilev troupe in its heyday, and with the Grand Kabuki of Japan. It is unquestionably the most stylish theater we in America have evolved and should, hopefully, be taken over by the government and preserved as the basis for an enduring national institution.●

HEALTH CARE COORDINATION ACT OF 1983—S. 1614

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor S. 1614, the Health Care Coordination Act of 1983, introduced by my good friend and colleague, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania.

Health care costs have risen dramatically in recent years. Yet many legislative proposals designed to arrest this increase have neglected both the beneficiary and the quality of health care. I support S. 1614 because it not only addresses the problem of the high and increasing cost of health care, but it also helps those most adversely affected by these costs, the elderly poor.

The Health Care Coordination Act takes the responsible step of allowing States to implement coordinated programs of acute and long-term care for beneficiaries who quality for both medicaid and medicare. By allowing the combination of medicare and medicaid for the first time, the program will be able to provide more services for those elderly who qualify.

The most common complaint about the medicare program is that it does not cover long-term care. Over $40 billion was spent for long-term care for 1982, $27 billion of which went for nursing home care alone. Medicaid accounts for 90 percent of all public funds for long-term care. The Health Care Coordination Act would combine the advantages of both medicaid and medicare and remove the perverse incentives that shift costs between the two programs. This will be possible because the States will administer the program. The State or a designated health care provider will be able to offer additional services and, if necessary, charge enrollment, fees, cost sharing, or premiums with approval of the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS). Neither the States nor any of the 4 million eligible enrollees would be obligated to join this program.

Most importantly, this program would be, at worst budget neutral. Medicare payments for eligible enrollees would be capped and the States, as administrators, would be required to assure the Secretary of HHS that the Federal Government will not exceed the total costs which would have been incurred by the State and Federal Governments if the program were not in effect. Significant savings will be made by avoiding unnecessary hospitalization. Whereas the average home care or community care stay costs $50 to $60 per day on the average, the average cost for a day in a hospital is well over $200. Billions have been spent on needless hospital stays. S. 1614 is a rational initiative toward correcting such unnecessary spending.

Medicare and medicaid together will cost the Federal Government over $80 billion for this fiscal year. Medicaid will cost State governments about $20 billion. Both programs are growing faster than inflation. In addition, elderly persons comprise the fastest growing segment of the population, In fact, the 85-plus population grew by 165 percent between 1960 to 1982. Health care resources for the elderly are financially strained and deteriorating. A comprehensive restructuring of our health systems seems inevitable. S. 1614 would be an essential step in the right direction.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this legislation and I urged its quick passage.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION—S. 430, TSONGAS BILL

● Mr. HART. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor S. 430, introduced by Senator TSONGAS, which would prohibit employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

This legislation represents a step forward on this Nation's long march toward equality and justice for all our citizens. The principle behind this legislation is a simple one: Sexual orientation is a purely private matter, which should have no bearing on individual performance in the workplace.

For some time, I have been a supporter of Federal legislation banning employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. I am now persuaded that the Tsongas bill represents the most reasonable, fair, and effective way to bar discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in employment. This bill clearly states that this form of discrimination is offensive to fundamental notions of equity—and that the best way to deter it lies in legislation adopted at the Federal level.

If the personal privacy of employees is to be protected, employers must be given no reason to inquire into the sexual orientation of their employees. For that reason, this bill has a number of provisions that should insure that employers need not inquire into their employee's sexual orientation. Thus, the bill strictly prohibits quotas based on employee's sexual orientation, and bars a finding of discrimination based soley on the fact that an employer employs fewer persons with a particular sexual orientation than are found in the population at large.

I have also expressed some concern, given the present political climate, about opening the Civil Rights Act on the floor of the Senate. Would this lead, for example, to legal restrictions on affirmative action? Or religious liberty? Since 1964, however, the Civil Rights Act has been opened a number of times—without the adverse consequences many fear. Groups representing women and black communities are in firm support of this legislation, in spite of the concern that opening the Civil Rights Act might produce legal restrictions harmful to the interests of blacks or women.

Moreover, even the strongest proponents of this measure recognize that floor action in the Congress is unlikely anytime soon. It may take years before this legislation is enacted into law. Cosponsorship now reflects my support of the principle that employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation should not be countenanced.

Mr. President, when enacted, the Tsongas bill will remove a major legal obstacle to the realization of our national goal of equal opportunity for all.●

AN EMERGENCY CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, last Friday, Dr. John R. Silber, president of Boston University, gave the law day address before a group of Boston University alumni.

As I am sure my colleagues know, in addition to being president of Boston University, Dr. Silber was a very distinguished member of the Kissinger Commission. The address he gave last Friday, entitled "Central America and the War Powers Act: An Emerging Constitutional Crisis," is a very thought-provoking piece, which I should like to share with my colleagues. Therefore, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE WAR POWERS ACT: AN EMERGING CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS

(By John R. Silber)

The United States stands alone in the world as a nation in which foreign policy is a matter of constant and often embittered public controversy, not merely between the party in office and its opponents, but within the parties themselves, and even within the party controlling the executive branch. One reason for this is doubtless the lack of party discipline characteristic of presidential government structured by the doctrine of separated powers. In the United Kingdom, if parliamentarians of the ruling party assault its foreign policy, success is likely to mean a general election and a possible loss of the assailant's seat. And so it is only in such moments of supreme crisis as the military and political collapse of France in May 1940 or the 1956 Suez invasion that a British prime minister cannot count on the support of his own party. In this country, by contrast, opposing your own president is as likely to increase as to reduce your chances for re-election.

Moreover, although Americans are notorious for self-criticism, most Americans believe themselves and their country to be basically good, and thus what is most often said in criticism of our foreign policy is not that it is evil, but that it is inept or incoherent; well-meaning, perhaps, but blundering. It is widely believed that with more thoughtfulness, more foresight and consistency, a good President ought to be able to straighten things out. We tend to believe that next time around, or the time after that, we will do better.

The fault is neither in our national character nor in the character of our leaders; nor can we afford to wait until we perfect ourselves. No president—Democratic or Republican—however farsighted and decisive he may be, can formulate or maintain an effective and consistent foreign policy in the present circumstances. These circumstances comprise an increasing external challenge and a series of congressionally mandated restraints on the executive branch. Together they provide a dangerous whipsaw which has rendered American foreign policy ineffective and erratic. The situation in Central America provides a current and critical example.

Dominated by Cuba, following the Cuban example of totalitarian government, military macho, economic decline, and clientage of the geopolitical ambitions of the Soviet Union, Nicaragua has embarked on a course of jabbing, at the expense of the freedom and well-being of its people, the giant to the north. Thus the Kissinger Commission concluded that Nicaragua, recipient of more than 15,000 tons of Soviet and Eastern Bloc war materiel in 1983 alone, "serves as a base of subversion through overland infiltration of people and supplies than can affect" all of Central America (p. 93). It provides a safe haven for Salvadoran terrorists and their leaders, provides radio facilities to help them coordinate their attacks, and participates in the Soviet-Cuban spy network that now blankets all of the Caribbean. Nicaragua is training an army five times larger than any other in Central America, an army which threatens peaceful countries such as Costa Rica, a democracy without an army, and Panama, soon to be responsible for the security of the canal. The leadership of both countries are convinced that sooner or later they will be invaded.

Addressing the Kissinger Commission, President Suazo Cordova of Honduras said: "The regime established [in] Nicaragua [poses] a threat to the rest of Central America in two ways: first, because of its constant harassment and sponsorship of violence and terror in the area and second because of the disproportionate size of its military establishment, which has upset the balance of power. This balance must now be restored. Our neighbors have become a serious problem, and for that reason we need a susbtantial increase in our internal defenses to protect our sovereignty and our historical and cultural heritage."

Yet extraordinarily, it is the United States, not Nicaragua, not Cuba, not the Soviet Union, which stands accused before the World Court of violating international law. The Soviets invaded Afghanistan, the Cubans and Nicaraguans supply the FMLN, and it is the United States which must publicly reject the jurisdiction of a court which it has long supported. And we become more and more divided against ourselves in a welter of accusations and counter-accusations. Not just the President, but our country as a whole is being whipsawed. And if half of the impetus for the whipsaw is the increasing strategic and military and propaganda power of our enemies, the other half comes from within, and is traceable to the violation of a fundamental principle of the U.S. Constitution.

The framers of the Constitution wrestled for a long time with the problem of how to restrain power without negating it. Their answer was a system of checks and balances, in which the Constitution assigns the power to conduct foreign policy, and, deriving from this, the role of Commander in Chief, to the Executive Branch of the government. Congress, as a deliberative and legislative body, is to share in the determination of foreign policy, but the President is to be responsible for its conduct. There is no more remarkable example of this in our history than the fact that the Fort Sumter crisis occurred with Congress out of session. President Lincoln conducted the opening stages of the Civil War as a purely executive act, and when, immediately after Fort Sumter, he called Congress into special session, he gave it 80 days to assemble. During the interim, he called up the militia, initiated the blockade of southern ports, raised an army of 300,000 volunteers and authorized the suspension of habeas corpus. It is doubtful that he could have gotten most of these actions through Congress in the form of legislation, although when it met on July 4, 1861, Congress tacitly approved his faits accomplis.

This separation of powers continued essentially unaltered until a decade ago. But beginning with the War Powers Act of 1973, we have arrived at a situaton where separation of powers is no longer in full operation. The provisions of the War Powers Act deprive the President of the power to back his diplomacy with military action short of an all-out, declared war. Confronting challenges of the sort posed by Nicaragua and El Salvador, the President has only three choices, all of them bad: He can do nothing; he can declare war; or he can try to find his way through a thicket of legal restraints that impede his decisions and that almost inevitably give rise to accusations of illegal conduct. President Reagan presumably rejected the first two options when faced with the situation in Nicaragua; and the whipsaw caught him.

To understand why any President—Republican or Democratic—will be ineffective in the conduct of foreign policy, we must examine how the executive's hands have been tied by a group of laws, amendments, and continuing resolutions which place too much responsibility for the conduct of foreign policy, especially the military aspects of it, in the hands of a deliberative, rather than an executive body. The constitutionality of many of these measures has yet to be thoroughly tested, and it is high time that we test them. But it is even more important to understand their effect on our foreign policy, and to look at the ways in which that deliberative body has chosen to use its power.

The War Powers Act of 1973 was a drastic response to the Vietnam war. It was passed over the veto of the President, and to many it seemed like a good idea at the time. President Johnson had tried to conduct a major and protracted was as if it were a minor police action. Congress was complicit in this error, and by the end of the war, the overwhelming majority of Americans were convinced that the conduct of the war had been a serious mistake, albeit they had diverse and contradictory reasons for their conclusion. However, by limiting the President's ability to deploy U.S. forces, the War Powers Act essentially put control of crucial U.S. military actions into the hands of the Congress. The effects of this, perhaps unforseeable in 1973, are all too clear now. In a world in which subversion, terrorism, and constantly changing geostrategic pressures are the rule, the U.S. Congress must now be consulted, "in every possible instance," in advance, on the deployment of our military forces. Troops may not be introduced any where outside of U.S. without full reports being made to Congress within 48 hours. The President may not have troops for more than 90 days in any area where hostilities are ongoing or imminent without explicit approval from Congress.

This means that, simply by doing nothing, Congress can force the President to withdraw U.S. troops within 90 days. It means that, short of declaring war, Congress must pass a bill announcing exactly how long and on what terms U.S. troops will be allowed to remain somewhere. It means that, in an area of foreign policy in which secrecy is often essential, publicity is mandatory. It means that essentially military considerations have become, unavoidably, political issues. This has its effect both on the President, who must consider, not the efficacy of his actions, but their effect on Congress, and on Congress itself, as a consequence of its having assumed a role in the conduct of foreign policy. Rarely, if ever, in the history of the U.S., has there been more divisiveness, more striking of inconsistent poses, and more downright confusion about foreign policy than there is now. In this election year, not only the determination, but the conduct of foreign policy has become a political football.

The War Powers Act has been joined by a host of perpetual and ad hoc restrictions on the President's power to act effectively. Since 1978, for example, it has been illegal to sell anti-personnel weapons to El Salvador. Thus the Salvadoran army either buys the weapons it needs from elsewhere, or uses U.S. rockets designed to stop a single tank against guerrilla fighters, who are not known for their tendency to stand in groups.

Sections have been added to the Foreign Assistance Act which sharply restrict security assistance to countries whose human rights record does not meet our standards, even if such assistance is in our national interest, and even if the denial of that assistance leads to the abrogation of all human rights as a consequence of a Marxist victory. (Had the FAA been on the books in 1942, it would have ruled out lend-lease aid to the Soviet Union.) This act prevents our helping Costa Rica strengthen its security forces because they are all technically police. The FAA also effectively prohibits our being able to assist with legal reforms in El Salvador.

Perhaps most damaging to an effective foreign policy, however, has been the unwillingness on the part of Congress to recognize that secrecy plays an essential part in the conduct of international affairs. This results in an inescapable contradiction. When the details of our covert support for the Nicaraguan freedom fighters are the subject of editorials in the newspapers, and openly debated in Congress, the question of whether our support should be convert or overt is answered: it must be overt because it cannot be covert. Or rather, we must attempt to operate by oxymoron: We must be either overtly covert, or covertly overt. Either contradiction describes the case, and leaves us open to tendentious and ideologically motivated prosecution under international law. The Nicaraguans, while supporting terrorists in neighboring countries, have the sense to deny that they are doing so.

The Clark Amendment of 1976 was an early milestone in making the covert overt: It forbids the President to provide "assistance of any kind" which would promote, "directly or indirectly," the "capacity of any nation, group, organization, movement, or individual to conduct military or paramilitary operations in Angola" without submitting detailed plans to Congress. The Amendment gave free play to Castro, who was not inhibited by any similar amendment passed by a Cuban Congress.

The Boland amendment followed up on this by further restricting the President's options with regard to a specific country: it specifically forbade either the Department of Defense or the CIA from assisting any group for the purpose of overthrowing the government of Nicaragua. The tangled web of legal and constitutional issues was revealed in its full confusion in 1983 when the House debated the covert/overt issue and made this topic a major item for newspapers and television.

None of this is to argue that Congress should not determine our foreign policy, or that Congressional Committees should not be consulted and informed on the actions taken by the State Department. The determination of foreign policy must be, as the framers of the Constitution intended, a matter for voting and for debate by the peoples' representatives. The goals of our foreign policy must be an expression of our national will. But this requires, first of all, that Congress provide leadership rather than politically-motivated second-guessing, and that the conduct of foreign policy be decisive, flexible, coherent, and resourceful. The current situation is highly deficient in each of these qualities.

These issues involve national survival. To limit the President to a policy choice of either doing nothing or declaring war denies him adequate tools for the conduct of diplomacy. Yet this is precisely the choice now imposed upon him. The result is that there is not a power in the world, from Upper Volta to the Soviet Union, that does not use clandestine force—except the United States. The consequences of this policy may well be national suicide, as we reach the point where we signal to our enemies the message that we cannot draw a line until they land on our beaches and that there is consequently almost no limit to how far they can go.

There is a clear historical parallel in the rise of Nazi Germany, in which Hitler, through a series of small increments, made himself master of Europe. He began by remilitarizing the Rhineland in violation of the Treaty of Versailles. He was in no position to maintain his occupation against military force, but France and Britain did nothing. He next annexed Austria. The allies chose to regard this action as one affecting only Germans. Thus far, Hitler proceeded with their silent acquiescence. When he came to annex the Sudetenland, he acquired their active complicity at the Munich Conference. By the time he occupied the remains of Chechoslovakia, he no longer needed their approval. He cannot be blamed in thinking that he could succeed in taking Poland without opposition, for nothing in the behavior of Britain and France suggested that either country was prepared to draw a line—or rather, that when Hitler stepped up to the line, they would not erase it and draw a new one farther back. He had proceeded step by step, and no one told him to stop. When the allies finally told him to stop, it required six years of war and a score of millions of deaths to enforce their demand.

The Soviets operate in just such a fashion, extending their power wherever they can, probing to see where we draw the line. They have discovered that we will tolerate a Soviet client state in Cuba and a major Soviet offensive capability on that island. We have shown the greatest reluctance to proceed militarily against Soviet proxies in our hemisphere, although the presence of such proxies clearly violates both the Monroe Doctrine and the OAS charter.

If we do not remove the restrictions on the effective management of foreign policy that now hinder the operation of the President of the United States, we may some day face a Soviet Union that is willing and able to wage war on its own terms, in our territory. This is not an inevitable outcome. The Soviet Union, although imperialistic, is cautiously so. Its leadership is composed of realists in the use of power who can recognize clearly drawn lines, especially when there are no erasers in sight. This is true also of their proxies. We should be instructed by the caution with which Castro responded to the liberation of Grenada. By our action, we made patent to the world that Castro cannot protect his clients against determined and rapid action by the United States. The lesson was not lost on the government of Suriname, which immediately expelled its Cuban advisers.

But can anyone doubt that if the administration had filed a bill for the invasion of Grenada, Congress would still be debating it? And it is entirely likely that if we were still dithering about what to do about Grenada, the Cubans with Soviet support would have reinforced their military presence on the island to the point that military action would have been costly in lives—American, Cuban, and Grenadian.

In pursuing a more rational and flexible policy in Central America, we will be making a terrible mistake if we fail to support the revolution for democracy throughout the region, including the betrayed revolution for democracy in Nicaragua. Our commitment to that revolution puts us in support of the rebel forces, most of whom were active opponents of Somoza. One of them, Eden Pastora, was the military leader of the movement which brought Somoza down.

Our commitment to democracy also compels our support of the government of El Salvador. There is nothing inconsistent with American values in supporting Jose Napoleon Duarte and Alvara Magana in El Salvador. These men are genuine, committed democrats. But there is nothing consistent with American values in supporting the Sandinistas. When we made an alliance with Stalin in 1941, we had at least the excuse of trying to defeat Hitler. Forced to choose between two great evils, we made a rational choice and backed the lesser against the greater. There can be no such justification for allying ourselves with Castro and with the Sandinistas to oppress not only the people of Nicaragua but all the people of Central America.

Rather, we should continue to increase the pressure on the Sandinistas to force them in the direction of democracy; and we should give sufficient support to El Salvador in order to insure its survival as a democratic country. We cannot achieve either of these goals without strong bipartisan support for a rational foreign policy. We cannot develop such support if the Congress continues on its course of breaking down the wall separating itself from the executive, and continues to arrogate to itself not merely the making of foreign policy, but its detailed implementation

Not the least of the bad legacies of the Vietnam war is the extent to which Lyndon Johnson's compromised attempt to defend an imperfect democracy in Saigon against a perfect totalitarianism in Hanoi has come to be regarded as the model of what happens when the executive is free to implement foreign policy. This catastrophic event has purged the national memory of other, better examples, not the least of them the resolute action by which Johnson himself in 1965, in concert with the OAS, restored democracy to the Dominican Republic. The other great examples are Abraham Lincoln's decision to treat secession as the national crisis it was rather than allowing a deeply divided Congress to tie his hands, and Harry S. Truman's prompt and courageous support of South Korea.

Korea, we should remember, was the last time the communists engaged in an overt invasion of one of our allies. Truman forced them into adopting a policy of covert subversion and the use of proxies. As we confront the situation raised by their more recent policy, our options are more complex and the way not so clear. But one thing is clear: the president should be free to be as resolute as Lincoln and Truman. We have, through the War Powers Act and the amendments that have followed in its wake, institutionalized Neville Chamberlain as the preferred model for American presidents. If we remember what Chamberlain's policies led to, we may yet reverse this disastrous trend.

THE KID FROM RED BANK

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, this country recently lost a truly great man whose music and art enriched the lives of thousands of people, both in America and abroad, William (Count) Basie. People from my State, in particular, were saddened by the passing of Mr. Basie for he was a native son. Born in Red Bank, NJ, Mr. Basie's talent was soon shared with the whole world who came to love his music. His big band sound epitomized the vitality, warmth, honor, and smoothness of the man.

Mr. Basie gained fame and fortune but retained his humility. He asked only to be remembered as a nice guy. Nice he certainly was and a consummate musician whose contribution to our culture will be irreplacable.

Mr. Basie was eloquently remembered in the Newark Star Ledger's lead editorial on May 1, 1984. I ask that the full text of this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

THE COUNT

He was called The Kid from Red Bank in deference to his New Jersey origins, but later in life, William (Count) Basie was also called by such distinguished titles as a master of modern music, a great innovator and a great performer.

Mr. Basie, who died last week at the age of 79, had his roots in jazz. His early successes were in small bands in Kansas City, one of the nation's leading centers for jazz during the 1930s. But he had the vision to recognize that if his music was to have wide appeal throughout the nation and the world, something else would be needed.

What was needed was a music with the drive and the vivacity of jazz, but with smoothness of the popular big bands of the so-called Swing Era of the 1930s and 1940s. And that was what Mr. Basie provided as he put together one of the greatest of the big bands.

The result was a distinctive contribution to modern music, one that transcended labels and was marked by an extraordinary level of excellence. Such original songs as "One O'Clock Jump" became the talk of the music world, clamored for both by jazz enthusiasts and by the general public.

As a performer, Mr. Basie mirrored the qualities he sought in his band arrangements, a reworking and modernizing of old-fashioned, earthy musical techniques. He took the so-called "stride" piano style that had made such jazz pianists as Fats Waller and James P. Johnson famous, but smoothed it out and gave it his distinguished personal imprint.

Mr. Basie constantly sought the greatest jazz artists to play in his ensemble. The list of those who at one time or another were part of the Count Basie orchestra reads like a jazz Hall of Fame. It includes Lester Young, Buck Clayton, Vic Dickerson, Illinois Jacquet, Don Byas, J. J. Johnson and Clark Terry, to name only a few.

When musical styles changed, Mr. Basie kept up with the times, changing his band format from time to time, moving from a big band to a smaller unit when the big band era ended.

But there always was a Count Basie band, and it looks as if there always will be one. Under the direction of Aaron Woodward, Mr. Basie's adopted son, the band will continue in the familiar musical vein. That's a comforting note.●

LT. GEN. ROBERT M. BOND

● Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, on April 26, 1984, Lt. Gen. Robert M. Bond was killed in an aircraft accident at Nellis Air Force Base, NV. Facts relating to his death are sketchy since he apparently was doing secret tests for the Air Force. It was first reported by the press that General Bond crashed while testing a new supersecret "Stealth" fighter aircraft. Later reports by the news media indicated that he was not flying the "Stealth" aircraft, but instead he was piloting a Soviet-style Mig-23 fighter. Whatever the circumstances of his death, one thing is sure. General Bond will be sincerely missed and mourned by those of us who knew him as a friend.

General Bond was an Air Force command pilot with more than 5,000 flying hours, primarily in tactical fighter aircraft. His military decorations and awards include the Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star, Meritorious Service Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Air Medal with 11 oak leaf clusters, Air Force Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Air Force Outstanding Unit Award ribbon with four oak leaf clusters and several foreign decorations.

General Bond had an outstanding military career. In 1951, he enlisted in the Air Force. After a year in the aviation cadet program, he earned his wings and commission. Upon completing advanced gunnery training at Nellis Air Force Base, he was assigned to the 51st Fighter-Intercepter Wing at K-13 Airfield in South Korea where he flew combat missions in F-86 Saber-jets.

From 1954 to 1959, General Bond was stationed at Alexandria (now England) Air Force Base, La. As a member of the 398th Tactical Fighter Squadron, 366th Tactical Fighter Wing, he participated in several of the early nonstop deployments to Europe, flying F-84's, F-86's, and F-100's. From July to October 1958, he attended the U.S. Air Force Fighter Weapons School at Nellis.

Upon deactivation of the 366th Tactical Fighter Wing in the spring of 1959, General Bond returned to Nellis and served as an instructor pilot in Fighter Weapons School as an F-105 project test pilot.

In 1963, General Bond was assigned to the 6002d Standardization and Evaluation Group at Kadena Air Base, Okinawa, and was chief of the Strike Branch there. While stationed at Kadena he flew combat missions in Southeast Asia.

From 1965 to 1966, General Bond attended the Air Command and Staff College and then joined the Directorate of Safety, Headquarters 1002d Inspector General Group, Norton Air Force Base, CA, as the F-105 and F-111 project officer. In August 1968, he was assigned to Cam Ranh Bay Air Force Base in Vietnam where he flew 213 combat missions in F-4 Phantoms and progressed from flight commander to operations officer.

He was assigned to Luke Air Force Base, AZ, in 1969 as an F-100 instructor pilot. In January 1970, he assumed command of the 310th Tactical Fighter Training Squadron, the first Air Force A-7 unit. While stationed at Luke Air Force Base, he progressed from squadron commander to director of operations for the 58th Tactical Fighter Training Wing. General Bond returned to England Air Force Base in 1972, as vice commander of the newly reorganized 23rd Tactical Fighter Wing. During this assignment, he served on temporary duty in Southeast Asia flying combat missions in A-7's.

In June 1973, General Bond came to Washington, DC, as the deputy director for General Purpose Forces. He was responsible for establishing and validating operational requirements and system modifications for tactical fighter and airlift aircraft and their associated weaponry and subsystems.

In 1978, General Bond moved to Florida, where I came to know him, when he was assigned to Eglin Air Force Base, as commander of the Armament Division, Air Force Systems Command. In 1981, he was promoted to lieutenant general and assumed the duties as vice commander of Air Force Systems Command at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland.

General Bond is survived by his wife Betty, four children—Susan B. Hurry; Robert M. Bond, Pamela Bond-Lunger; and Stephen L. Bond, and five grandchildren.

General Bond was a fine family man, an outstanding aviator, a superior leader, and a dedicated American. He dedicated his life and his talents to the defense of his country. We will truly miss him.●

S. 2375—SBA LOANS

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, on February 29, 1984, I, along with Senator BUMPERS the ranking member of the Small Business Committee, and others, introduced legislation, S. 2375, to improve the operation of the secondary market for loans guaranteed by the Small Business Administration and to open up new sources of capital for small businesses.

This bill would permit the pooling of the guaranteed portions of SBA loans for sale in larger lots to investors. In this way, such major institutional investors as pension funds, insurance companies, and mutual funds would be encouraged, and could be attracted for the first time to invest in SBA guaranteed loans, thereby allowing small businesses to tap capital pools previously unavailable, at no additional cost to the Government.

The Small Business Committee has already held a hearing on this bill. At this and other congressional hearings, and in several related studies, brokers, local lending institutions and the General Accounting Office all spoke enthusiastically of the benefits that small business could receive from a vastly improved and expanded secondary market in SBA guaranteed loans. Testimony was highly supportive that this increased market activity would produce market efficiencies that could lower the interest rates for small business.

It is no secret that small businesses have traditionally had the most difficulty in obtaining needed capital through conventional financing channels. The record level of interest rates this country experienced in the last few years has made the economic life of small business one of uncertainty. Not only has capital been expensive, but in many cases that capital has been difficult, or even impossible, to obtain. By encouraging investment in small business through an efficient secondary market operation, this bill would go a long way toward insuring that small business has access to sufficient capital at reasonable terms and affordable rates.

We have already received letters from a number of significant Small Business organizations expressing their support for this legislation and their hope that Congress acts quickly to adopt it. At this time, I would like to share with my colleagues copies of the letters I have received from Small Business United, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Independent Bankers Association, National Small Business Association, Small Business Legislative Council, National Association of Small Business Investment Companies, American Association of Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Companies, National Association of Business Development Corps., Smaller Business Association of New England, National Council for Urban Economic Development, Utah Council of Small Business, and the Indepedent Business Association of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I ask that these letters be printed in their entirety in the RECORD.

The letters follow:

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Small Business United (SBU) a coalition of 14 regional, state and metropolitan trade associations representing more than 60,000 small businesses nationwide supports S. 2375 and urges its quick enactment by the Senate.

The bill, providing for the pooled sale of Small Business Administration (SBA) 7(a) guaranteed loans into a secondary market, could dramatically improve small business' access to capital and increase the efficiency of SBA's loan program at no financial cost to the federal government. As was shown in a recent General Accounting Office report on the 7(a) loan program, loans guaranteed by the SBA are an important source of capital for small business. According to the GAO "approximately 30 to 40 percent of the dollar amount of banks' long-term financing (six years or more) to small businesses may carry an SBA guarantee." By improving the salability of 7(a) loans in secondary markets, S. 2375 enhances bank liquidity allowing banks to make more loans, both 7(a) guaranteed and non-guaranteed loans. Thus small business, as well as other bank borrowers, will have increased access to capital, and market efficiency will be improved.

SBU thanks you for sponsoring this bill and hopes it will soon become law.

Sincerely,

JOHN C. RENNIE,
President, SBU.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, May 7, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, composed of nearly 200,000 companies of which most are small businesses, I commend you and Senator Bumpers for introducing S. 2375, legislation to improve the operation of the secondary market for loans guaranteed by the Small Business Administration (SBA).

The U.S. Chamber's Council of Small Business recently voted to endorse this legislation as consistent with the Chamber's policy of insuring the adquate availability of financing to meet the needs of those small businesses without access to private sector sources of funding.

As you and members of your Committee are well aware, obtaining capital through traditional financing channels is expensive and difficult for small companies. In many cases, lack of available capital can thwart the development of growing businesses, and may even threaten the continued viability of smaller firms.

Your proposal to encourage development of the secondary market for SBA loans should increase the funds available to small business borrowers from SBA loans, while reducing the cost of these loans.

We look forward to working with you toward swift passage of this important legislation.

Sincerely,

RICHARD L. BREAULT.

INDEPENDENT BANKERS
ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, April 13, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Small Business, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your invitation, I am writing in regard to your bill S. 2375, to improve the secondary marketing of SBA guaranteed loans, on which you held hearings March 6. The IBAA supports the enactment of S. 2375.

The IBAA's resolutions call for Congress and the Administration "to strengthen guaranteed loan program authorizations wherever guaranteed loans have proven effective, and to make such loan guarantees as workable and reliable as possible for borrowers and lenders." By providing for the pooled sale of SBA guaranteed loans and otherwise encouraging the secondary marketing of guaranteed loans, S. 2375 should strengthen the SBA loan guarantee program.

Guarantees by the Small Business Administration can be useful in channelling funds to small businesses which may have difficulty competing for adequate credit. A government loan guarantee can increase the capacity of independent banks to serve small business borrowers because the guaranteed loan is readily salable in secondary markets, does not generally apply against the legal lending limit of the banks, and may render certain loans less subject to a substandard classification by the bank regulators. The sale of guaranteed loans in the secondary market enables a flow of funds into fund-deficient areas to finance local enterprises. The marketing of guaranteed loans to secondary investors can also enable local institutions to extend longer term credit to businesses.

In the pooling of SBA guaranteed loans as provided in S. 2375, the pooling arrangements should in all cases accommodate individual loans or very small numbers of loans from originating banks, so that smaller banks which originate smaller numbers of SBA loans are not bypassed in this process.

APRIL 30, 1984.

Senator LOWELL WEICKER,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The National Small Business Association (NSB) is pleased to support your legislation, S. 2375, which would improve the operation of secondary markets for SBA guaranteed loans.

This legislation, if enacted, should help the small business sector by way of providing for long-term, low-rate financing for worthy businesses. The fact that banks would be able to "roll over" loans already made under the guaranteed program thereby replenishing their loan portfolios will be beneficial, particularly as the economic recovery increases loan demand. Furthermore, the secondary market should provide a means for tapping into insurance funds and pension funds, an area our association has long pursued.

Once again, please be asssured of our support in your efforts to gain passage of S. 2375.

Sincerely,

JEROME R. GULAN,
Executive Vice President.

SMALL BUSINESS, LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,
Washington, DC, May 3, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL WEICKER,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the Small Business Legislative Council (SBLC) I commend your initiative in sponsoring legislation to stimulate the growth of secondary markets for SBA guarantee loans.

SBLC views the secondary market as a source of capital funding for small business which is assuming greater and greater importance in today's economy. We believe that legislation such as S. 2375 is needed, and will prove to be of great value to small business in the years ahead.

It is my pleasure, therefore, to report that the Executive Committee of the Small Business Legislative Council supports S. 2375, and urges your Committee to expedite Senate approval. This legislation would be especially useful if it can be assured that funds generated from the sale of "packaged" SBA guaranteed loans will in fact be used to make new loans to small companies and not for other purposes.

Please be assured that we shall also submit your legislation to the 82 trade and professional associations representing one fourth of the small business community who are members of SBLC for their individual support and approval as well.

Sincerely,

JARED O. BLUM,
Chairman, Vice President, Direct Selling Association.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT COMPANIES,
Washington, DC, April 25, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL WEICKER, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing this letter to express our Association's support for S. 2375, the legislation you have introduced to make the secondary market process more efficient in the Small Business Administration's guaranteed loan program.

Although small business investment companies do not participate directly in the SBA loan program, we strongly back S. 2375, for two reasons.

First, many of the small businesses in which SBICs invest are prime candidates for guaranteed loans under Section 7 of the Small Business Act. We believe that your legislative proposal would enhance the ability of these growth firms to receive loans in a timely fashion.

Our second reason for supporting S. 2375 arises from the nature of the SBIC program itself. As you know, SBICs are privately-capitalized and privately-managed financial institutions providing venture capital and long-term loans to young and growing businesses. SBICs make their own investment decisions without SBA approval or oversight. We believe that this private sector orientation has proven effective and highly successful over the past 25 years. SBA's costs in administering the program are negligible; the Federal Government's losses on its loans to SBICs have also been minimal.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF MESBIC'S
Washington, DC, May 1, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL WEICKER,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: On February 29, 1984, you introduced S. 2375, a bill to amend the Small Business Act to improve the operation of the secondary market for loans guaranteed by the Small Business Administration. The American Association of Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Companies (AAMESBIC) applauds your effort as an efficient example of a government and private sector initiative working toward a common good.

Through our daily exposure to small business entrepreneurs in need of financing, the MESBIC industry is acutely aware of the need for the increased availability of small business investment capital. The establishment of a secondary market for SBA guaranteed loans would attract funds from insurance companies, pension funds, and other traditionally long term investors, permitting the SBA to extend additional loans to the small business community at no additional cost to the government. The increased supply of funds could also be expected to ultimately lower interest rates to the small business borrower.

S. 2375 has the enthusiastic support of the MESBIC industry. We would welcome the opportunity to testify at any future hearings on the bill, and offer any assistance we may be able to provide in furthering its progress.

Sincerely,

JOANN H. PRICE.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS,
Washington, DC, April 18, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

MY DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: I am writing on behalf of the membership of our organization to thank you for your sponsorship of S-2375. The passage of this bill would greatly improve the lending capability of the BDC's throughout the country, all of whom are private sector enterprises.

The use of the 7-A guarantee program by the BDC's has been ongoing for several years and it has become a valuable financing item.

Sincerely yours,

FRED F. STOCKWELL,
President.

SMALLER BUSINESS ASSOCIATION OF NEW ENGLAND, INC.,
Waltham, MA, April 27, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
U.S. Senate, 303 Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: On behalf of SBANE's 2000 members throughout New England, I want to commend your recent efforts in introducing to the Senate a bill that would facilitate a secondary market for the SBA guaranteed loans.

As Chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, I know you are aware of the many problems facing small businesses. Of particular concern is the difficulty small businesses have in getting capital, both for start-up and expansion efforts.

Your leadership in developing this legislation, S. 2375, is outstanding. Modeled after Ginnie Mae, S. 2375 would allow the pooling of the guaranteed portions of SBA loans for sale in large lots to investors. For the first time, major institutional investors would be attracted to invest in SBA loans through this secondary market.

Small businesses throughout the nation will benefit from this legislation by being able to secure long-term financing at fixed and lower rates. By introducing S. 2375, you have done a great service to the small business sector. With passage of S. 2375, there will be more capital available for small businesses allowing them to continue to lead the nation in productivity, innovation and job creation.

Again, thank you for your leadership. If I can be of service in helping to get this bill enacted, please don't hesitate to call me or SBANE's public affairs director, Carolyn VanSant.

Sincerely,

LEWIS A. SHATTUCK,
Executive Vice President.

NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR URBAN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT,
Washington, DC, May 3, 1984.

Hon. LOWELL P. WEICKER,
Chairman, Small Business Committee,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: The National Council for Urban Economic Development supports your efforts to facilitate the flow of capital to small business. The ability of small business to create jobs, investment, and technological innovation is well recognized by our public and private sector economic development practitioners who strive daily to bring about sustained economic growth in over 450 communities around the country.

Specifically, we welcome your Committee's proposal to expand the secondary market for SBA loans as proposed in S. 2375. This bill is unique in that it would increase the amount of capital available to small business without additional federal outlays.

We hope the Congress proceeds expeditiously on this important proposal.

Sincerely,

JAMES E. PETERSON,
Executive Director.

UTAH COUNCIL OF SMALL BUSINESS,
Salt Lake City, UT, April 30, 1984.

Senator LOWELL WEICKER, Jr.,
U.S. Senate, Committee on Small Business, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER. The Utah Council of Small Business is pleased to lend its support to S. 2375, amending the Small Business Act to improve the operation of the secondary market for loans guaranteed by the Small Business Administration.

Securing capital is still the major problem for small business and this effort to accomodate pooling of SBA guaranteed loans for sale to secondary market investors seems to be an excellent way of assisting small business. It appears to be a way of surmounting the problem individual small businesses have because of relatively low loan volumes.

Please let us know if we can be of assistance in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

JAMES B. KENNARD,
Vice President.

INDEPENDENT BUSINESS ASSOCIATION OF WISCONSIN,
Madison, WI, April 30, 1984.

Senator LOWELL WEICKER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WEICKER: On behalf of the members of the Independent Business Association of Wisconsin, we want to thank you for sponsoring Senate Bill 2375 authorizing current SBA administrative secondary market loan policy.

IBA supports this legislation because it would allow pooling or combining individual SBA loans into larger lots, thereby spreading risks over a larger number of projects and providing a more marketable package to private sector lenders such as pension funds, institutional investors, and large money center banks. These large sources of capital have traditionally been unavailable to small business borrowers.

We also feel that the desire to limit off budget spending, while laudable, does not properly take into account the differences between this program and others that only appear to be similar.

The SBA secondary market program, extensively used by several Wisconsin banks, allows a conduit between small businesses and private investors that, as cited above, are not usually available as small business lenders.

The program has been successful and unlike the "direct" lending programs of SBA is based solely on private sector credit judgements. The programs allows a small firm to obtain credit at fixed rates for long terms thereby placing them on a similar footing with large corporate borrowers.

We laud your efforts on behalf of small business and look forward to passage that we may better fuel the U.S. economy with new products, new jobs and a new place in the international marketplace.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL N. HOPE,
President-Elect.

RETENTION OF THE DEDUCTION FOR MORTGAGE INTEREST

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I want to take a few minutes to address the Senate on the issue of deductibility of mortgage interest, and to express my support for Senate Resolution 385. This sense of the Senate resolution was introduced on May 2, 1984, by the distinguished Senator from Texas, Mr. BENTSEN, and provides that the deduction for mortgage interest should be retained regardless of what we do to reform or simplify the current Tax Code.

The Senator from Texas offered this resolution after the President of the United States recently refused to rule out a limit on the deductibility of mortgage interest as a part of any tax package, currently under review by the Department of the Treasury. In light of this, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will approve this resolution promptly so that we send a strong signal to the home building industry, and also homeowners and potential home buyers.

There is no question about the need to reexamine the existing Tax Code, Mr. President. It has grown entirely too complex and I think we can take some steps to make the tax system more equitable and more understandable. These efforts will improve compliance. However, the deduction of mortgage interest has been one of the cornerstones of our Nation's commitment to housing and homeownership, and it is essential that it be retained. This deduction has been the key to fair, decent, and affordable housing in this country, and with interest rates as high as they are currently—and the projections are for mortgage rates to go higher next year—it is essential that potential home buyers have every assurance that this provision will be retained.

The statistics about the crowding out effect as mortgage rates climb are very distressing, Mr. President. I have seen estimates that show that when mortgage rates hit 15 percent the number of families able to afford homes is reduced to about one in nine. The end result of higher interest rates is that more and more people are putting off buying a home. We have got to do more to get the deficit under control, and we also need to retain the current deduction. These factors will encourage homeownership and promote community stability as new families put down roots. For all of these reasons, Mr. President, I think the Senate needs to reaffirm our commitment to the mortgage interest deduction.

I have asked that my name be added as a cosponsor of the Bentsen resolution.●

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION FOR STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, President Reagan in a proclamation on November 28, 1983, designated 1983 through 1992 as the "National Decade of Disabled Persons" and set as a national goal the increased economic independence of every disabled American. I would like to share with my colleagues some valuable insights contained in the National Advisory Council on Vocational Education's "Position Statement on Vocational Education For Students With Disabilities."

For years, there have been many leaders who have reminded us that there are 36 million Americans out there who provide the strength of a tremendous natural resource—if channeled in a productive way. A handicapped person is only disabled to the extent that he or she is prevented from achievement. It is a myth that disabled people prefer to stay at home and do nothing in order to collect Government or insurance benefits.

I commend the members of the National Advisory Council on Vocational Education for their leadership in bringing about progress in the design of vocation programs for disabled students, and I ask that their Position Statement be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of Members.

The statement follows:

POSITION STATEMENT ON VOCATIONAL EDUCATION FOR STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

The National Advisory Council on Vocational Education calls upon State and local agencies to provide appropriately designed vocational education programs to disabled students in order to help them become self-sufficient in living and working.

BACKGROUND

History is replete with examples of disabled people working in a full range of occupational areas. We know about mentally retarded individuals working as welders, blind people in farming, deaf persons as automobile mechanics, and people using wheelchairs as draftsmen—the list can go on and on. Disabled people have proven their mettle; they can work. The limiting factors are not their disabilities, but our ability to see their potential and to assist them in their development.

If we look beyond the Federal laws that demand equal rights for handicapped people, we can see an even more compelling reason for undertaking increased efforts to ensure access and equality for handicapped people in employment and in those educational programs which lead to employment. It's the economics of dependence versus independence. Statistics show that for every dollar spent on rehabilitation training, the individual can expect a return of approximately ten more dollars in lifetime earnings. The amount of income tax paid by the working disabled is proportionally increased. For the nation, dependence includes the added costs of public maintenance, institutionalized care, and social security disability payments. It then becomes abundantly clear that we can ill afford NOT to prepare handicapped people for employment.

SERVICES TO STUDENTS WITH HANDICAPPING CONDITIONS

Vocational educators must provide learning and occupational opportunities for disabled persons to become independent and cast off the kinds of assistance, although well-intentioned, that leads to dependency. Vocational education for the handicapped necessitates a change of thinking on the part of the employers about hiring disabled people. The disabled student requires a great deal of understanding on the part of the teacher. Different safety rules may be required; more space may be needed in labs to maneuver a wheelchair. More career and vocational guidance centers are needed so that students with a handicapping condition can find the career or vocation in which he or she will be successful. Vocational teachers must be prepared to offer praise frequently. School personnel must administer a series of work evaluations and assessments to accurately assess the students' interests and abilities prior to developing a formalized individual vocational program. Employers must be patient: those that are have found that handicapped employees are more responsible, have fewer absences, and pay more attention to detail work than many other workers.

In view of the employment potential of disabled people and the legal and economic reasons for facilitating their access to employment-related programs, we must continue to explore new mechanisms which will enable the vocational education enterprise to expand and improve its services to this target population. During the 1981 school year, 34.6 percent of the estimated number of disabled students in grades 9 to 12 were served by vocational education. This figure is evidence of a continual increase in the number of disabled students served. Between 1976 and 1981, secondary vocational enrollment increased to about 18 percent. For the same period, secondary enrollment of disabled students in vocational programs changed from 203,647 to 437,397, an increase of 115 percent.

National commitment to the handicapped, during the 1976–1981 time period, was considerable. The Council, while continuing to support the presence and leadership of the Federal Government, however, recognizes that State and local agencies have a decisive role in expanding and improving services.

A recent study was undertaken, in which the Council cooperated, to help answer the question, "To what degree have state level comprehensive cooperative agreements involving special education, vocational education, and vocational rehabilitation influenced the delivery of local level services to handicapped youth enrolled in vocational education?" Analysis of findings shows that state and local comprehensive agreements exerted a significant positive impact on local programs. This impact or influence is in program operations that are not only crucial to the development of appropriate vocational education services for handicapped students; but also, would appear to be difficult to achieve without some form of organized cooperation among different agencies and programs. More specifically, the comprehensive agreement provides a unique and impartial setting through which previously distinctive program operations can provide a more focused approach to service delivery by establishing a common language and set of goals and objectives. Unfortunately, only seventeen states had, according to the study's criteria, a comprehensive cooperative agreement.

Another study found that a majority of states responding have put into place the kinds of support systems needed to expand and improve the quality of services. Indicative of this trend are the documented increases in related state laws, education codes, cooperative agreements and studies on coordination and cooperation between special education and vocational education.

FUTURE ACTIVITIES

In order to continue to help disabled students achieve the goal of self-sufficiency in living and working, the National Advisory Council on Vocational Education proposes that certain activities be carried out by the responsible agencies. Through the implementation of the following activities, the Council anticipates the expansion of appropriately designed vocational programs for disabled students:

FEDERAL LEVEL

Technical assistance: Help states develop and implement comprehensive cooperative agreements. Disseminate profiles of exemplary secondary and postsecondary vocational programs serving disabled students.

Information: Collect data on the (a) actual number of disabled students in grades 9 through 12 (ages 16 to 21); and (b) the kind of vocational program taken.

STATE AND LOCAL LEVEL

Professional Preparation: Require pre and inservice preparation of vocational education teachers and support personnel that will sustain effective instruction of disabled students.

Commitment: Put into place state provisions that promote the expansion and quality of pre-vocational and vocational programming and services to disabled students.

Prepare a position statement which commits the local secondary or postsecondary education agency to the goal of offering appropriately designed vocational programs.

Linkages: Establish state and local comprehensive cooperative agreements or other mechanisms to improve the delivery of services.

Urge local business people to employ vocationally prepared disabled persons.

Recruitment: Develop a plan of action designed to introduce disabled students into vocational areas where their involvement is low, or perhaps does not exist.●

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I wish to share with my colleagues an article, "Australian Farmers Despair As Its Sugar Industry Hits Most Depressed Level in Over a Century," which appeared in the April 23 edition of the Australian. I share it with my colleagues because it illustrates the dire situation in the world sugar market and the problem facing sugar producers, even efficient sugar producers with support programs.

I note with interest that the Queensland sugar farmers are seeking an increase in their support level from $480 to $560 a ton. Even with a 93-cent dollar, and a long as opposed to a short ton, it places that support price above the present $350 per ton U.S. support level. While I do not know the details of the Australian sugar program it is clear that present EEC sugar policy, and the current International Sugar Agreement in which the EEC is not a participant, has made it absolutely essential that nations defend even their most efficient producers with a domestic support program. I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues as we look to renewal of the sugar program in the 1985 farm bill.

I also wish to share with my colleagues a brief statement which Mr. Robert Hughes, the president of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association presented to Secretary Block at the USDA listening session in Riverside, CA, Saturday, April 28. I hope that it will help my colleagues, who may have questioned the need for and wisdom of the current program, appreciate that program's importance to the welfare and survival of this important domestic industry.

I ask that the material to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

STATEMENT BY ROBERT H. HUGHES ON BEHALF OF HAWAIIAN SUGAR PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION

Thank you for the opportunity to present a statement about food and agriculture policy with respect to United States production of sugar.

My name is Robert H. Hughes, and I am President of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, a non-profit organization of sugar growers in Hawaii.

The 9,000,000 tons of sugarcane grown and milled by HSPA members produces about 1,000,000 tons of raw sugar each year. Our sugar is refined by California and Hawaiian Sugar Company (C and H), and agricultural processing and marketing cooperative owned by Hawaiian sugarcane producers. C and H markets refined sugar throughout the west and sells approximately 150,000 tons as raw sugar to Gulf and East Coast refineries.

Despite decline in acreage since 1981, sugar remains the dominant agricultural activity in Hawaii, utilizing three-fourths of the state's cultivated acreage and employing 7,800 workers, 8 percent of Hawaii's private employment. Fifteen hundred refinery jobs in California are dependent upon Hawaiian sugar. In addition, there are approximately 20,000 in related employment in Hawaii dependent upon the sugar industry.

Hawaiian production represents 17 percent of total U.S. production, and Hawaii is second only to Florida as a domestic producer of sugar.

Despite Hawaii having the world's highest sugar-per-acre yields and lowest manhour input, our industry lost some $89 million in 1981, a year in which there was no U.S. sugar program. The sugar provisions of the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981 were adopted just in time to provide the Hawaiian sugar industry with an opportunity for survival.

With the continuing sharp decline in sugar prices on the world "dump" market in early 1982, it became necessary for USDA to employ quotas on sugar imports to avoid acquisition of sugar stocks by the Federal Government. Those quotas have effectively maintained a price in the U.S. market sufficient to keep that market a more attractive destination for domestic sugar than the alternative of forfeiture. Mr. Secretary, your Department is to be congratulated on the exemplary manner in which the sugar program has been administered. It has achieved the goal established by the Congress to operate the program without cost to the government while assuring the survival of a domestic sugar industry and an adequate supply of sugar at reasonable prices.

From the viewpoint of Hawaii's sugar producers, the sugar program has been absolutely essential to our survival. With aggressive cost-cutting efforts, it has permitted our industry to reduce the $89 million loss suffered in 1981 to about a break-even on sugar in 1983. Profits from by-products, however, allowed a meager 2.7 percent return on invested capital. One-half the Hawaii plantations, producing one-third of the 1983 crop, operated at a loss for the third successive year and are in a fight for survival. Their continuance is in real jeopardy despite the stability provided by the Farm Act.

Our cost-cutting efforts have been painful and are continuing. Fifteen percent of our 1981 sugar acreage has been abandoned and only a fraction of those acres are likely to be used for other crops. Many small independent cane farmers, who mill their crops at plantation facilities, have dropped by the wayside.

In summary, the reaction in Hawaii to rock-bottom sugar prices in 1981 has been shrinkage in farmed acres and production, coupled with stringent cost-cutting. The outcome is uncertain as to the future.

The sugar loan rate is scheduled to increase by a quarter cent each year, about 1.5 percent per year, through fiscal 1986. It is doubtful that we can contain costs of production within the 1.5 percent increase.

The present sugar program is a program that works and works without cost to American taxpayers.

Your administration has every reason to take pride in its implementation. The Hawaiian sugar industry urges you to seek its renewal in the next Farm Act.

Thank you very much.

AUSTRALIAN FARMERS DESPAIR AS ITS SUGAR INDUSTRY HITS MOST DEPRESSED LEVEL IN OVER A CENTURY

The sugar industry has fallen to its most depressed level in over a century, and hundreds of cane farmers face being forced from the land. World sugar prices have dropped by half in the past six months because of large surpluses and declining consumption.

The downturn in the industry—our eighth largest export earner—will severely affect many Queensland coastal towns. It is also expected to affect the national economy, because sugar ranks second behind wheat as the nation's main rural crop.

The sugar industry has been severely affected before, but never in its long history has it been in such trouble. Worst affected are the family cane farmers who have been the backbone of the industry for generations. Many are shattered by the sudden downturn. Their troubles began in the early 1980s when world prices were relatively high and many medium to large producers borrowed heavily to expand. But a price collapse, combined with rising interest rates, drought, rising costs and falling consumption for the first time in 80 years, took their toll. Worse could follow if the world sugar industry cannot agree on a new International Sugar Agreement in Geneva in June.

Subsidized European Economic Community sugar exports are depressing world prices and depriving other countries of export earnings. The only growers making money from sugar are those in the EEC, which has flooded the market, increasing exports between 1977 and 1981 by 340 percent. The EEC's share of world exports has risen from 7.8 percent in 1976 to 25.6 percent in 1982.

The Queensland Cane Growers Council warns a price war could break out among exporting countries if a new ISA is not made. The main exporters have large stockpiles, built up as part of their price-support obligations under the present ISA. Release of these stocks could have a devastating effect on prices.

Despite being the most efficient sugar producers in the world, Australia's 6800 cane farmers will earn an average $5622 in this financial year, after a meagre profit of $4193 in 1982-83. "If we do nothing the industry will sort itself out—people will go bankrupt," the council's general-secretary, Mr. Ron Belcher, says. "But, if structural changes are carefully managed the human suffering will be reduced and people will be able to leave the industry with dignity."

The family farm structure of the industry is under greatest threat. Mr. Belcher says if the industry were starting afresh it would begin with businesses instead of family farms and holdings would be larger. Typical is a Bundaberg grower, Mr. Lindsay Curd. When he left school, aged 14, he dreamed of buying a sugarcane farm. For six years he worked up to 100 hours a week until he bought his farm. Mr. Curd spent the next 10 years working the same long hours on his own farm and for a neighboring cane farmer, Mr. Ned Churchwood, to pay for it. Eventually, he was able to buy a second and then a third farm.

Now he is in danger of losing his farms. Three years ago his 36ha of land was worth $220,000. Today, there are no buyers at any price. Mr. Curd can't get another job because of the sugar depression in the Bundaberg district. Similarly, most cane farmers forced from the land will be battling for new jobs. Sugar is the only business they know. Mr. Alan Lawson, another Bundaberg grower, says after a lifetime in the industry he hopes to just scrape through.

"We live in the hope that prices will eventually improve or that something will happen," Mr. Lawson said. "I don't know how those people with overdrafts and big mortages will survive. Costs and taxes are crippling the industry."

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics agrees that prospects for recovery are poor without an upturn in world prices, but says in the long term Australia has the potential to lift sugar production considerably. Domestically, cane growers have called for an increase of $80 a ton to $560 a ton after the Commonwealth Queensland Sugar Agreement comes into force on June 30.

Mr. Belcher says the industry wants more than $480 a ton for manufacture-type sugar, but there are alternative sweeteners and sugar must stay competitive.

The Bundaberg Sugar Company says there is reason for optimism and believes it is realistic to think the world price can steadily increase later in 1984. About 95 percent of the national crop is produced in Queensland, stretching from Mossman, north of Cairns, through to Bundaberg and as far south as Grafton in northern NSW. Mr. Churchwood, one of the larger farmers growing 9000 tons of can in his 134.8ha each year, is the chairman of the Bundaberg District Canegrowers executive and serves on many other industry boards.

He is weathering the downturn because he has financial reserves. But he is cutting costs and delaying the purchase of new equipment until the industry is profitable. "Because of our resilience we will survive, but the going is very tough for a lot," Mr. Churchwood says. "This is one of the oldest cane-growing areas in Australia and although the Government doesn't owe us a living, it does have the responsibility of containing basic charges such as electricity and water, which are placing export industries in jeopardy. "And something must be done about costs. Only four years ago diesel cost 16¢ a litre, now it is 44¢."

He says the answer is not for cane farmers to become more efficient because the industry has reached its limit for the time being: "We need prices $25 a ton higher. If the sugar industry dies these sugar towns all along the coast will also die."

Nearly 400,000ha of prime agricultural land is used for cane growing. Australia, the fourth largest sugar producer in the world, limits production to about 3.6 million tons (worth $635 million in export earnings) through quotas, but could increase production to 5 million tons in existing mill areas. World production is expected to fall to 95.86 million tons this financial year, compared with 100 million tons in the two previous seasons.

Mr. Belcher says the problem with the existing ISA is that the EEC has not been a part of it: "If we can establish a new ISA which includes the EEC, then we can start to get some price agreement." Changing the image of sugar in diets is the other key problem. Mr. Belcher says sugar is an important energy food and there is no scientific evidence to support statements suggesting sugar is bad.

Australian consumption has fallen from 50kg a person a year—a level it maintained all this century until four years ago—to 46kg a person. The industry is now spending several million dollars on an education program to counter fallacies and misconceptions about sugar.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATIONS BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this notice of a Senate employee who proposes to participate in a program, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. David G. Shoultz, of the staff of Senator HAWKINS to participate in a program sponsored by the Hebrew University of Jerusalem in Jerusalem from January 2-13, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Shoultz, in the program in Jerusalem, at the expense of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, to discuss United States-Israeli relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. David S. Sullivan, of the staff of Senators MCCLURE and SYMMS, to participate in a program sponsored by the Confederation of the Associations for the Unity of the Societies of the Americas, in Montevideo, Uruguay, from February 20 through 25, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Sullivan in the program in Montevideo, Uruguay, at the expense of the Confederation of the Associations for the Unity of the Societies of the Americas, to attend a convention, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under Rule 35 which would permit Mr. Earl Eisenhower and Mrs. Judy Eisenhower, of the staff of Senator GOLDWATER, Miss Dorthea Roberson of the staff of the Intelligence Committee, to participate in a program sponsored by Soochow University, in Taipei, Taiwan, from November 20-28, 1983.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Eisenhower, Mrs. Eisenhower, and Miss Roberson in the program in Taipei at the expense of Soochow University, to discuss educational research programs, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Kathy Stoner of the staff of Senator JESSE HELMS, to participate in a program sponsored by Tunghai University, in Taipei, Taiwan, from August 9-17, 1983.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Stoner in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of Tunghai University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Senator ARLEN SPECTER and Mrs. Specter, and Mr. Paul R. Michel, a member of the Senator's staff, to participate in the following programs from January 3-16, 1984, visits to the Republic of China, sponsored by Soochow University, to Hong Kong, sponsored by the Chinese University of New Asia College and to the Peoples Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs.

The committee has determined that participation by Senator and Mrs. Specter and Mr. Michel in these programs, for meetings and discussions with government and civilian leaders, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Senator DENNIS DECONCINI, his wife Susan, and Jane Green and Stephen Wilson of his Senate staff, to participate in a program sponsored by Soochow University, in Taipei, Taiwan, from April 13-18, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Senator DECONCINI, his wife Susan and Jane Green and Stephen Wilson of the Senator's staff, in the program in Taipei, Taiwan, at the expense of Soochow University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit R. Ian Butterfield, a member of Senator ROTH'S staff, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese Culture University from April 15-24, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Butterfield in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese Culture University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Richard Rolf of the staff of Senator HATFIELD to participate in a program sponsored by Hauss Rissen, in Hamburg and Berlin, West Germany, from April 5-13, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Rolf in the seminar in Hamburg and Berlin, West Germany, at the expense of Hauss Rissen, to discuss United States-German relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Paul Sivley of the staff of Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI, to participate in a program in Jordan, sponsored by the World Affairs Council, from April 13-22, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Sivley in the program in Jordan, at the expense of the World Affairs Council, a private educational and cultural association based in Amman, Jordan, to participate in a factfinding trip, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Senator PAUL S. TRIBLE, JR., to participate in a program sponsored by Tamkang University in Taipei, Taiwan, from October 7-13, 1983.

The committee has determined that participation by Senator TRIBLE in the program in Taipei, at the expense of Tamkang University, to meet with government and civilian leaders is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

CUBAN GOVERNMENT'S INVOLVEMENT IN FACILITATING INTERNATIONAL DRUG TRAFFIC

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of my colleagues to an excellent article by Stanley Penn and Edward T. Pound that appeared in the Wall Street Journal on April 30, 1984.

The article describes the protection offered to smugglers by the Cuban Government in exchange for hard currency that it needs for its efforts to foment revolution in Latin America.

The article carefully delineates the extensive evidence now on the record, and credits our colleague from Alabama, Mr. JEREMIAH DENTON, with first uncovering the role of the Cuban Government more than 2 years ago.

Mr. President, the article speaks for itself, but I want to say that Senator DENTON deserves our thanks for first bringing the official role of the Cuban Government to our attention and for continuing to expose the facts through his work as chairman of the Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from the Wall Street Journal be printed in full in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The article follows:

SMUGGLERS OF DRUGS FROM COLOMBIA TO THE UNITED STATES ARE PROTECTED BY CUBA—IN RETURN, IT GETS CURRENCY TO FOMENT REVOLUTION; ADMIRAL'S ODD ACTIVITIES—EAVESDROPPER AT THE HILTON

(By Stanley Penn and Edward T. Pound)

The drug business is helping Cuba foment revolution in Latin America.

While maintaining an outwardly tough posture toward drug smugglers, the Cuban government has secretly singled out a few for special favors. These selected traffickers have been permitted to use Cuban waters as a haven from the U.S. Coast Guard while transshipping narcotics to the U.S. From Colombia.

In return, Cuba gets scarce hard currency—as much as $500,000 per shipment, by some estimates. It uses some of this money to buy arms that are secretly ferried by the drug smugglers to guerrillas in Latin America.

This arrangement, said to be sanctioned by Fidel Castro himself, has been detailed by U.S. drug investigators and intelligence specialists, as well as by drug runners who have given first hand testimony of their activities to lawmen in the U.S. and Mexico.

OFFICIAL CONCERN

"There's evidence of a considerable amount of drug trafficking that transits through Cuba by water and air," says Frank V. Monastero, assistant administrator of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration. Noting that the smugglers sometimes use Cuban government facilities, Mr. Monastero adds: "If the Cuban government wanted to cease that activity, they could put a stop to it."

Drug agents don't think Cuba operates its own drug smuggling network. Rather, they say, Cuba permits certain traffickers safe passage and allows large "mother ships" laden with drugs from Colombia to lay over and refuel in Cuba. This allows the mother ships to transfer their illicit cargo to smaller, faster boats for delivery to Florida.

The Cuban government's ties to drug smuggling were discussed two years ago during hearings by a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Jeremiah A. Denton of Alabama. Federal lawmen gave Senate panels additional information last year and in closed session last month.

A criminal trial last year in Miami provided still more evidence. Four Cuban government officials were among those charged with conspiring to permit Cuba to be used as a loading station for U.S.-bound drug vessels during 1980 and 1981. Six people were convicted or pleaded guilty. The Cuban officials, including a former Cuban ambassador to Colombia and a vice admiral who belonged to the Cuban Communist Party's central committee, failed to appear at the trial and are considered fugitives, according to the U.S. Justice Department.

Evidence presented at the trial has convinced Tom Boyatt, a former U.S. ambassador to Colombia, of the Cuban government's complicity. "When you have a Cuban ambassador and a Cuban admiral involved" he says, "you don't need further evidence that it's a matter of national policy."

Indicted with the Cuban officials was Jaime Guillot-Lara, a 38-year-old Colombian charged with using Cuban facilities to help transport large quantities of marijuana and Quaalude tablets into the U.S. The U.S. government has never apprehended Mr. Guillot-Lara, but in November 1981, he was imprisoned in Mexico for using false identity papers.

Mr. Guillot-Lara admitted shipping arms to Colombia's Cuban-backed M-19 terrorist group, according to a State Department official reporting to a Senate subcommittee. Mr. Guillot-Lara said that funds for the arms shipments were furnished by Cuban embassies in Mexico and Colombia. He was freed by Mexico in 1982, but the Mexican government refused a U.S. request for his extradition. His current whereabouts aren't known.

Mr. Guillot-Lara apparently entered the drug business in 1976. By the U.S. government's estimate, his 15-member gang shipped some 2.5 million pounds of marijuana, 80 pounds of cocaine and 25 million Quaaludes to the U.S. between 1977 and 1981.

THE M-19 CONNECTION

In 1980, Mr. Guillot-Lara allegedly arranged to receive Cuban assistance with those shipments and agreed to transport arms to M-19. Mr. Guillot-Lara was known to M-19 through his longtime acquaintance with Jaime Bateman, a Colombian who was an M-19 leader until his death in a plane crash in 1982.

Mr. Guillot-Lara is known to have purchased Uzi submachine guns, pistols and AR-15 rifles from a Miami arms dealer. According to State Department reports, the arms he purchased typically were ferried to Colombia, where his boat picked up drugs for delivery to the U.S.

In October 1981, for example, Mr. Guillot-Lara's boat, Zar De Honduras, received arms from a ship off the coast of Panama. The arms—550 FAL rifles worth at least $500 apiece and 90,000 cartridges—were delivered to a port on Colombia's northeast coast and taken to a clandestine airport nearby. After 5,000 pounds of marijuana bound for the U.S. were stowed on board the ship, the weapons were flown to an M-19 base in Caqueta province, a large cocaine-producing area in southern Colombia.

M-19 and other Colombian insurgents profit from narcotics by taxing drug growers and by guarding traffickers' airstrips and cocaine-processing laboratories. Colombia's defense minister, Gustavo Matamoros, recently attacked the "alliance" between drug runners and guerrillas. He claimed that planes leave Colombia with cocaine and return with weapons originating in Cuba.

Colombia broke ties with Cuba in 1981, following the capture of some M-19 terrorists who admitted they had been trained and outfitted in Cuba. Just last month 100 M-19 insurgents, armed with submachine guns and hand grenades, battled a Colombian army garrison in Florencia. The army drove off the guerrillas, but not before they had seized the local jail and freed 125 prisoners.

Cuba stoutly denies involvement with drug smugglers. "We have been trying to help in control of the drug traffic," says a Cuban government press officer in Washington. "Every plane, every ship or yacht which we catch in our waters or in our air space, we have detained." Terming the charges that Cuba helps drug smugglers "unfounded," he says that at any given time, 15 to 30 American traffickers are in Cuban jails. "We have been freeing some of them at the request of some [U.S.] congressmen as a goodwill gesture," he adds.

By denying its ties to dope runners, diplomats say, Cuba hopes to avoid antagonizing other Hispanic governments. "The Cubans are interested in expanding regular diplomatic relations with Latin America," a U.S. State Department official says, "and they'd like to present at least a plausible denial that they're involved in subverting these governments."

A MIAMI SUSPECT

Jose Alvero-Cruz, a Miami beauty parlor operator, is among those suspected of using Cuba to smuggle drugs to the U.S. According to a secret 1982 Drug Enforcement Administration report, an informant disclosed that Mr. Alvero-Cruz met with Fidel Castro, and during the meeting they arranged for a fishing vessel, the Santa Marta, to use a secluded harbor on Cuba's southern coast.

"The vessel would contain 50 tons of marijuana and a large quantity of cocaine," the report stated. "Arrangements were made from Cuba to have the Santa Marta leave port and meet the offload boats at sea.".

Mr. Alvero-Cruz, who took part in the abortive, U.S. sponsored Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961, recently began a 10-year prison sentence for federal income tax evasion. The wealthy 44-year-old had "large" bank deposits in Spain, the Justice Department has said. Mr. Alvero-Cruz's attorney says his client "hates Castro" and hasn't been involved with Cuba in drug smuggling.

Another suspected smuggler with Cuban ties is Osiris Santis. According to the drug-agency report. Mr. Santis told an informant that he had received "large quantities" of marijuana and cocaine from "high Cuban government officials." The drugs assertedly came from Colombia's M-19 guerrillas. The informant said he saw "automatic weapons, grenades and explosives of apparent Russian manufacture," in Cuban-born Mr. Santis's possession.

In 1982, Mr. Santis pleaded guilty in Miami's Dade County circuit court to charges of possession of cocaine and a concealed weapon. He received probation. His attorney says that the 40-year-old Mr. Santis denies any wrongdoing in connection with Cuba.

Fresh information about M-19's links to the drug trade may surface as a result of the federal indictment of Harold J. Rosenthal and 29 others in Atlanta last January.

Mr. Rosenthal fled to Colombia after escaping in 1981 from a Memphis prison, where he had been serving time for a drug conviction. He was captured by Colombian authorities last September and returned to the U.S., where he was charged with operating a ring that had smuggled five tons of cocaine into the U.S. since June 1982. "He was sharing his profits with M-19", says an investigator familiar with the case. "In turn, the M-19 allowed him to conduct his business." Mr. Rosenthal has denied any wrongdoing.

Back in 1979, when Cuba was considering aiding drug smugglers, one high level Cuban official branded the plan "barbarous," according to a Central Intelligence Agency report. But according to the CIA's informant, the prevailing view was that by assisting the narcotics trade, Cuba would obtain hard currency while hastening the "deterioration" of U.S. society.

The major Colombian narcotics smugglers long had been eager for an understanding with Cuba. Cuba's vigilance in seizing narcotics boats and confiscating drugs had added burdensome costs to their business.

TOP-LEVEL MEETING IN SPAIN

One former smuggler, interviewed in his attorney's office in Miami, recalls that the leaders of five major Colombian drug gangs met in Spain in 1979 "to see what could be done to get Cuba not to kidnap boats any more." According to the former smuggler, who says he attended some of the meetings, the smugglers determined to seek help from Jaime Guillot-Lara, in the belief that he "had contacts with the Cubans."

Whether Mr. Guillot-Lara aided the traffickers at that time isn't clear. But his Cuban connection was a Colombian lawyer and an admitted drug dealer, Juan (Johnny) Crump, who was a close friend of Cuba's ambassador to Colombia at the time, Fernando Ravelo.

The 43-year-old Mr. Crump, who was briefly jailed in the U.S. after a guilty plea for a drug violation, testified for the government at the Miami drug trial that stemmed from the indictment of the four Cuban officials.

Interviewed in New York, Mr. Crump, currently a U.S. resident, recalls his association with the former Cuban ambassador to Colombia: "We talked to each other almost daily during the last two or three years I was in Colombia," he says. "We called each other compadre." The tall, lanky Mr. Crump displays a snapshot of his youngest daughter, Viviana, with Ambassador Ravelo at the child's baptism in Bogota in November 1980. "Ambassador Ravelo was the godfather," Mr. Crump says.

GATHERING IN BOGOTA

Mr. Crump figured prominently in the negotiations that led to an agreement between the smugglers and Cuba, according to the interview and trial testimony. The deal was struck at a series of meetings held during 1979 and 1980 at the Bogota Hilton Hotel, Mr. Crump says. In attendance were Mr. Crump, Mr. Guillot-Lara, Ambassador Ravelo and Cuba's minister-counselor to Colombia, Gonzalo Bassols. They agreed that Mr. Guillot-Lara's drug boats, flying the Panamanian flag, and bearing the code name Viviana, would be given passage through Cuban waters.

Also privy to those meetings was Mr. Guillot-Lara's girlfriend at the time, Carmen Blanco, whose room at the Bogota Hilton adjoined the conference room. Miss Blanco later told the Miami grand jury that indicted the four Cuban officials what she had overheard. At one point, she said, Mr. Guillot-Lara told the Cubans that "he had enough money to do any type of business with them."

She also testified that Mr. Bassols, the Cuban minister-counselor, told Guillot-Lara that the drug scheme had been cleared by a high Cuban official. "Did he mention that man's name?" the prosecutor asked. "Fidel Castro," replied Miss Blanco, who wasn't accused of any wrongdoing.

A self-described former Cuban intelligence agent, Mario Estevez, was a government witness at the Miami trial. Mr. Estevez said he served on the crew of the Lazy Lady, a fishing boat that sailed from Florida to Cuba in late 1980 to rendezvous with the Viviana, a mother ship laden with 10 million Quaaludes from Colombia. Guillot-Lara, who had purchased the pills for 10 cents each, intended to smuggle them into the U.S., where they would fetch 70 cents apiece, according to information at the trial in Miami.

Mr. Estevez testified that when the Lazy Lady pulled into port on Cuba's north coast it was greeted by Aldo Santamaria Cuadrado, a Cuban vice admiral. The vice admiral allegedly said to the crew: "We are going to fill Miami completely with the drugs." Imprisoned for a drug conviction in 1982, Mr. Estevez has since been released.

Since that incident, U.S. drug agents have seized a number of Mr. Guillot-Lara's ships, thus sharply reducing his drug income and hampering his ability to pay Cuba the required fees. He owed the Cuban government an estimated $8 million as of October 1981, an official of the U.S. drug agency says.

One trawler, seized off North Carolina in 1981, contained 40,000 pounds of marijuana, worth $16 million wholesale. U.S. Coast Guard officials say it bore the name Viviana and flew a Panamanian flag.

Since 1982, the U.S. Coast Guard has intensified its effort to choke off the flow of drugs by placing its cutters along two major trade routes: the Yucatan Straits between Cuba and Mexico and the Windward Passage between Cuba and Haiti. But the Cubans apparently have devised a plan to undercut the U.S. strategy.

According to a Defense Department intelligence report, Cuba has rented a cargo ship for $24,000 a month from a Panamanian shipowner. The scheme calls for the ship to move narcotics north from Colombia to a small island off Cuba's southern coast. The drugs would then be flown over the Cuban mainland to an island off the northern coast and from there shipped to Florida. This route would neatly avoid the Yucatan Straits and the Windward Passage. Whether the plan has yet been employed isn't known.●

DEATH OF FORMER GOV. BILL EGAN OF ALASKA

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I should like to pay tribute to a great Alaskan who played a major role in Alaska's history.

Former Gov. William Egan, 69 years old, died Sunday of cancer. During his lifetime, Bill, as the first Governor of Alaska, was in large part responsible for charting Alaska's future as a State; surely one of the toughest jobs ever faced by an Alaskan.

Bill was one of Alaska's most effective champions of statehood and chaired the convention which carefully crafted Alaska's State constitution.

A firm believer that Alaska's natural resources could be developed rationally for the benefit of the people of Alaska—and the people of the Nation as well—Bill never stopped promoting sound use of the State's natural resources. He was a founding member and cochairman of Commonwealth North, a civic organization dedicated to the orderly economic growth and prosperity of Alaska.

Bill was loved and respected by all Alaskans, as evidenced by his serving three terms as Governor.

One of his most memorable traits was his uncanny ability to remember names and faces. It was commonplace for Bill to meet someone he had met years before and, without hesitation, call him by name. This ability may have seemed to be a small thing, but it was important to everyone who had the privilege of meeting him, and in the three terms he served as Governor, everyone was almost every Alaskan.

I should also like to express my condolences to Bill's longtime companion and ardent supporter, his wife, Neva, as well as his son, Dennis; his sister, Alice Horton; his brother, Clinton, and two granddaughters.

He will be missed.●

COSPONSORSHIP OF NATIONAL ICE CREAM MONTH

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I today cosponsor a joint resolution introduced by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON). This joint resolution would designate the month of July as National Ice Cream Month and July 15, 1984, as National Ice Cream Day.

Mr. President, in my home State of New York, dairy farming is one of our most lucrative and productive industries. Ice cream production uses nearly 10 percent of the milk produced by dairy farmers. The ice cream industry employs thousands and its sales total over $3½ billion.

Not only is ice cream loved by 90 percent of all Americans, but also it is typically American. It symbolizes the United States.

Therefore, in honor of the ice cream industry's sparkling economic performance and its nationwide appeal, I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing the role that this nutritious and wholesome food has played in America's life by adopting this resolution without delay.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

SECRETARY REGAN DISCUSSES THE ECONOMY

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury, Donald Regan, recently spoke in St. Louis to the National Conference of Black Mayors. His remarks covered a broad range of topics relating to the economy. I believe it is noteworthy that the Secretary emphasized the administration's commitment to the enterprise zone legislation to which the Senate agreed last month. These remarks show that the proposal is one of the high priorities of the administration.

I ask that the text of the Secretary's remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The speech follows:

REMARKS BY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY DONALD T. REGAN

It's a pleasure to be in St. Louis, not the least of the reasons being it's a pleasure to get out of Washington. Although I will admit it's a nice time of the year to be in our nation's capital.

Lately, the sun has been shining, the cherry blossoms are blooming and the squirrels are scurring around searching for nuts. Which has a lot of Washingtonians nervous.

A month ago I met with a few members of your group and we had a frank and honest discussion. They felt that it would be a good idea to continue here today before your entire organization what we began discussing last month.

I speak to you as one public servant to another.

Our administration is now embarked upon a program which we believe captures a sensible mixture of idealism and pragmatism. It is a program which holds the promise of progress to all Americans, and, I believe it's a program which is pragmatic, that is, a program which will bring results.

And yet admittedly there are many who yet don't share in the fruits of this prosperity.

And this fact creates a dilemma for all of us in government—for you in your cities, and for us in Washington.

For our part, we are consistently urged to try one of three paths.

There are those who say to us, "Do nothing." But no American can ignore the plight of less fortunate Americans. Out of compassion and humanity, we have an obligation to act.

Then, there are those who say "Try more government aid programs. Spend more money." Well, that has a certain appeal. It sounds good. It is well-intentioned. It satisfies our sense of duty.

There's just one problem. It doesn't work. For half a century we tried these programs. The problems got worse. Then we tried even newer, bigger programs. Again, they didn't work.

Layers of bureaucracy were added. Money was squandered. Much of it staying in Washington. Too little of it ever reaching the people for whom the benefits were intended. They suffered all the more.

Clearly, all we did by throwing good money after bad was to prove a very sound economic theorem: the law of diminishing returns. We kept speeding up the train even though we were heading down the wrong track.

After a half century, not only didn't we help those we intended to help, but we endangered everyone else with destructive inflation and an economy that seemingly had lost its ability to ever boom again. It was time for something new.

The third approach is the one we are now embarked on.

At its core is the belief that if the whole economy could advance, if the whole economy could grow without inflation, then, through that growth, we could also outgrow many of our problems.

It is predicated on the belief that people want to help themselves. We believe they are ready to take advantage of economic opportunity if is is presented to them. We believe they want to do it themselves—and be masters of their own destinies, their own lives.

Can all this happen all at once? Can it happen everywhere at once? No, of course not. Like everything worthwhile, it takes time to build. And therein lies the problem for you and me—and all government officials.

Voters have little, indeed very little patience. But that shouldn't move us from our course.

Our answer is to stimulate the economy. We are doing that, and it obviously has begun to work. But because it hasn't worked on the instant, for everyone everywhere, should we abandon this approach?

I don't think so. Because in the last analysis we must ask and anwer the question: what approach will do the most, for the most, on a permanent basis.

One case in point sums up the difference between the old politics of government pump priming and our approach.

Last year there were demands for us to support an old-style, $3.5 billion training program that was meant to place 300,000 people in make-work jobs over a one year period. We turned it down believing firmly that economic recovery could do that job.

Well, it did the job. We have added over 300,000 permanent jobs every single month for the past 16 months. That's more than 5 million new workers on the job and paying taxes.

Put simply, the recovery put as many people back to work each month as that job program would have done in a year.

I believe this is the kind of program we should pursue—a program that puts people to work, money in their pockets and, incidentally, money in your cash box and mine.

Now I'm not unmindful of the interim pressures. Each of you is a CEO of a municipal community. No matter what the size of your city, you have all experienced the same problems of any mayor in any town. For many of you, your tax base has shifted. To cope, you know that you have to pursue that economic ideal, the net taxpayer—that man, woman, family or business that pays more in taxes than he demands in services.

By the way when you get back home, I wouldn't put it exactly that way. Believe me those net taxpayers will unnet themselves pretty quickly when they find out that's what they are.

So what can you do? There are many who demand and need services but are in less of a position to pay for them. Do you raise taxes for them? Of course not. The answer is not higher tax rates. It doesn't make any sense to raise taxes when others are already taxed about as much as they can bear.

The answer is to increase your tax base, rather than the tax rate. And I find there is a grudging, but growing recognition that high marginal tax rates work against efforts to increase that base.

Bearing that in mind we at the federal level cut marginal tax rates. And we're seeing results. Our tax cuts are fueling an entrepreneurial explosion. New incorporations have doubled since 1977 and may have hit a record 600,000 in 1983. Minorities and women, according to the Small Business Administration, are starting new firms even faster than average. These are the risk takers who generate the most new products and these new ventures produce the jobs that are so important to your cities.

It is this we are trying to encourage. This will be the engine that will pull your economies down the right track. And to this end we designed specific programs.

One is our program of enterprise zones—a program unanimously endorsed by the National League of Cities last December.

This program combines tax cuts and advantages for businesses, jobs for the unemployed, and renewal and restoration of our hardest hit inner cities.

It is a program already passed by the Senate of the United States. In fact, it is a program widely endorsed by members of both parties. Yet it is a program in limbo.

For two years that legislation has sat on Capitol Hill. The House continues to bottle it up.

As the President asked one month ago "How in the world can some people give speeches about creating jobs and hope when they refuse to take action on a bill that is designed to provide just that?"

It's a good question. I have a theory. The Congress knows the program will work. But instead there are those with vested interests—those who would perpetuate old failed programs which they sponsored rather than allowing us to try new ones.

Enterprise zones encourage growth where we need it most—in areas of high youth and minority unemployment, in urban areas where the tax base has been hit the hardest.

Our legislation will give cities the chance and flexibility to make this innovative idea work.

Twenty one states have passed their own enterprise zone programs—and the results are encouraging.

We need your partnership. And we need you to convince the House to pass this legislation. As the President said, "They don't have to see the light. They have to feel the heat."

On another front we have had some legislative success. Last November the President reconfirmed our commitment to the revenue sharing program which recently sent $4.6 billion from Washington back to our cities, counties and towns.

Historically, the federal government has collected revenue efficiently. But it has never been as efficient in allocating that revenue back to the local level.

The revenue sharing program we administer at the Treasury Department is a successful no-strings program enabling us to spend money not as Washington dictates, but as local officials choose. And I'm thankful for that since history proves that the federal government is almost inept in allocating that revenue back to the local level. I'll never believe that some bureaucrat hundreds or even thousands of miles from your city can ever know better than you where available funds should be spent.

Furthermore, Revenue Sharing is one of our most cost-effective programs at Treasury, spending a little more than one-tenth of one percent on administration. As a result our general revenue sharing program will set a superb example of government efficiency for other federal programs.

As the President said as he signed the bill on November 30 "The federal government never spent more money wisely than by devoting it to general revenue sharing."

The specific legislation of enterprise zones and revenue sharing are only steps in the general economic program of growth and revitalization which are essential to economic recovery and victory.

You are mayors of cities from across this land. Many of you represent small cities. Some of you represent our largest cities. As I look across the country, from my vantage point as Treasury Secretary, and consider our overall national financial position, I cannot separate the federal from the state and local.

And as I look, I am heartened and relieved. We have made some significant steps forward. Remember for just a moment where we were four years ago. Political memories are often short. But we can't afford to forget.

Four years ago economic activity was grinding to a standstill. Industrial production was down. Actual wages and earnings were down. Productivity was down. And small businesses, which account for nearly two thirds of new jobs and employ so many minority and disadvantaged youths, were stifled.

Four years ago inflation was at the highest level in our history.

Who does that hurt? The rich? Well, yes, but the poor and middle class even more.

The prices of necessities—take food for example, were rising so quickly that a poor family's monthly grocery bill jumped from $165 to $240.

If the inflation rate of four years ago continued, the poor family would now be paying $300 a month for food, the same is true for energy and housing.

Today we believe the backbone of inflation has been broken. In 1983 the rate was only 3.8 percent, down from highs of 12 and 13 percent, and reaching 15 percent in some months.

That figure alone is a fact of economic transfiguration.

But that's not all we've done. Our program of fiscal reform ended a five year period in which tax revenues actually doubled. Today your taxes are significantly lower because of our war on inflation and our historic tax cuts.

And our tax program isn't finished either. It is estimated that more than three quarters of the benefits of tax indexing will go to lower and middle income taxpayers. Without that tax indexing, those in the lowest tax bracket would face a tax hike of up to 10 percent by 1988.

Combining these tax breaks with the sharp drop in inflation, the average family will enjoy $4,000 in additional purchasing power this year.

Those figures are certainly an improvement over four years ago. And yet to look at the newspapers and television, one would never know that. I think some of this comes from the fact that it's an election year. As a result, politicians and journalists have to sell something to someone. The party in power is often attacked for make-believe actions it never sponsored. This year, this time around the party in power is being called "unfair."

What do they mean by that? Unfairness to whom? Our programs benefit all Americans. These figures of economic growth, lower inflation, and less taxes hold the promise of lasting economic independence and growth benefiting all Americans.

What our opponents really have in mind is our unfairness to their vested programs. We are not willing to go down the road of high taxation, high inflation, low growth and economic stagnation.

Our programs do something their so called fair programs don't. Our programs work. The 3.8 percent rise in consumer prices in 1983 was the lowest rise in more than a decade and the 0.6 percent rise in producer prices was the lowest in nearly two decades.

Our GNP growth this year will be strong and steady. We are estimating about 5 percent for 1984.

The leading economic indicators are up. Industrial production is rising. Productivity rose at a 1 percent annual rate in the fourth quarter of 1983 and was up 3.5 percent from a year earlier.

These are the facts of success. These are the facts of economic recovery. These are the facts which mean benefits for all Americans.

But I recognize, and you recognize that the full effect of economic reform takes time. A wise predecessor of mine once said "the economist's lag is the politician's nightmare."

It's true. Those of us in government are on the line—on the line to produce results. But we can't provide instant miracles unless we resort to sham, and are willing to pay a higher price later. We won't do this.

Instead, we must stick with our program. It has just begun. The progress we have made to date is undeniable, our faith in the future is unshakeable.

Of special significance to you and all Americans is our directive from the President to develop a proposal for fundamental change in the tax code. What we have now is best described as a quagmire. It's complexity and inefficiency has reached the point of being disgraceful.

Our task is to develop a proposal for a system that is fair, simple and economically efficient. And it's quite possible that a simpler system, with a broader tax base would allow tax rates to drop.

On deficits, I'm very confident that we will soon have an acceptable downpayment. We are very serious about this problem and cognizant of the impact large deficits could have in later years.

I find the word "downpayment" to be very appropriate in this case. It implies future action and I can assure you we have no intention of stopping here. We are committed to removing the current deficit and to controlling the overspending that drains resources from the economy.

Now, I won't kid you or myself. There are special interest groups everywhere for everything who will attempt to protect their particular program and even push for larger funding. They'll call us unfair. But what's really unfair is to run up larger and larger deficits with more and more spending—and running the risk of putting this economy back to where it was three and four years ago.

If we can continue our course, I am confident that growth will continue. As the economy expands, the opportunities for all Americans will grow as well.

With lower inflation, more jobs, less taxes, and overall economic growth, the closing years of the twentieth century will be a time of exhiliration and expansion—a time which will prove, once and for all, that there is no limit to the progress of free men in a free market. And a time which will rid us once and for all of the stagnation and lessoning opportunity of the late 1960s and 1970s.

I can't think of a better economic prescription for the mayors of any city, nor for any American.

Thank you.●

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE AND FOR PERIOD FOR TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that, on tomorrow, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE) be recognized under a special order for not to exceed 15 minutes; and that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 12 noon, in which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, that is all I have, and I see no other Senator seeking recognition.

Having consulted with the minority leader in advance, I now move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, at 7:34 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, May 9, 1984, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, May 8, 1984

The House met at 9 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O righteous God, as Your blessings have given comfort and assurance in days past, so may Your love surround us this day. May Your spirit give peace and hope to all who need support, and may Your benediction follow us throughout our lives. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of April 26, 1984, the Chair declares the House in recess until 10:05 a.m.

Accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 2 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess until 10:05 a.m.

□ 1000

JOINT MEETING OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE HELD PURSUANT TO THE PROVISIONS OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 126 IN COMMEMORATION OF THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

During the recess the following proceedings took place in honor of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the Speaker of the House of Representatives presiding.

The U.S. Army Band and Chorus (Pershing's Own), under the direction of Col. Eugene W. Allen, leader and commander, entered the door to the left of the Speaker, took the positions assigned to them, and presented a prelude concert.

The honored guests, Margaret Truman Daniel, E. Clifton Daniel, and their four sons, Clifton, William, Harrison, and Thomas entered the door to the right of the Speaker, and took the positions assigned to them.

The Doorkeeper, the Honorable James T. Malloy, announced the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND) and the Members of the U.S. Senate, who entered the Hall of the House of Representatives, the President pro tempore taking the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate the seats reserved for them.

The Doorkeeper announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The members of the Cabinet of the United States entered the Hall of the House of Representatives and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with House Concurrent Resolution 126, the joint meeting to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman will come to order.

The Doorkeeper will announce the colors.

The Doorkeeper announced the colors of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Members will rise.

The Members rose, and the colors were carried into the Chamber by the Joint Armed Forces Color Guard.

The National Anthem was presented by the U.S. Army Band and Chorus.

The Color Guard saluted the Speaker, faced about, and saluted the House.

The SPEAKER. The invocation will be given by the Reverend James David Ford, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following invocation:

Almighty God, as we gather this day for remembrance and celebration, we ask Your blessing upon us. We recall with appreciation the life and work of Harry S. Truman for the values of family and faith that he treasured and for his dedication to the welfare of our country. May his efforts for justice in our society and understanding among the nations of the world inspire us to uphold those ideas and ideals which were exemplified by his life.

We thank You, O God, that at the decisive moments in life You raise up leaders for the needs of the day. Help us, O gracious God, to honor his memory that we may also seek justice, love, mercy, and ever walk humbly with You.

This we pray. Amen.

The colors were posted, and the Members were seated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the Fourth District of Missouri, the Honorable IKE SKELTON, chairman of the Joint Committee of Arrangements.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, Members of the 98th Congress, distinguished guests:

I welcome you and the American people to this ceremony commemorating the 100th birthday of the man from Missouri, Harry S. Truman.

One hundred years ago today a son was born to John Anderson Truman and Martha Ellen Young Truman in Lamar, Mo. That event marked the beginning of the life of a great captain who for a critical period in our Nation's history guided our ship of state. He steered it on a straight course through troubled times.

This is a historic event. Joint meetings of Congress such as this rarely occur, and it is fitting that such an event should be held to honor a President who had such a great sense of history. "Reading history," Truman wrote of his childhood, "was far more than a romantic adventure. It was solid instruction and wise teaching which I felt somehow that I wanted and needed. I could see that history had some extremely valuable lessons to teach."

His knowledge of the past directed President Truman's aspirations for our Nation's future. Because he knew that time was the final arbiter, he was able to lead our country through some of the most difficult days without wearing the shackles of fleeting public opinion.

Harry Truman was more concerned about the judgment of history than what contemporary political pollsters said. He was more concerned about what was right or wrong.

Harry Truman throughout his life set an example for Americans for succeeding generations. He was the epitome of the citizen soldier. He was a loving and caring father and husband. He was a warm and true friend. He was possessed of the highest integrity, and he was a devoted public servant.

My father, being a longtime Missouri friend of Harry Truman, brought me to Washington when I was a 17-year-old high school senior to witness the inaugural ceremony on January 20, 1949. I well remember, as I stood on the Capitol Grounds on that wintry day, President Truman taking the oath of office and his saying, "I accept with great humility the honor which the American people have conferred upon me. I accept it with the resolve to do all that I can for the welfare of this Nation and for the peace of the world."

Harry Truman's whole life was a reflection of doing all that he could. He believed in doing his best. He once wrote to his daughter, "Your dad will never be reckoned among the great, but you can be sure he did his level best and he gave all he had to his country."

President Truman offered his best, and the people of our Nation are the beneficiaries of his doing his best.

Harry Truman was right about many things, but his modesty led him to underestimate how history would remember him. Today when historians rank the Presidents of the United States, Harry S. Truman is always near the top of any such list, along with men like George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Thomas Jefferson. Harry Truman was one of our great Presidents because he took with him to the White House the character traits he had developed on the farm and in a small town in Missouri.

Truman's grandmother once said of him that he could plow the straightest furrow in the county. This was true about Harry Truman, both literally and figuratively, both as a young man on the farm and later as President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, because of what he brought to public service, he is not only an example for our time but a model for succeeding generations. Harry Truman had a special role in history, and I am sure that his stature will continue to rise in the years ahead. Thus it is fitting and proper that we pay tribute to the memory of that man born 100 years ago this day, this remarkable man from Missouri, Harry S. Truman.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. We are honored to have with us today the Truman family: In addition to Margaret Truman Daniel, E. Clifton Daniel, and their four sons, Clifton, William, Harrison, and Thomas.

Will they kindly rise and be acknowledged?

□ 1020

The SPEAKER. We are also honored to have with us today many associates and Cabinet members of the late President; the Honorable John Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury; Mrs. Oscar Chapman, widow of the Secretary of the Interior; the Honorable Charles Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture; Gov. Averell Harriman, Secretary of Commerce and Ambassador to Russia and Great Britain; the Honorable Elmer Staats, Deputy Director of the Budget and Comptroller General.

We also have many members of the late President's personal staff: The Honorable David Stow; Gen. Donald Dawson; the Honorable George Elsey; the Honorable Roger Tubby; and the Honorable Philip Nash.

Will all of them please rise. [Applause.]

America had called upon Harry Truman's leadership as early as 1918 when he commanded Battery D of the 129th Field Artillery in France during the First World War.

The U.S. Army Band and Chorus will pay tribute to Captain Truman's military service with a medley of World War I songs, the "Over There Fantasie."

(The "Over There Fantasie" was presented by the U.S. Army Band and Chorus.)

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the Fifth District of Missouri, the Honorable ALAN WHEAT, who currently represents the hometown of the late President Truman.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, Members of the other body, distinguished guests, members of the Truman family: Today marks the 100th anniversary of the birth date of Harry S. Truman. I am proud to represent in the Congress of the United States the hometown of Harry Truman, Independence, Mo. This week I will be in Independence as we dedicate the Truman home to the national park system and honor Margaret Truman Daniel with the Harry S. Truman Public Service Award.

This last weekend I was in Independence for a parade honoring Harry Truman and in Grandview, Mo., for another parade honoring Mr. Truman, as well as the dedication of the Truman farm home. All of Independence, Grandview, and Kansas City turned out to honor Mr. Truman, but I am most proud to be here today on this historical occasion as our Nation honors the memory of Harry S. Truman, one of American's greatest Presidents. But we do not honor Mr. Truman merely because he was President. We honor him because he was a man of the people, a working man, a bank bookkeeper, a railroad timekeeper, a soldier, a haberdasher, a farmer, a county judge, and a U.S. Senator, and nowhere during his entire public nor private life did he ever lose his ability to stay in touch with the common man.

Harry Truman is remembered for many great attributes, but perhaps common people remember him more for his courage, his integrity, and his compassion than any other reason.

The year 1948 was an election year for Harry Truman. It was a very difficult election year and he had many advisers who told him that to push the Civil Rights Commission was an act of political suicide, but Harry Truman looked beyond political expediency to the greater goals that he had set for himself and for the Nation. He demanded of the Congress new civil rights laws protecting fair housing in this country, guaranteeing an end to discrimination in transportation and protecting America's greatest liberty, the right to vote, and then to prove that he himself would do what he had asked the Congress to do, he desegregated the Armed Forces by Executive order.

In 1984 we take these actions for granted, but in 1948 they created an uproar. Called upon to defend his actions at the Democratic Convention, he responded this way to a delegate from Alabama: "The bill of Rights applies to everyone in this country and don't you ever forget it," and he went on to say that, "It would be a good idea to read those 10 amendments every once in a while; not enough people do and that is one reason we are in the trouble we are in."

His courage was amplified by his integrity. In 1940, as today, it would be easy to give the Defense Department a blank check, but Harry Truman saw things differently in 1940. He said, "It is an amazing thing. Every 10 cents spent on a work relief project like the WPA or the PWA, every dime is looked into and somebody is always against spending a nickel to help the poor or to give a man a job who doesn't have any, but when it comes to the Defense Department, the sky is the limit and no questions asked and the economy boys never open their mouths about that." That was the integrity of Harry Truman. He did not believe in wasting Government money for any program, not even when it came to himself, because when he retired from the Presidency he did not retire with a great personal staff. He did not go back to a resort. He went to a modest home in Independence, a return to the private life he knew so well.

His courage, his integrity were tempered by his compassion; his love of all men, rich and poor, black and white, friend, and foe, was well known in Independence, Mo., and perhaps can be described best by the situation that he faced after World War II. There were many that urged Truman to take actions to keep the Soviet Union from taking advantage of a war-ravaged Europe and, in fact, he did recommend the Marshall plan, but he did not recommend it for political expediency. This is the way he put it to Sam Rayburn, one of the toughest Speakers of the House of Representatives ever to serve: "Sam, if we don't do it, Europe is going to have its greatest depression ever and I don't know how many hundreds of thousands of people are going to starve to death, and that is not something that we want to have on our conscience, not if we can help it, we don't."

That was Harry Truman. Perhaps today as we look at our foreign policy we should ask not only what Harry Truman would have done, but why he would have done it.

Ladies and gentlemen, he was one of the most powerful men of his century and yet at the same time remained firmly rooted in humble Missouri soil.

Courage, integrity, and compassion, those were all his, but perhaps his humility was his greatest gift. He put it best when he said, "I have tried my best to give the Nation everything I have. There are probably 1 million people who could have done the job better than I did it, but I had the job," and then he quoted an epitaph that he had read on a tombstone in a cemetery that said, "Here lies Jack Williams. He done his damndest."

Well, Harry Truman said he wanted to be remembered that way and, ladies and gentlemen, Harry Truman done his damndest, too. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes Mr. Robert J. Donovan, who covered the White House as a member of the press during the Truman years and has written extensively about the late President. Mr. Robert J. Donovan.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, no one is in a better position than you ladies and gentlemen of the Congress to comprehend the drama and dimension of the Presidency of Harry S. Truman. Mr. Truman was a Member of the Senate for 10 years beginning in 1935. He served on Appropriations and other major committees. Starting from a rather friendless environment, he worked his way up through hard work, amiability, and political acumen to a position of influence and respect. He became one of the best liked Members of the Senate.

After Pearl Harbor, he had an idea that led to his becoming a national figure. The idea was to conduct an ongoing investigation of the costly national defense program. The need for congressional oversight was accepted at his suggestion and the highly publicized investigation proceeded under his chairmanship of what was called the Truman committee.

One of the many ironies of his life was that the Truman committee made him so prominent that it resulted in depriving him of the career he most coveted, that of remaining a Senator, for a situation had developed in the Democratic Party in 1944 that necessitated the choice of a compromise candidate to run with President Franklin D. Roosevelt in his quest for a fourth term. Circumstances combined to cast Senator Truman in that role. He yielded to the demands of party loyalty and was inaugurated as Vice President on January 20, 1945.

On April 12, 1945, his 83d day in that office, Vice President Truman was presiding over a work-a-day session of the Senate. His friend, Sam Rayburn, had invited him to the Speaker's hideaway off the House floor after the adjournment of the Senate. When Mr. Truman arrived, he was given a message to call Stephen Early at the White House. Early was a principal assistant to President Roosevelt who had gone to Warm Springs, Ga., for a rest. Mr. Truman returned the call and was startled by the strained tone of Early's voice bidding him, without explanation, to come to the White House immediately. Mr. Truman's limousine was at the Senate side. From the Speaker's hideaway, he darted down the stairs to the basement and ran the entire length of this building to get to it. What an arresting sight it would have been to see the Vice President running along through that dim and largely deserted passageway on that afternoon.

Four days later he was escorted down this center aisle as the 33d President of the United States for the purpose of addressing a joint session. The joint sessions then were broadcast by radio. Almost numbed by his new burdens, Mr. Truman strode up these steps, faced the audience, and began, "Mr. Speaker, Mr. President"——

"Just a minute," Speaker Rayburn interrupted in a Texas sized whisper, heard by millions of radio listeners, "let me present you, will you, Harry?"

The nearly 8 years that followed were a momentous time, as you ladies and gentlemen are being constantly reminded. Time and again, 40 years later, you are compelled to deal with policies, alliances, governmental institutions, weapons, and problems like the cold war that had their origins in the Truman administration. Who better than you can imagine the experience toward which the recent Senator Truman headed when he ran through the basement that afternoon.

The Second World War was at its climax. The Allied Nations in Europe were exhausted. Germany and Japan were toppling. Old empires were collapsing. Civil war loomed in China and in Vietnam. In the Middle East was approaching the hostilities in which Israel was soon to be born. Although devastated by war, the Soviet Union under Stalin was rising as one of two superpowers and in Los Alamos, N. Mex., plans were being made to test an atomic bomb.

The historical importance of Mr. Truman rests strongly on the fact that he was the President at the time when those enormous events had to be dealt with. In many cases, therefore, his decision was a matrix of American policy in the whole period following the Second World War and he could not go from Sam Rayburn's hideaway to the Oval Office and put his feet up on the desk and wait for a convenient time to make those decisions after ample reflection. The tide of events moved swiftly. Almost immediately the new President had to decide how to respond to Stalin's intrusions in Poland and Eastern Europe and what stand to take on troublesome disputes that arose that spring at the U.N. Conference on International Organization at San Francisco. Just beyond lay other extremely difficult decisions; the decision for example, on using the atomic bomb and the decision taken in pursuance of a policy inherited from the Roosevelt administration of sending occupying forces into southern Korea in the summer of 1945, the consequences of which could scarcely have been imagined.

Other great decisions affecting America's relations with Europe, Asia, and the Middle East, were rapidly forced upon President Truman. The symbols of those decisions are the Truman doctrine, the Marshall plan, the Berlin airlift, NATO, point 4, the special relationship with Israel, the Korean war, and the building of friendly ties with America's erstwhile enemies, Japan and West Germany.

A critical fact about President Truman was that he believed that the United States should exert strong international leadership, rather than revert to isolationism. Such a viewpoint alined him with powerful elements in the Congress, in the press, in the universities, in the professions, in business and industry, in banks and investment houses, in labor and in the armed services.

His advocacy of a strong international policy put him in accord not only with Rooseveltian Democrats, but with Republicans, like Thomas E. Dewey, John Foster Dulles, and Henry L. Stimson. Despite differences in detail, Truman stood at the head of a potent consensus favoring a dominant American role, moral leadership, support of capitalist interests, and prevention of Communist expansionism. That consensus determined the direction of postwar American foreign policy.

Generally, President Truman's foreign policy initiatives required legislation, often at the time when the Republicans controlled the 80th Congress. When it came to European affairs, in contrast to China, on which bitter partisan differences arose, there was in truth a bipartisan foreign policy then. For that, many shared the credit with Mr. Truman. President Roosevelt had wisely laid the foundation. Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, the chief Republican spokesman on foreign policy in the Senate then, was a towering figure in support. Other Republicans who come to mind were Senators Lodge and Saltonstall of Massachusetts, Cooper of Kentucky, and Smith of New Jersey; also, Representatives Eaton of New Jersey, Herter of Massachusetts, and Javits of New York.

It was President Truman's destiny to manage America's relations with a new order that emerged from the Second World War. In the process, significant historical landmarks were erected. It was a task stoutly undertaken by a very decent man.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. To a President who loved music, a tribute in words and music. The U.S. Army Band will now present a musical narrative dedicated to a great leader, citizen, and hero. Ladies and gentlemen, the premiere performance of "Nomination Into History":

The U.S. Army Band presented the musical narrative, "Nomination Into History."

The U.S. Army Chorus retired from the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the first Secretary of the Air Force and former Senator from Missouri, the Honorable Stuart Symington.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen: Just half a century ago, Harry S. Truman, of Independence, Mo., was elected to serve in the U.S. Senate. In the years following he added both his voice and his vote to the watershed legislation which gave our people new hope and our country new strength. He arrived here, as the leader said, as timid as a country boy on the campus of a great university. For Harry Truman was never timid. It was a secret world kept from his colleagues, his constituents, his subordinates, and his adversaries.

One can only wonder how many like Truman read "Plutarch's Lives," and also the histories of Greece and Rome and Egypt and the Orient, those civilizations of the past, which were but prolog to the world in which he was born, and born to lead.

As he later observed, he could not see well enough to bat, but wound up by the age of 14 to have read the books in the Independence Public Library, and our big, old Bible three times through.

It is said a President should have a sense of history. No President ever had more of that sense or more justly found his judgments to be fortified by that sense than Harry Truman.

What else contributed to his brilliant and enduring confidence? Missouri. The soil which he walked as a boy, his first paying job, coming up and mopping the floors of a neighborhood drugstore at 6:30 in the morning, his first week's wages, the three silver dollars which he thereupon tried to give his father, the responsibility of command of Battery D under fire near Verdun. Very possibly it was in France, with his own and many other lives at stake, plus his innate sense of order, that he learned in actual crisis to be a truly effective executive, manned with a capacity to delegate authority, along with the wisdom of giving such delegation to the right person.

In Government, where there is no profit, no profit motive, such delegation is vital for efficiency.

The one who would have the most influence on his life was the new acquaintance that he met in Sunday school, and described as having golden curls and the most beautiful blue eyes, the lady we were all to know and love one day as Bess Wallace Truman.

Let us also note the devotion that both parents had for their daughter, Margaret, a gracious wife and mother, who over the years has brought additional honor to the Truman name. The ingredients of a simple and virtuous family life, a correct bearing, a loving nature, and thirst for knowledge and service, these made up the man who one day was to stand at the helm of his country against neglect and indifference at home and tyranny abroad. Like the number of votes he received in 1948, those ingredients were more than sufficient.

I was honored to serve President Truman, and may I say to you all, including my former colleagues, that today I am doubly grateful and honored to serve his undying memory.

Bless you all.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the former Secretary of Defense, the former Special Counsel to the late President Truman, the Honorable Clark Clifford, who is the chairman of the Harry S. Truman Centennial. Clark Clifford.

Mr. CLIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, the Truman Centennial Committee wishes to present its deepest appreciation to the Congress for this magnificient ceremony honoring one of our most illustrious Presidents.

As I listened to the other speeches I found myself simultaneously pointing with pride and viewing with alarm, pointing with pride at the excellence of the speeches but viewing with alarm as all of the points that I was going to make were being made by the others. And as paragraph after paragraph slipped away from me, all I could think of was an incident that occurred years ago here in Washington at a dinner party.

A gentleman guest talked first to a dinner partner on his left; then he turned to the lady on his right and said, "Did I get your name correctly? Is your name Post?" She said, "Yes."

He said, "Is it Emily Post?" She said, "Yes."

He said, "Are you the world renowned authority on manners?"

She said, "Yes." Then she said, "Why do you ask?"

"Because," he said, "you have just eaten my salad." [Applause.]

Many times through the years people will ask what do you think was the most difficult decision the President made or the most far reaching. I am sure there is no ready answer for those questions but in my limited time I thought I would take one problem and show you the manner in which this man handled it. It might be called the anatomy of decision.

President Truman inherited from Franklin Roosevelt a deeply troubled Middle East and one of the major problems there was the question of whether or not there should be a homeland for the Jews. The President read a great deal, he consulted all of the available experts, and he reached the conclusion in his own mind that it should be the policy of our country to support a homeland for these people.

When he made that decision he brought upon himself the bitterest, the most venemous, unrelenting struggle that he had, I believe, during the entire time he was in the White House. There were powerful forces that were determined to see that this policy should not be carried out, and the most distressing one element of the entire controversy was the fact that most of the opposition came from within his own administration.

The State Department was absolutely determined that he should not succeed in carrying out his aim. The Defense Department at the same time felt that the decision was wrong because he was picking the incorrect side.

I remember one time having a conversation with James Forrestal, the first Secretary of Defense, and he said, "You fellows in the White House just don't understand what is going on." he said, "Soon 350,000 Jews will be pushed into the Mediterranean by 35 million Arabs."

I reported that to the President and the President said, "This is not a question of numbers. This is a question of basic human policy."

The contest went on. Over and over again he would start one move and it would be frustrated by those that worked against him in the State Department.

The great issue of the day was whether there should be trusteeship or whether there should be partition. If you favored trusteeship, you favored a plan that would postpone indefinitely and perhaps forever the establishment of a Jewish homeland. If you favored partition, then you were for the carving out of an area in Palestine and delivering it to those whom President Truman felt so richly deserved it.

Finally, this 3½-year-old conflict, growing always and in bitterness as it developed, came to a climax because on the 14th day of May the leaders in Palestine were to announce that was that day that the new Jewish state would come into existence. The President called me in maybe 2 weeks prior to that and he said, "Now, I am going to have a meeting on the 11th of May." And he said, "General Marshall will come over and Bob Lovett will come with him and they are experts."

And he said, "General Marshall is unalterably opposed to this policy."

And he said, "I wish that you would start in and prepare. I would like you to present my views to these men," and I remember his words; he said, "Accept it as though you were going to make an argument before the Supreme Court of the United States." And I went to work on it.

What I did was go back over my notes, go back over his speeches to find out the positions that he had taken on previous occasions. Then I organized that, so that I could present to General Marshall what I knew to be the President's own views.

The first point I made was the question of intolerance. The President said, "All my life I cannot bear intolerance. There is no more un-American attitude that exists. Why do some people feel that they are superior to others? And why must we have intolerance in our country?"

And he said, "In this effort to create a homeland for these people," he said, "this will be a blow against intolerance."

And second, he had talked many times about persecution. He said, "Why, over the centuries, must these people be persecuted? Why do others feel superior? What right do they have to segregate, to build ghettoes and see that these people do not have the opportunity of others, the opportunity of right, of work, of religion, the freedoms that we appreciate so much?"

He said, "I think that this step on our part will be an opportunity to demonstrate our attitude toward persecution."

And then he said, "Every individual in the world must feel some sense of personal guilt at the most bestial, the most unforgiveable, the most unbelievable crime in the world, and that was the extermination of 6 million Jews." And he said, "maybe we can, by urging this policy, make some feeble restitution at the agony that this has caused the world today."

And then one of the other main points he made was that in all the world, after the close of the Second World War, there were hundreds of thousands and even millions of displaced persons and every one of them had a place to return to except the Jews.

And he said, "How unfair can history be? How unfair that even after the close of the great war that no provision is being made and these people must shift from country to country looking for someplace where ultimately they can develop a life?"

President Truman was a great Bible student. Interestingly enough, he loved the Old Testament. He contended that the Old Testament had made a commitment to these people that some day they would come into their right and some day they would have a homeland of their own. He would refer from time to time to Isaiah, and he would refer to other prophets and their views and their commitments.

And finally he said the British must be held to account. He said, "In 1917 the Balfour Declaration was issued and the Balfour Declaration carried a promise to these people, if I ever read it."

This was the substance of the argument, then, that I was prepared with when the meeting came with General Marshall, Mr. Lovett, very estimable gentlemen and their assistants.

General Marshall made his first presentation and he told of the reasons why we should not even be considering recognizing the new state. Lovett backed him up and there were some additional matters.

Then the President said "Clifford will make his presentation" and I made it. And as I made it, General Marshall's face got redder and redder and redder, and finally at the end he exploded. He said, "I don't understand what is going on here." He said, "We didn't come over to have an emotional experience of these various elements; we came over to consider a complicated foreign policy problem and to consider certain international laws that are applicable to this issue."

The President made a few comments and then dismissed the meeting. And I said, "Mr. President, I am afraid that my effort didn't do very much." Well, he said, "Let us not be too hasty, let us let the dust settle just a little."

His prescience was interesting, because that afternoon Bob Lovett called and said, "I am deeply disturbed at the meeting we had this morning." And he said, "I wonder if you would drop by my house on your way home," and I said "Of course." And we talked late into the evening.

He said, "What possibility is there in getting the President to change his mind?" I said, "Utterly none." He said, "We will have to go to work on General Marshall." He said, "It would be a tragedy for these two men at this time to break."

The reason it was so serious was because General Marshall felt so strongly about it. When General Marshall finished his second presentation to President Truman he said, "Mr. President, I feel obliged to tell you that if you go ahead with this act of recognition, I will be unable to vote for you this coming November."

So that not only was it based on policy, but it was based upon a deep personal feeling that General Marshall had.

Mr. Lovett went to work in the State Department and I will go over the next 2 days very quickly; but on the morning of the 14th, the day the announcement was to be made, General Marshall called President Truman and said, "Mr. President, I cannot support your action in recognition but I will not oppose it. I will say nothing at all." The President said, "Thank you, General Marshall. That is all that I need."

Mr. Lovett came over. We prepared the statement.

At 4 o'clock the new nation of Israel was declared and 11 minutes after 4, the United States became the first nation in the world to recognize Israel.

Now some time later came a fascinating development. I will refer to it here briefly.

The Israeli Prime Minister was in the United States and he had a meeting with President Truman. It was Prime Minister Ben Gurion. And later, he wrote his book and his memoirs and this paragraph appears. He said: "At that time I had a meeting with President Truman. I told him that as a foreigner, I could not judge what would be his place in American history. But his helpfulness to us, his constant sympathy with our aims in Israel, his courageous decision to recognize our new state so quickly, and his steadfast support since then had given him an immortal place in Jewish history.

"As I said that, tears suddenly sprang to his eyes. And his eyes were still wet when he bade me goodbye. I had rarely seen anyone so moved. He left. A little while later, I, too, had to go out and a correspondent came up to me and asked, 'Why was President Truman in tears when he left you?' "

"I believe I know. He was in tears because he had fought for 3½ years for a deep principle that touched every humanitarian nature in his being. I think he was in tears also because his God had seen fit to answer his prayer and grant him his wishes."

Perhaps you will understand better now why we loved him so. Thank you.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. We have indeed been reliving history with those who worked beside President Truman.

The Chair recognizes the widely acclaimed pianist, Mr. Daniel Pollack, whose early talent was recognized by the late President Truman and who has since captivated audiences around the world.

Mr. Pollack will play Etude Opus 25 No. 11 in A minor "The Winter Wind," and Polonaise in A^b major Opus 53, both by Frederic Chopin.

Mr. Daniel Pollack played a musical tribute consisting of: Etude Opus 25 No. 11 in A minor "The Winter Wind," and Polonaise in A^b major Opus 53, by Frederic Chopin.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the daughter of the late President Truman, Margaret Truman Daniel.

[Applause.]

Mrs. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen, first I would like to say that Dad would have loved all of the music, as I am sure we all did.

You cannot imagine what a delight and honor it is for me to find myself once again in this place. It is both exhilarating and humbling to be standing in the same spot where my father stood when he delivered his annual State of the Union Message.

This monumental building and its majestic site, towering over the Capital of our Republic, was once my playground. I skipped through its long corridors with my schoolbooks, I became familiar with the great men and great events memoralized here, I wandered casually into the family gallery of the Senate and listened to the Nation's business being transacted.

It was a simpler, easier time, with no passes required for a daughter of the Senate, the guards all knew me and no electronic surveillance of visitors.

Most delightful of all, I rode the subway back and forth between the Senate Office Building and the Capitol to my heart's content.

And while my father labored in room 240 of the Old Senate Office Building, I did my homework until it was time for him to drive me home in his spiffy Chrysler.

When as a child you walk beside a good man, a warmhearted man, and find comfort, love and protection in his embrace, you never think of him as a great man. He is just your Dad and you love him. It is only when you grow up and step back from him or leave him for your own career and your own home, it is only then that you can measure his greatness and fully appreciate it. Pride reinforces love.

My father was a great man and his greatness grows with time. I am given evidence of that in some way every day. Wherever I go, even in the hinterlands of China, where I was last fall, people came up to me and said, "I just want to tell you how much I admired your father." That is all, but they had a compulsion to say it.

Now on his 100th birthday the attention of the whole Nation and much of the world beyond is focused on his accomplishments and his character. Without the character there would have been no accomplishments.

What was his character as it was revealed to his daughter, his only child? First of all, there was never a man more devoted to his family. You can see that in the letters he wrote to his wife, his mother, his sister, and to me. Even though with youthful carelessness I rarely replied, his letters kept coming.

It is extraordinary in this electronic age, an age of instant contact and communications, to recall that he wrote every word laborious by hand. And even when he was President, he licked a 3-cent stamp and pasted it on my personal letter.

Actually, for those of you who are so young here, there really was once a 3-cent stamp.

How in the midst of one of the most difficult and dangerous periods of American history did he as President and Commander in Chief, find time to write those letters every day? They were expressed in the homely idiom of Missouri and with the affection and longing of a man often separated from his family by his compelling sense of duty. They reflected his simplicity, directness, wisdom, and resolve. Qualities that he demonstrated in his public behavior, as well as his private life.

There was at the core of the man a gentleness that was often obscured by the brusqueness he sometimes displayed as a partisan politician and the firmness he showed as a statesman. Giving them hell was a rhetoric advice, permissible in a political context, but he really loved people. He was supremely confident of the people's ability to govern themselves, if properly led.

Above all, he loved the United States of America next to his family and he served it devotedly in war and peace.

His forthrightness was not an expression of irritation, but a sign of strong will and high purpose. And he was a great teaser. He liked to get your goat and then grin about it. His grin was as wide as his hat brim and as quick as his temper. Of course, he was capable of occasional expressions of anger. That is to say he could get fighting mad. But if you were the beloved beneficiary of his anger, as I was, and not its target, you kind of enjoyed it.

Every girl has a white knight in her dreams and he was mine. Now I have five white knights. My husband, Clifton Daniel, my sons, Clifton Truman Daniel, William Wallace Daniel, Harrison Gates Daniel, and Thomas Washington Daniel. At least I hope they are my white knights.

So it is with great pride that I have sat here today and seen Dad honored, revered and eulogized. This august convocation would have delighted him. He would also have felt right at home in the midst of it. He jokingly called the Presidential mansion the Great White Jail, but he felt a sense of liberation, a certain expansiveness in the Halls of Congress.

He loved the work and reveled in the comradeship he found here. Being one of the boys was his greatest pleasure. And he took pride in belonging to the world's most exclusive club, the U.S. Senate.

He was prouder still to be a member of that even more restricted group, Uncle Sam Rayburn's Board of Education, the bourbon and branch water college of congressional knowledge.

He loved politicians, even Republicans. True.

I hope that somewhere, somehow, he is watching these impressive proceedings and listening in. If he is, he probably thinks we are making too much of the occasion, but he is nevertheless enjoying it.

He was a modest man, but not fanatically so.

On his behalf, I conclude with heartfelt thanks to all those who have made possible this great celebration and are contributing to all the other events marking the Truman centennial. You have worked long, hard, and successfully. My father would be grateful, and my mother. I am grateful. My family, every branch of it, is honored. And we thank all of you.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the Honorable MARK HATFIELD, a Senator from Oregon, vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Arrangements.

[Applause.]

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, Margaret Truman Daniel, ladies and gentlemen, a thousand thanks for all who have shared today in those splendid memories and flashbacks in history. What a pleasant experience it has been.

Yet I believe that these reflections on President Truman's life can be more than just historical reminiscences. In reality, they are lessons for a contemporary world. I have found inspiration in President Truman's unique ability to reach out in a commitment of friendship, frequently transcending political differences and personality characteristics.

He was well aware that in public life we have the experience of a life that is full of passion and pretension. It is a life in which personal relationships may become exploitive contacts and political opponents may become enemies.

For too many there is no distinction between one's self, one's politics, one's party and one's ambition. In the process friendships become elusive by believing the worst, ascribing the wrong motives, and allowing bad feelings to fester. Our differences grow into irreconcilable hatred where communication is impossible.

President Truman's life in politics illustrates a rare exception to this state of affairs. A historic example is his invitation to Herbert Hoover, who many considered to be a political leper, to visit the White House for the first time since the former President had left over a decade ago.

I have learned from this amazing friendship that grew between this political odd couple. For both of these statesmen differed in so many facets of their personal lives, maintained their unique personalities, their political philosophies, even their puckishness, and still they had respect for one another.

Harry Truman has left us a legacy of reconciliation, between people, between nations. Rather than emulate the extremes of rigid singlemindedness or ruthless ambivalence, we should heed the example in the life of Harry Truman.

Understanding one another requires taking the initiative as Truman did. Taking the initiative to assume the best motives, taking the initiative to repair ruptured relationships, taking the initiative to understanding each other, for with understanding comes communication, the gateway to the path of tending to our neighbor's needs, our Nation's needs, our world's needs. The path trod by Harry Truman.

[Applause.]

The U.S. Army Chorus reentered the Chamber, and the colors were brought to the well of the House.

The SPEAKER. The benediction will be given by Rev. Richard C. Halverson, Chaplain of the Senate.

The Chaplain of the Senate, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., LL.D., offered the following benediction:

Sovereign Lord of history, we thank Thee for the memory of Harry S. Truman, a very uncommon common man. God fearing, Bible loving, strong, courageous, honest, plain-speaking, noble, gutsy, humble. He embodied all the virtues and values precious to our Republic.

Gracious Father, we thank Thee for this very uncommon common citizen President.

The Lord bless you and keep you, the Lord make His face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you. The Lord lift up His countenance upon you and give you His peace. Amen.

The U.S. Army Chorus, accompanied by the Members and guests, rendered "God Bless America," and the colors were retired by the Joint Armed Forces Color Guard.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the Congress, the Chair would like to particularly thank, and the Congress appreciates, the chairman, IKE SKELTON, for the beautiful job he has done, and MARK HATFIELD, the Senator from Oregon, for the beautiful job that he has done, and the Chair thanks all who have participated.

The Chair declares the joint meeting dissolved.

The House will continue in recess until the hour of 1 o'clock.

The honored guests, the Members of the U.S. Senate, and the members of the President's Cabinet retired from the Chamber.

At 11 o'clock and 40 minutes a.m., the proceedings in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman were concluded.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY) at 1 p.m.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN SAID WE NEED TO LOOK AFTER MILITARY SPENDING

(Mr. BEDELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, like many of our Members at the Truman memorial this morning, I was extremely impressed by the speech by our collegue, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. WHEAT). One of the things that Mr. WHEAT said was that President Truman had said that we need to look at military spending just as we look at social spending.

My Small Business Subcommittee recently had before it legislation that would do something about the expenditures of the miltary and what they are paying. We were shocked to find out that $435 for a hammer was not an exception, but this was what was happening commonly in the military.

Next week we will bring a bill to the floor to give ourselves an opportunity to do exactly what Mr. Truman said should be done, for Congress to do something about that problem. Many people do not want to see anything done about that problem, and it is understandable.

I am here to plead with my colleagues in the House to have the courage to stand up for the taxpayers when that legislation comes forward, to resist those opportunities to cut down on this effort and dilute the effort that we are making. Stand up and demand that correction is taken. Support that bill and not accept weakening amendments that would enable us to continue to pay those outrageous prices for such items.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS HAD DURING RECESS

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF CONGRESSIONAL TRIP TO EL SALVADOR

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I had the opportunity to serve as cochairman of the official American delegation sent to El Salvador to observe the Presidential elections.

Ten Members of Congress made the trip, and 8 of the 10 were House Members. There were 13 private citizens making up the delegation. We are in total agreement on our findings: The elections were free, open, and honest.

Despite guerrilla efforts to disrupt the process, the Salvadoran people went to the polls in tremendous numbers. It appears the turnout will be well above the 80-percent mark, which is greater than the 78-percent rate for the March 25 elections.

The Salavadoran people have spoken and their message is clear: They want democracy. Their strong vote is also a forceful repudiation of the guerrillas.

Democracy has a strong beginning in El Salvador. I hope with our help, and the will and determination of the people in El Salvador should be respected by this Nation.

I also would like to tell the Members that each Member of the House is being sent this brief report, very brief, about two pages long. I hope the Members will look at the report.

WE DO NOT NEED THE MX MISSILE

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I was impressed by what was said today in the testimonial to President Truman and what was said about it just a moment ago on the floor, about the cautionary thing of seeing to it that any money we spend for defense really goes for defense. A difficult thing to achieve is to find a whole project or a whole weapons system that we really do not need. Such a vote will come up next week on the MX system.

In my opinion, the MX system is extremely expensive. We do not need it. The money for it is needed for conventional warfare in Europe or other strategic warfare, but it is not needed for that particular weapon, which is so highly vulnerable.

I hope many Members will look at their consciences and try to come up with an affirmative vote to knock out the MX missile.

THE CRISIS IN INTERNATIONAL DEBT

(Mr. PARRIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, the International Trade Subcommittee just met with economic ministers and government representatives of Latin American countries, including Brazil, Peru, Mexico, Argentina, and others. They said to us, among other things, "We are restructuring the international debt to create an appearance of normality." "The debt as it exists today cannot be repaid." "The U.S. protectionist policies are unacceptable," and perhaps most disturbing of all, "The preservation of democracy in most of the countries of the area may be perilously jeopardized if a negotiated solution is not provided."

Mr. Speaker, the accumulated international debt of Latin America exceeds $400 billion. In the last decade we have been on a huge economic drunk and even the person paying the borrower bill, which is us, refuses now to sober up. This situation is the greatest threat to world stability and world peace that exists on the planet today and this Congress must concentrate in the near future on the problem before it is too late.

A CLEAR CHOICE IN EL SALVADOR

(Mr. LIVINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Mississippi has already pointed out, there was an election in El Salvador on Sunday, and as reported in yesterday's edition of the Washington Post, the Communist guerrillas in El Salvador showed their true colors in the face of the vote.

While voters were marking their ballots, the Communist terrorists were firing upon helicopters carrying election observers, including the gentleman from Mississippi, and journalists, burning ballots in several towns of the Chalatenago Province, blowing up a major electrical company, bombarding the town of San Sebastian, and attacking Government barracks in San Miguel. These election day efforts by the Communists killed nine civilians, as well as two policemen who tried to disarm one of the terrorist bombs found in San Miguel. Another national policeman was wounded in the attack on the San Miguel barracks.

So, Mr. Speaker, we see how the two sides in El Salvador look upon democracy. The good guys—thousands of Salvadorans who believe in democracy—went to the polls and cast their ballots freely and fairly. The bad guys—a tiny minority of Cuban-backed, Communist terrorists who detest democracy—tried to disrupt the election by violent means.

Mr. Speaker, which side will the Members of this House support when we vote this week?

THE AMERICAN PASSBOOK SAVINGS ACT

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, it is high time for Congress to do something positive to lower those high and rising interest rates in America. High interest rates threaten not only to deny many young Americans their chance at the American dream of private homeownership but also threaten the continuation of the current economic recovery.

Next week I will be offering a bill, cosponsored by members of liberal and conservative persuasions and everything in between. This bill, the American Passbook Savings Act, will allow every American the opportunity to earn substantial tax-free income, in the form of interest earned on traditional passbook savings yielding 6 percent or less. If Americans are thus encouraged to take their savings out of high yield but taxable certificates of deposit, placing those savings instead into tax-free passbook accounts, several most desirable results can be achieved:

Among them; the cost of money to American savings institutions, now generally at 10 percent, could be dramatically reduced, producing lower mortgage rates for Americans. And tax-free passbook savings would go a long way toward encouraging Americans to save more, thus expanding the private credit markets.

Mr. Speaker, getting interest rates down and keeping them down must become one of our highest priorities.

DAY CARE FOR CHILDREN—A MOTHER'S DAY GIFT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, Mr. PERKINS and all the committee members today for doing something for the parents of this country in the week when we are moving toward celebrating Mother's Day. The committee acted very rapidly on a very, very important piece of legislation. It is H.R. 4913. What the bill will do is allow people and communities to put together after school day care for children before their parents come home from work. It really will make a tremendous difference for people worrying so much about missing children and what happens to children after school. Still parents have to work and in that very critical age from 6 to 12 years this bill will give some direction and guidance. It is incredibly cost effective allowing communities to use schools for after school care. The bill hardly costs as much as the tail section of one of our fighter aircraft.

So I am very pleased that the committee acted on this latchkey day care bill and acted on it very rapidly. I must say for the mothers of the country, it certainly means much more that this Congress moves this bill for Mother's Day than cards and flowers, because the care and the stress this bill will relieve is very significant.

I encourage other Members to join in this bill and I hope we can move it out on the House floor as rapidly as possible.

THOUGHTS OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, today as we address this centennial of the birth of Harry S. Truman we might want to think about some of the things that President Truman had to say in the area of world affairs.

On December 15 of 1950 in a radio and television report Harry Truman said: "* * * we are willing to negotiate differences, but we will not yield to aggression. Appeasement of evil is not the road to peace."

In a St. Patrick's Day address on March 17, 1948, he said:

* * * Communism masquerades as a doctrine of progress. It is nothing of the kind. It is, on the contrary, a movement of reaction. It denies that man is master of his fate, and consequently denies man's right to govern himself.

In an address in Alexandria, VA, on February 22, 1951, Harry Truman said:

* * * Communism seeks to induce men to surrender their freedom by false promises of a better life. But the great danger of communism does not lie in its false promises. It lies in the fact that it is an instrument of an armed imperialism which seeks to extend its influence by force.

In a commencement address at Princeton University on June 17, 1947, Harry Truman said, and I quote:

* * * Weakness on our part would stir fear among the small or weakened nations that we were giving up our world leadership. It would seem to them that we lacked the will to fulfill our pledge to aid free and independent nations to maintain their freedoms, or our commitments to aid in restoring war-torn economies. In such an atmosphere of uncertainty, these nations might not be able to resist the encroachments of totalitarian pressures. We must not let friendly nations go by default.

By saying these kinds of things one wonders if Harry Truman would find any affinity whatsoever with the modern-day Democratic Party.

THOUGHTS OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, following along on the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER), I thought some other words of President Harry S. Truman would be instructive for us today. He said in addressing a joint session of Congress on March 12, 1947, these words:

I believe that it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

He further went on to say in an address at a Jefferson Day dinner on April 5, 1947, these words:

. . . Our foreign policy must not be wrecked on the rocks of partisanship. United support of a policy that serves the interests of the Nation as a whole must be our aim.

One must wonder, Mr. Speaker, how he would react to the "Dear Commandante" letter we have heard so much about here on the floor in recent weeks.

He said in a special message to Congress these words:

. . . We have learned, by the costly lesson of two world wars, that what happens beyond our shores determines how we live our own lives. We have learned that, if we want to live in freedom and security, we must work with all the world for freedom and security.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, he said in an address in Mexico City on March 3, 1947:

. . . Nonintervention does not and cannot mean indifference to what goes on beyond our own borders. Events in one country may have a profound effect on other countries. The community of nations feels concern at the violation of accepted principles of national behavior by any one of its members. The lawlessness of one nation may threaten the very existence of the law on which all nations depend.

As we celebrate the centennial of the birth of Harry S. Truman it might be instructive for both Democrats and Republicans in this House, Mr. Speaker, to pay heed to those words.

PAST AND PRESENT DEMOCRATIC PARTY VIEWS ON FOREIGN POLICY

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, we have been doing some historical research on the difference between the traditional Democratic Party of Harry Truman and John F. Kennedy and the more radical world view of George McGovern and his followers.

I think one of the best statements of the Truman-Kennedy world view is to be found on September 6, 1962, by the now chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee who was then a member of the Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee. It is a worthwhile statement and I urge every Member to read it. It runs for two pages, but I want to mention four specific paragraphs.

He said, and this is the current chairman offering an amendment this week that is radically different.

He said:

If we are to preserve the historical values of the democratic profile of the Americas, we can no longer simply espouse high-sounding principles without taking meaningful action.

We have declared the inter-American system to be incompatible with any form of totalitarianism.

We must not permit the inter-American policy of nonintervention to become a policy of nonaction which will end in nonexistence of the free world.

I say that the very existence of the Soviets in Cuba is an act of aggression.

The member nations of this hemisphere—as well as our friends and allies around the world—must take positive action now—both economically and militarily—to remove this fester on the face of freedom and to return Cuba to democratic progress.

The gentleman who is now the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee went on to recommend absolute military action even at the risk of Soviet reaction in Berlin or Turkey or anywhere else. That document is a remarkable statement on September 6, 1962, in comparison with the current McGovern radicalism of the Democratic Party.

THOUGHTS OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

(Mr. SOLOMON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on the Democratic side of the aisle we often hear a lot of rhetoric opposing the present foreign policy of Ronald Reagan. But, you know, I used to be a Harry Truman Democrat and I was proud of it and I still admire and respect him and think he was one of the greatest Presidents this country ever had.

Let me tell you why I was a Harry Truman Democrat.

Harry Truman before a commencement address at Princeton University said "* * * weakness on our part would stir fear among the small or weakened nations that we were giving up our world leadership."

Then he goes on and in his State of the Union Message on January 6, 1947, he said: "* * * we live in a world in which strength on the part of peace-loving nations is still the greatest deterrent to aggression. World stability can be destroyed when nations with great responsibilities neglect to maintain the means of discharging those responsibilities."

Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan and I still believe in the Harry Truman philosophy of peace through strength. That is what kept this Nation free for all of these 200 years, and that is why we have a free world today.

TRADE DEFICIT

(Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, this morning's Washington Times carried a headline in the business section that says, "Record 25.8 billion trade gap posted in first quarter of 1984."

If the trade deficit continues at this pace it will translate into the loss of 2½ million American jobs that will be exported overseas. I think clearly this body must act.

Congress must act first in reducing the budget deficit. One of the problems in expanding our exports is the high value of the dollar in relation to other currencies.

Second, Congress must act in trade legislation. We must insure that American industries are functioning in an environment of fair trade as well as free trade. We must stop the practice of dumping products into the American market.

Third, Congress must act in continuing pressure on our allies to take more responsibility for free world security. One of the difficulties that we have is that many American dollars move overseas in supporting the American military forces that guarantee the security of the free world. It is time that our allies take a much greater share of responsibility for their own security.

MISSING CHILDREN CLEARINGHOUSES

(Mr. LEWIS of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, last week I toured the Florida Department of Law Enforcement Missing Children Clearinghouse.

Initiated on a shoestring budget during the past 18 months, Florida's program has become the state of the art in locating missing children. I am proud to have been a part of that initiative.

Today, I am introducing legislation that urges other States to establish their own missing children clearinghouses under the direction of their respective departments of law enforcement.

It is most important that the people on the frontlines in the search for our missing children, the State and local police, have all the tools necessary to find these children.

Mr. Speaker, I believe these State clearinghouses will complement and serve as natural and essential components of the newly established National Missing Children Clearinghouse.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this nonpartisan resolution.

SOVIET BOYCOTT OF OLYMPIC GAMES

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union announced today that it intended to boycott the summer Olympics. The alleged rationale for that preliminary decision on their part was the nonsecurity, the lack of security that would be accorded to their athletes by the U.S. Government and, further, that the rights of their athletes would be trampled somehow by the U.S. Government and the U.S. Olympic Committee.

□ 1320

Nothing, of course, is farther from the truth. The truth of the matter is that they have declared their own program, a program of defector's prevention. That is the real rationale for the Soviet action which we hope will be changed by June 5, the last day this kind of situation can be changed.

Everybody in the world knows that the United States and particularly Members of Congress know that the tightest and most sophisticated security networks are being put into effect for the summer Olympics to protect the athletes of every visiting country, including the Soviet Union.

We will not apologize to the Soviet Union for any alleged lack of security and, furthermore, we invite them to change their mind. We want their athletes here to compete in the Olympics.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

FED'S ACTION IN SECRET

(Mr. KEMP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, the prime interest rate went from 12 to 12.5 percent this morning. But it just did not happen this morning, Mr. Speaker. It happened about a month ago when the Federal Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve Board met in secret and decided the economy was growing too fast and thus they had to tighten credit and raise interest rates.

At that meeting they made the decision to raise interest rates and tighten up on the growth of credit and the supply of money thus allowing the Federal funds rate to rise to around 11 percent. How do I know? I know from leaks in the Washington Post and Frank Morris, President of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. According to the Post, Mr. Morris announced that the Fed had secretly decided that the economy was growing faster than they wanted, and they moved to lower the rate of growth in the economy by tightening interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, there are two fundamental things wrong here. Number one, the Fed is doing this in secret and no one knows about it except the constituency of Frank Morris of the Boston Fed and a few inside traders who can sell bonds and/or sell stocks and buy dollars and profit from inside information, while the rest of us are impoverished by the reduced rate of growth.

The second thing wrong with it is the policy itself. Why are they tightening? Mr. Speaker, why is the Federal Reserve worried about too much growth of the economy? We need more jobs and more growth. There is nothing wrong with 8 percent real growth and low inflation. It seems to me that the Fed ought to be held more accountable by those in the Congress who say they represent the American people.

Where are the voices today on the Democratic side of the aisle? Why are they not calling for accountability from the Federal Reserve? And why, Mr. Speaker, is the Fed slowing the economy in the beginning of an economic recovery that is putting people back to work and lowering deficits?

Let us hold the Fed accountable for these actions and demand answers to these hard questions. Let us help give the American people the sound money and low interest rates that once made the dollar the standard and measure for the whole world.

MX A WEAPON OF QUESTIONABLE STRATEGIC VALUE

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to express my opposition to the funding of the MX missile.

One of the major reasons offered by the administration in last year's debate on the MX was that it represented an important bargaining chip in arms control talks with the Soviets. They claimed that our deployment of the MX would offset deployment of similar Soviet missiles, which would give the Soviets an incentive to agree to mutual reductions in our arsenals. Many Members were swayed by that argument and voted to continue funding the MX.

I would ask those Members to reassess that vote in light of the arms control situation we find ourselves in this year. We are now not engaged in any formal arms control talks with the Soviets—a situation that alarms most Americans and leaders of other countries, including the Chinese. The use of the MX as a bargaining chip with the Soviets has clearly been unsuccessful.

Another important issue in this year's debate on the MX issue is the question of where the defense budget can best be cut. There is little dispute in Congress that the administration's recommendation of a 13.5 percent real increase in defense spending is excessive. However, in deciding where to cut the budget, we are forced to make reductions in personnel and readiness-related accounts to fully fund all the weapons systems coming on line. I do not believe Congress should fund the MX, a weapon system of questionable strategic value that would add a further element of instability to our relations with the Soviets, at the expense of the readiness of our military forces.

A TRIBUTE TO HARRY S. TRUMAN

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, it is a joy today—May 8, 1984—to speak in honor of the beloved, late Harry S. Truman, our 33d President whose 100th birthday is today.

Harry Truman was an extraordinary man. If he had not been born a leader of men, he rapidly demonstrated that circumstances had made him one. The toughest decisions of this century fell to him to make. It was his decision to drop the first atomic bomb on Japan. It was his decision to stand up to the Soviet Empire. It was his decision to launch the Marshall plan, the greatest and most foresighted foreign policy initiative of our age. It was that decision to rebuild Europe around a prosperous West Germany that made possible the peace from world war that we have enjoyed since then.

He had a homespun way of talking about himself. His use of common idioms reinforced the strength of his character. He could stand the heat in the kitchen. He once revealed that if he could write his own epitaph he would choose an inscription which is in the cemetery at Tombstone, Arizona: "Here lies Jack Williams. He done his damndest."

Some men, even a great soldier like Gen. Douglas MacArthur, misconstrued him entirely and failed to appreciate Truman's grasp of history. President Reagan's recent visit to China may be seen today as a vindication of Truman's words:

The kind of victory MacArthur had in mind—victory by the bombing of Chinese cities, victory by expanding the conflict to all of China—would have been the wrong kind of victory.

Let us hope that there will be more such men to lead the world in the future.

SOVIET OLYMPIC DECISION WITHOUT FOUNDATION

(Mr. MATSUI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MATSUI. We have just learned that the Soviet Union intends not to participate in the summer Olympics in Los Angeles, CA. As one of 45 members of our California delegation, I would just like to quote the Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley.

He indicated disappointment in the Soviet decision and indicated their charges are without foundation.

I quote him:

Both the Federal Government, LAOOC, and I and the Los Angeles Police Department have repeatedly given assurances to the Soviets and everybody else that their athletes would be welcome, and would be protected, and we have every expectation to be able to supply every aspect of security to all visitors including their athletes.

I would have to say the Soviets are not afraid of their security; they are afraid there will be defections of their athletes, and that would be an international embarrassment to them.

I am very sorry they have to harm California as a way to try to embarrass the United States for their own weakness.

SOIL CONSERVATION INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT ACT

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to coordinate soil conservation efforts presently underway in both Houses of Congress.

This measure will increase the investment tax credit by 10 percent for farmers who undertake certain specific soil and water conservation activities on highly erodible cropland already under cultivation.

While this concept is similar to that embodied in S. 2180 introduced in the other body, I have modified the concept to restrict it to only those acres identified as highly erodible, so as to reduce the measure's impact upon the Federal Treasury, while improving conservation incentives where they are most needed.

In addition, this legislation will complement other proposals before the House, such as the "sodbuster" legislation we are presently considering which prohibits Federal price supports for commodities produced on highly erodible land, by further encouraging the retirement of such fragile lands from cultivation.

Finally, my introduction of this legislation is in conjunction with H.R. 5200, the National Agricultural Soil Protection Act, which I introduced on March 20, 1984. Both measures are based on many months of research and discussion with various members of the agricultural community on how best to address our Nation's soil erosion problems. Your interest and support on this important issue is invited.

CHILD PROTECTION ACT OF 1984

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3635) to amend chapter 110 (relating to sexual exploitation of children) of title 18 of the United States Code, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Child Protection Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) child pornography has developed into a highly organized, multi-million-dollar industry which operates on a nationwide scale;

(2) thousands of children including large numbers of runaway and homeless youth are exploited in the production and distribution of pornographic materials; and

(3) the use of children as subjects of pornographic materials is harmful to the physiological, emotional, and mental health of the individual child and to society.

SEC. 3. Section 2251 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended—

(1) by striking out "visual or print medium" each place it appears and inserting "visual depiction" in lieu thereof;

(2) by striking out "depicting" each place it appears and inserting "of" in lieu thereof;

(3) by striking out "person" each place it appears in subsection (c) and inserting "individual" in lieu thereof;

(4) by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$100,000" in lieu thereof;

(5) by striking out "$15,000" and inserting "$200,000" in lieu thereof; and

(6) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following: "Any organization which violates this section shall be fined not more than $250,000.".

SEC. 4. Section 2252 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended—

(1) by striking out ", for the purpose of sale or distribution for sale";

(2) by striking out "for the purpose of sale or distribution for sale" the second place it appears;

(3) by striking out "obscene" each place it appears;

(4) by striking out "visual or print medium" each place it appears and inserting "visual depiction" in lieu thereof;

(5) by striking out "depicts" each place it appears and inserting "is of" in lieu thereof;

(6) by striking out "or knowingly sells or distributes for sale" and inserting in lieu thereof "or distributes";

(7) by inserting after "mailed" the following: "or knowingly reproduces any visual depiction for distribution in interstate or foreign commerce or through the mails";

(8) by striking out "person" each place it appears in subsection (b) and inserting "individual" in lieu thereof;

(9) by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$100,000" in lieu thereof;

(10) by striking out "$15,000" and inserting "$200,000" in lieu thereof; and

(11) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following: "Any organization which violates this section shall be fined not more than $250,000.".

SEC. 5. (a) Section 2253 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "sixteen" and inserting "eighteen" in lieu thereof;

(2) by striking out "sado-masochistic" and inserting "sadistic or masochistic" in lieu thereof;

(3) by striking out "(for the purpose of sexual stimulation)"; and

(4) by striking out "lewd" and inserting "lascivious" in lieu thereof;

(5) by striking out ", for pecuniary profit"; and

(6) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

"(4) 'organization' means a person other than an individual.".

(b) Section 2253 of title 18 of the United States Code, as amended by subsection (a) is redesignated as section 2255.

SEC. 6. Chapter 110 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting after section 2252 the following:

"§ 2253. Criminal forfeiture

"(a) A person who is convicted of an offense under section 2251 or 2252 of this title shall forfeit to the United States such person's interest in—

"(1) any property constituting or derived from gross profits or other proceeds obtained from such offense; and

"(2) any property used, or intended to be used, to commit such offense.

"(b) In any action under this section, the court may enter such restraining orders or take other appropriate action (including acceptance of performance bonds) in connection with any interest that is subject to forfeiture.

"(c) The court shall order forfeiture of property referred to in subsection (a) if the trier of fact determines, beyond a reasonable doubt, that such property is subject to forfeiture.

"(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the customs laws relating to disposition of seized or forfeited property shall apply to property under this section, if such laws are not inconsistent with this section.

"(2) In any dispostion of property under this section, a convicted person shall not be permitted to acquire property forfeited by such person.

"(3) The duties of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to dispositions of property shall be performed under paragraph (1) of this subsection by the Attorney General, unless such duties arise from forfeitures effected under the customs laws.

"§ 2254. Civil forfeiture

"(a) The following property shall be subject to forfeiture by the United States:

"(1) Any material or equipment used, or intended for use, in producing, reproducing, transporting, shipping, or receiving any visual depiction in violation of this chapter.

"(2) Any visual depiction produced, transported, shipped, or received in violation of this chapter, or any material containing such depiction.

"(3) Any property constituting or derived from gross profits or other proceeds obtained from a violation of this chapter, except that no property shall be forfeited under this paragraph, to the extent of the interest of an owner, by reason of any act or omission established by that owner to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner.

"(b) All provisions of the customs law relating to the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of property for violation of the customs laws, the disposition of such property or the proceeds from the sale thereof, the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures, and the compromise of claims, shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, except that such duties as are imposed upon the customs officer or any other person with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of property under the customs laws shall be performed with respect to seizures and forfeitures of property under this section by such officers, agents, or other persons as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Attorney General, except to the extent that such duties arise from seizures and forfeitures effected by any customs officer.".

SEC. 7. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 110 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended—

(1) by inserting after the item relating to section 2252 the following new items:

"2253. Criminal forfeiture.

"2254. Civil forfeiture.";

(2) by redesignating the item relating to section 2253 as 2255.

SEC. 8. Section 2516(1)(c) of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by inserting "sections 2251 and 2252 (sexual exploitation of children)," after "section 664 (embezzlement from pension and welfare funds),"

SEC. 9. Beginning one hundred and twenty days after the date of enactment of this Act, and every year thereafter, the Attorney General shall report to the Congress on prosecutions, convictions, and forfeitures under chapter 110 of title 18 of the United States Code.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES)?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I am, in fact, very pleased to work with my good friend and colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) in bringing this bill to the floor. It would not have been brought here without his cooperation.

It is a response in part to the decision of the Supreme Court in New York against Farber which decided we did not need the obscenity standard to be met in relationship to child pornography because the State's interest in the well-being of our children superseded even some of the nicer requirements of the first amendment when applied to consenting adults. Also, the bill eliminates the existing requirement of the sale or commercial aspect of the pornography in that we learned during hearings that this is a kind of a cult situation where much of the exchange is among those sick people who get pleasure out of trading pictures and obviously, whether it is sold or not, the impact on the child is the same. It also raises the age from 16 to 18 years, because very often we are unable to locate the child and the age must be deduced from the picture itself. This will make it easier to bring it within the protected age groups.

We have also adopted the forfeiture provisions of the bill of the other body and also we have permitted wiretaps, with judicial supervision, to facilitate the interception of this somewhat clandestine cultish group that exchange this pornography.

I also want to say that we are indebted to the junior Senators from Pennsylvania and from Iowa in their cooperation in getting this bill in shape to bring to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) to explain the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has done a very good job of describing what is in the compromise version of the bill. The fact is that the bill does strengthen the law against child pornography, as my colleague from Michigan has indicated. And, most importantly, eliminates the burden of proving that child pornography is obscene under the complex Supreme Court test.

It eliminates the requirement of proving that the production, distribution, and receipt of child pornography was for the purpose of sale, which has been a hinderance to prosecution under the existing law.

It does raise the age, as my colleague has indicated, from 16 to 18. That is going to enable us to do a better job of ferreting out the abuses to younger children in particular in that age group between 13 and 16, where age if often very difficult to discern. It does substantially raise the fine that can be imposed from $10,000 to $100,000 for a first offense, and from $15,000 to $200,000 for a second offense.

It closes the loophole which now limits prosecution for production of child pornography only to those persons who actually induce children to pose in pornographic pictures. Under this bill the producers, regardless of where or how they obtained their negatives, can be prosecuted.

And it does provide extremely important authority to permit the Government to participate in wiretapping in those instances permitted by the courts.

The principal amendments that we took in conference deal with civil and criminal forfeiture which, I think, will provide prosecutors with additional tools and are strengthening amendments.

In addition, we have developed a new definition of sexually explicit conduct.

My colleague from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER), has correctly given a great deal of credit to the Senator from Iowa, who worked very diligently in conference and in the Senate, and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, (Mr. SPECTER), who also worked very hard on this legislation. Indeed, Mr. SPECTER was a principal architect of the bill in the Senate.

On the House side a number of Members worked extremely hard, not the least of which is the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO), who has been very interested in this area of the law for a long time and who, in fact, made substantial contributions during the hearing process and during markup in this legislation. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO) has been invaluable to us in our endeavors, as has the gentleman from California (Mr. PASHAYAN), who has been very, very helpful. Our colleague on the Subcommittee on Crime, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) has been extremely helpful in both during the hearing process, as well as during markup.

Last, but not least, my colleague from Michigan, who is the prime sponsor of this legislation, has been invaluable in moving this measure through the legislative process. HAL SAWYER worked extremely hard, not just during the hearing process, but in markup, in crafting a strong bill. This legislation will close the loopholes and provide prosecutors with the new tools they need to strengthen our enforcement efforts against those who produce or traffic in such smut.

I just regret that our colleague from Michigan, the ranking Republican (Mr. SAWYER) is not going to be with us in the next Congress. His contributions to the criminal justice system have been noteworthy and significant.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving my right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of concurring in the Senate amendment on the child pornography bill. This bill is long overdue in that it will give our prosecutors tools to better and more easily convict those who are in the process of producing and disseminating child pornography.

The Supreme Court has given us the opening to strengthen the child pornography statutes and I am glad that we are taking advantage of this opening not only in what elements of the crime have to be proven in court, but also in increasing the fines and forfeitures rather dramatically so that it will no longer pay kiddie porn pushers to do this kind of activity, because if they are caught and they are convicted, the forfeiture is going to be high enough so that it really stings them in the pocketbook.

I would like to salute the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER) for their valiant efforts in this piece of legislation.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan again for yielding.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to objection, I yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO).

Mr. HUTTO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I too, want to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER) for their fine work on this bill.

I appreciate especially the hospitality that they extended to me and the way they conducted the hearings when I went before the gentleman's subcommittee.

I think that through the gentlemen's efforts we are finally getting to one of the Nation's greatest problems regarding children. It is unbelievable what has been done in the past several years with regard to exploitation of children. Through this legislation I think you are making a giant step in trying to curtail and to stop this heinous practice.

About 1 million youngsters a year are affected, is my understanding. I am glad, too, that through your efforts and through the efforts of the media, particularly the Ladies Home Journal and the Reader's Digest that the American people are learning about this tremendous problem and of course when the people speak, well, then, we get some results. And they are acting through the efforts that you have made.

I believe that this legislation passed this body with only one dissenting vote. It is my hope that we will pass this legislation unanimously and send it to the President.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

Mr. LUNGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to echo the words of commendation to the chairman and the ranking member of this subcommittee. They have worked diligently on this bill.

I am only sorry that other crime legislation has not moved as swiftly in other subcommittees. I think they have proven that you can work with this on a bipartisan basis in the House and in the Senate.

I would hope that this would be used as a guide to the full Judiciary Committee to work as expeditiously on other elements of the President's crime package so we might deal with them as we are dealing with this bill today.

The legislation is needed. Without such legislative changes we have been hamstrung in terms of prosecuting those who are the purveyors of this type of pornography.

I might just say that I do not think that we could have had this legislation 10 or 15 years ago, not because of the intent of the Members, but because of the overall public attitude. I think we have recognized that pornography is a harm to society, and the harm goes beyond those people who may be just looking at that pornography. It goes to those people who are caught in the whole web of it. And it certainly goes to those children who are being brought into the web of pornography at earlier and earlier ages.

In my home State of California, we have a terrible situation that is revealing itself now of molestation of children in day care centers. It has caused the entire public consciousness to be raised in this whole area. And child pornography is certainly just one part of that whole problem.

So I again wish to compliment the chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES), and the ranking minority member (Mr. SAWYER) for the work that they have done. I am sorry that we have not seen this same type of work being done on other parts of the package that are within the jurisdictions of other subcommittees. Again, I would hope that these other subcommittees would use this as a model for the type of work we can do on a bipartisan basis.

● Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Mr. SAWYER and Mr. HUGHES for their dedicated work on this important piece of legislation. Through their efforts, and those of others, this bill is even stronger than it was when we voted on it in November.

During our work on the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, we have heard about many forms of child abuse, the most insidious of which is probably sexual abuse. We have heard that abusers will use child pornography to persuade children that others do certain things, so they must be OK. We know that it is not OK, and this bill is a good way for us to send a message to those who think otherwise.

Thank you.●

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DURBIN). Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken later today, prior to general debate on H.R. 5119, the foreign aid authorization for fiscal year 1985.

VIRGINIA NATIONAL FOREST WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5121) to designate certain national forest system lands in the State of Virginia as wilderness, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 5121

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Virginia National Forest Wilderness Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act (16 U.S.C. 1131-1136), the following lands in the State of Virginia are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System—

(1) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately six thousand three hundred and seventy-five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Beartown Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Beartown Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately five thousand five hundred and eighty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Kimberling Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Kimberling Creek Wilderness;

(3) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately five thousand seven hundred and thirty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Lewis Fork Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Lewis Fork Wilderness;

(4) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately three thousand four hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Little Dry Run Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Little Dry Run Wilderness;

(5) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately three thousand eight hundred and fifty-five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Little Wilson Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Little Wilson Creek Wilderness;

(6) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately eight thousand two hundred and fifty-three acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mountain Lake Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Mountain Lake Wilderness;

(7) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately three thousand three hundred and twenty-six acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Peters Mountain Wilderness—Proposed." dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Peters Mountain Wilderness;

(8) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately two thousand four hundred and fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Thunder Ridge Wilderness—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Thunder Ridge Wilderness;

(9) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately one hundred and sixty acres, as generally depicted on map entitled "James River Face Wilderness Addition—Proposed", dated January 1984, and which are hereby incorporated in, and shall be deemed part of, the James River Face Wilderness as designated by Public Law 93-622;

(10) certain lands in the George Washington National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately six thousand seven hundred and twenty-five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Ramseys Draft Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1984, and which shall be known as the Ramseys Draft Wilderness; and

(11) certain lands in the George Washington National Forest, Virginia, which comprise approximately ten thousand and ninety acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Saint Mary's Wilderness—Proposed", dated January 1984, and which shall be known as the Saint Mary's Wilderness.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, the wilderness areas designated under this section shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness, except that any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act (or any similar reference) shall be deemed to be a reference to the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) As soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall file a map and a legal description of each wilderness area designated under this section with the Committees on Agriculture and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and with the Committees on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry and Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. The map and description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that correction of clerical and typographical errors in the legal description and map may be made. The map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act, the Secretary shall review, as to their suitability for preservation as wilderness, the following areas in the State of Virginia—

(1) certain lands in the George Washington National Forest which comprise approximately nine thousand three hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Rough Mountain Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated January 1984, and which shall be known as the Rough Mountain Wilderness Study Area;

(2) certain lands in the George Washington National Forest which comprise approximately five thousand six hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Rich Hole Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated January 1984, and which shall be known as the Rich Hole Wilderness Study Area;

(3) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest which comprise approximately five thousand eight hundred and seventy-five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Barbours Creek Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Barbours Creek Wilderness Study Area; and

(4) certain lands in the Jefferson National Forest which comprise approximately four thousand three hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Shawvers Run Wilderness Study Area—Proposed", dated February 1984, and which shall be known as the Shawvers Run Wilderness Study Area.

In conducting his review, the Secretary shall give public notice at least sixty days in advance of any hearing or other public meeting concerning a study area.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, until Congress determines otherwise, the wilderness study areas designated by this section shall be administered by the Secretary so as to maintain their presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

SEC. 4. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the second roadless area review and evaluation program (RARE II);

(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of national forest system roadless areas in Virginia and of the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress hereby determines and directs that—

(1) without passing on the question of the legal and factual sufficiency of the RARE II final environmental statement (dated January 1979) with respect to national forest system lands in States other than Virginia, such statement shall not be subject to judicial review with respect to national forest system lands in the State of Virginia;

(2) with respect to the national forest system lands in the State of Virginia which were reviewed by the Department of Agriculture in the second roadless area review and evaluation (RARE II) and those lands referred to in subsection (d), except those lands remaining in wilderness study upon enactment of this Act, that review and evaluation or reference shall be deemed for the purposes of the initial land management plans required for such lands by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, to be an adequate consideration of the suitability of such lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System and the Department of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option prior to the revisions of the plans, but shall review the wilderness option when the plans are revised, which revisions will ordinarily occur on a ten-year cycle, or at least every fifteen years, unless, prior to such time the Secretary of Agriculture finds that conditions in a unit have significantly changed;

(3) areas in the State of Virginia reviewed in such final environmental statement or referenced in subsection (d) and not designated wilderness or wilderness study upon enactment of this Act shall be managed for multiple use in accordance with land management plans pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976: Provided, That such areas need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of the initial land management plans;

(4) in the event that revised land management plans in the State of Virginia are implemented pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law, areas not recommended for wilderness designation need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitabliity for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of such plans, and areas recommend for wilderness designation shall be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation as may be required by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law; and

(5) unless expressly authorized by Congress, the Department of Agriculture shall not conduct any further statewide roadless area review and evaluation of national forest system lands in the State of Virginia for the purpose of determining their suitability for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

(c) As used in this section, and as provided in section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, the term "revision" shall not include an "amendment" to a plan.

(d) The provisions of this section shall also apply to national forest system roadless lands in the State of Virginia which are less than 5,000 acres in size.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5121, the Virginia Wilderness Act. H.R. 5121 was introduced by Virginia Congressmen OLIN and BOUCHER, and covers lands located in their congressional districts. As reported by the committee, the bill designates 11 additions to the wilderness system and 4 wilderness study areas. Many of the wilderness proposals, such as Ramsey's Draft, Mountain Lake, Peters Mountain, and St. Mary's are longstanding wilderness proposals on which the Public Lands Subcommittee held hearings in the 95th Congress, 6 years ago. Several are areas which were designated for wilderness study by Congress in 1975. With very few exceptions, the proposals are recommended for wilderness by the Forest Service in recognition of their outstanding recreation potential, and in some cases, significant stands of virgin timber. As Members may be aware, most of the central Appalachians were heavily logged around the turn of the century, and virgin timber stands are a rarity indeed.

Mr. Speaker, Congressmen OLIN and BOUCHER strongly support this bill and have urged it be moved as soon as possible. I am aware that the Westvaco Corp. has expressed concern with the bill, because they fear that some future Congress might designate all wilderness areas class I for the purposes of the Clean Air Act, and that such redesignation might imperil Westvaco's planned expansion of their facility in Covington, VA. To alleviate Westvaco's concerns, Congressmen OLIN and BOUCHER asked us to make the four areas closest to Covington wilderness study areas, even though two of them are proposed for wilderness by the Forest Service. We have accommodated their request, and I would additionally advise Members that the State of Virginia, the two Congressmen, and the major environment groups supporting wilderness have stated for the record that they will not propose class I redesignation. In short we have bent over backwards to accommodate Westvaco and am hopeful that our actions will prompt them to reconsider their previous opposition to the bill. For further information on the wilderness/clean air issue, I would refer Members to the committee report on the bill, which contains an excellent discussion of the matter.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 5121, as amended, is extremely meritorious legislation, and I congratulate Congressmen OLIN and BOUCHER for their prolonged efforts to negotiate this compromise measure. I urge my colleagues' support of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DE LA GARZA), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and I wish to thank him for the great support he has been giving us on these wilderness bills.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5121 and H.R. 3788, which will be brought up later this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I support this legislation.

These bills have been referred both to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The bills involve what are referred to as eastern forests and they contain so-called release/sufficiency language which relates to the management of areas in the national forests which are not designated as wilderness. In order to expedite consideration of these bills, the Committee on Agriculture does not object to their being taken up on the floor of the House without consideration by the committee. This position is taken without in any respect waiving jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture with regard to these bills or to similar provisions in other bills. If the provisions of H.R. 5121 and H.R. 3788 should become an issue with the Senate—in the event that the bills pass the House—I intend to request that the Committee on Agriculture be represented in any conference which may be held.

I appreciate this opportunity to make clear the jurisdictional interest of the Committee on Agriculture in these bills.

I would like to take the occasion also to commend Mr. SEIBERLING, chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, Mr. UDALL, chairman of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and Senator JIM MCCLURE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, for their work in reaching a compromise on the release language included in the wilderness bills. The new compromise language is being included by amendment in the two wilderness bills before the House today. The release language governs the management and future review of lands that have been studied for potential wilderness designation by the Forest Service, but not designated as wilderness in the legislation.

For several years this has been an intractable issue between the Senate and House on a series of wilderness bills that have passed the House and has stalled further action on these bills even though all other issues have been resolved. Messrs. SEIBERLING and UDALL have persisted in their efforts to compromise these differences, in consultation with our committee, and I am pleased that they finally have succeeded. We can now expect final congressional action on wilderness bills affecting many areas of the country.

I also would like to commend my dear friend, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), who is handling the bill on the minority side. I am always appreciative of the work that he does.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5121, the Virginia wilderness bill.

In terms of total acreage, the bill is very close to the RARE II recommendations. In fact, the Forest Service would support wilderness designation for two additional areas—known as Rough Mountain and Rich Hole—instead of the wilderness study proposed in the bill.

The committee and the Virginia delegation left these two areas and two others in a study status due to the concerns of Westvaco. The company owns a large papermill located very close to the study areas and is concerned about possible redesignation of the areas as class I under the Clean Air Act. While redesignation is not likely, the study called for in the bill will allow some additional time to look at this issue and hopefully satisfy the company's concerns.

The bill also contains the new compromise release language worked out between Members of both bodies. While it falls far short of hard release which I would prefer to see, I respect the views of the key Members involved and can appreciate the pressures placed on them to reach an agreement.

Overall, I believe the bill is a reasonable proposal and I intend to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER).

Mr. BOUCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like first to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee, Mr. SEIBERLING, and to his very capable staff for their assistance with this legislation. I understand the very busy schedules which the subcommittee and the full committee have been operating under, and I greatly appreciate the expeditious consideration which this legislation has received.

Like many of the wilderness bills which the House considers, H.R. 5121 represents the balance of diverse interests which has been developed through many months of debate and discussion. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. OLIN, and I have worked closely with the Forest Service field representatives who are most familiar with the RARE II study areas, and our recommendations reflect their advice. We have also attempted to work with as many of the forest users as possible. H.R. 5121 was drafted after careful consideration of the interests of those to whom the forest is a means of livelihood, a recreational resource, an avenue of learning and scientific study, or a provider of drinking water. The selection of areas for wilderness protection and the recommendations for the boundaries of each of these areas have evolved from the suggestions of thousands of Virginia citizens.

H.R. 5121 designates as wilderness for hunting, fishing, camping, hiking, and other compatible uses approximately 56,000 acres, comprising somewhat less than 4 percent of Virginia's National Forest lands. It places approximately 25,000 acres in further study, and it releases to multiple use nearly 135,000 acres which have been studied and restudied for possible wilderness designation. The care which we have taken in selecting the areas for wilderness protection has resulted in broad-based and bipartisan support for this legislation.

All of the areas recommended for wilderness designation and for further study lie in the Ninth and Sixth Congressional Districts in the State of Virginia, which Mr. OLIN and I have the privilege of representing. We have worked as partners in developing this measure, and I am pleased to have my distinguished colleague from Virginia's Sixth District as a cosponsor.

I am also pleased that the gentleman from Virginia's Second District, Mr. WHITEHURST, has joined in the cosponsorship of this measure. Mr. WHITEHURST, as many Members know, has been active over the years in efforts to protect the special wilderness resources of Virginia, and I commend him for his foresight and initiative. His cosponsorship of H.R. 5121 reflects well upon the bipartisan nature of our commitment to protect irreplaceable natural resources and to balance these protections with a respect for Virginia's economic development needs.

Within my own district, 7 sites totaling 45,124 acres will be designated as wilderness. Two sites totaling 9,585 acres are recommended for further study.

Each of the areas our legislation would place in the National Wilderness Preservation System has been recommended for wilderness by the U.S. Forest Service. During the past 18 months we have consulted with local citizens and elected officials in the affected counties with regard to each of these areas. With the clear understanding that wilderness areas will remain open to hunting and fishing and that wilderness legislation will not impair the rights of any private property owners or result in any condemnation of land by the Federal Government, a strong consensus has developed in favor of the designation of these areas. Among the many active suporters of H.R. 5121 are the Virginia Wildlife Federation, Trout Unlimited, the Tazewell County Sportsmen's Club, the Craig County Wildlife Association, and the Virginia Wilderness Committee.

In Tazewell County, 5,115 acres of the Beartown RARE II study area will be designated as wilderness, thereby protecting the popular native trout streams, three zones of vegetation types and excellent hunting grounds. The designation of these areas has been strongly promoted by the Tazewell County Sportsmen's Club, and the boundaries we have selected are supported by local users as well as those from neighboring counties.

In the Mount Rogers Recreation Area in the Counties of Smyth and Grayson, two unique areas totaling just over 9,500 acres will be designated as wilderness. Forest users enjoy the scenic areas of Lewis Fork and Little Wilson Creek for day-hiking and horseback riding. The Lewis Fork area is traversed by the Appalachian Trail, and it has been under consideration for possible reintroduction of the golden eagle.

In Wythe County to the east of Lewis Fork and Little Wilson lies the area of Little Dry Run. This roadless and remote area is representative of the Appalachian Forest ecosystem, providing a home for deer, turkey, squirrel, grouse, songbirds, and other nongame animals. The total acreage of Little Dry Run is 3,400.

Kimberling Creek is Bland County is popular for hunting and camping. The stands of mixed hardwoods and white and yellow pines in this 5,580 acre tract offer little commercial development, and recreation is clearly the most appropriate usage for this area.

The largest and perhaps most spectacular proposed wilderness area in my district is the Mountain Lake area in Giles County—part of a highland plateau sitting squarely on the eastern Continental Divide. This area is the home of the University of Virginia's Biological Monitoring Research Station, and its resources are the subject of extensive long-term studies. In addition the area contains superlative stands of virgin spruce and hemlock, a mountain bog of unusually large size, and a mature hardwood forest with a lush fern, rhododendron, and azalea understory.

Just west of Mountain Lake lies Peters Mountain, a 3,300-acre tract which contains a beautiful high mountain bog and a popular trout stream. Yellow poplar, red oak, and hickory occur in the coves of the area, and the crest of Peters Mountain has numerous sandstone outcroppings which afford exceptional views of the surrounding countryside.

The one area which has occasioned considerable disagreement between local citizens and the Forest Service is in Craig County. This disagreement centers on the Forest Service's multiple use recommendations for the Barbours Creek study area. My office worked with the proponents of the Barbours Creek study area to focus on the resources which the local citizens are most interested in conserving. We have redrawn the boundaries of the original study area, removing in this process several traveled roads and other areas which appear to be more suited for multiple use. In so doing we have created two separate areas, Barbours Creek and Shawvers Run, both of which include excellent hunting grounds and native trout streams. Our legislation places both Barbours Creek and Shawvers Run into further study, offering the protection of special management until such time as Congress acts to alter their status. I would have been pleased to place both of these areas in wilderness at this time were it not for a very important southwest Virginia employer, the concerns of which I would also like to address.

The Westvaco Bleached Board Division has expressed concern that the designation of areas as wilderness may at some point in the future be followed by their redesignation by Congress as class 1 regions for purposes of the Clean Air Act. Westvaco has recently announced an important expansion of its Covington, VA, plant and is concerned that such a redesignation might impair its expansion.

Mr. OLIN and I have met and worked with Westvaco officials on numerous occasions in an effort fully to understand their concerns and determine how we might best address them. H.R. 5121 represents a sincere and, we believe, reasonable approach to the concerns Westvaco has raised. Our bill leaves in place the current class II air standards for each of the proposed wilderness areas and wilderness study areas, and I will actively oppose any change of these standards to a more restrictive category. I am of the view that the existing class II standards offer ample protection to both the wilderness resources and the business development opportunities of neighboring communities, and I was pleased to find that members of the Interior Committee share this view. This perspective is carefully and appropriately detailed in the committee report accompanying H.R. 5121.

Moreover, I have discussed Westvaco's concerns with representatives of national environmental organizations which have an interest in the Clean Air Act and in wilderness legislation. I was pleased to learn that neither the Sierra Club nor the Wilderness Society has any plans to recommend new class I Clean Air Act designations in Virginia, and I have received a letter from those organizations so stating.

I am also pleased to report that the leaders in the Virginia conservation community have been willing to document their intentions in this area as well. Representatives of key environmental organizations in the State have stated clearly that these groups will not seek and will not support redesignation of our proposed wilderness areas to class I.

Notwithstanding these significant assurances and the extreme improbability of Congress redesignating these areas as class I, Mr. OLIN and I have taken an additional step to assure Westvaco that their expansion will not be impaired by the passage of our bill. For the four areas which are closest to Westvaco's plant, we have chosen not to make wilderness recommendations at this time. On the other hand, because of strong citizen interest in the preservation of these areas and the value of their wilderness resources, we are not releasing to multiple use Barbours Creek, Shawvers Run, Rich Hole, or Rough Mountain. To balance all interests, we have placed these areas in further study with the stipulation that they be managed to protect their wilderness values until further act of the Congress determines their final status.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe that our wilderness proposal deserves the favorable consideration of the House. It preserves in perpetuity some of the outstanding natural treasures of western and southwestern Virginia. It balances the interests of various groups concerned with the resources of our National Forests, and it is broadly supported by the citizens I have the privilege of representing.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. OLIN).

Mr. OLIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding the time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5121, the Virginia wilderness bill. As a sponsor of this bill which includes wilderness designations in my district, I can assure my colleagues that this is a carefully balanced bill which protects important and unique areas in Virginia for future generations, as well as protecting jobs. Great care has been taken to insure that both are protected.

H.R. 5121 designates 56,000 acres in Virginia as wilderness. This equals 3.4 percent of the 1,632,307 acres of national forest lands in the Commonwealth. Just as important, this bill releases to multiple use management over 157,000 acres which have been held in a quasi-wilderness limbo for a number of years.

This bill represents the culmination of over a year of careful study by Congressman BOUCHER and myself. The areas contained in H.R. 5121 were part of the U.S. Forest Service's RARE II study. And, I am pleased to add that the administration supports this legislation.

Over the last year I have talked with and heard from thousands of people in Virginia's Sixth Congressional District about wilderness. Elected officials and numerous civic organizations have expressed their opinions. With only a few exceptions, public opinion expressed at meetings and through correspondence has been supportive of wilderness by a wide margin.

On the basis of the recommendations of the Forest Service, the input I have received throughout the Sixth Congressional District, and my own review of these sites and the issues involved, I have proposed wilderness designation for three sites in my district in H.R. 5121. These sites are St. Mary's and Ramsey's Draft in Augusta County, and Thunder Ridge in Rockbridge, Botetourt, and Bedford Counties. I am convinced that the protection offered by wilderness designation makes sense for these special sites.

Mr. Speaker, since promoting economic and industrial development in the Sixth District of Virginia is one of my top priorities, I would like to clarify a few misunderstandings which I have encountered on how wilderness will affect air quality standards as provided under the Clean Air Act.

First, all of the areas designated for wilderness under H.R. 5121 will retain their existing class II air quality standards.

Second, Congressman BOUCHER and I have no desire to see these standards change and will vigorously any effort to redesignate these sites to class I air.

Further, I have found no desire by any group or organization to change the air quality standards from class II to class I.

In its committee report, the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee "emphatically states its intention that wilderness areas designated by H.R. 5121 should remain class II." The report goes on to say, "This committee would strongly oppose any attempt to redesignate the wilderness class I."

The major environmental organizations in Virginia have publicly stated: We can foresee no set of circumstances under which we would either initiate or support any effort to reclassify wilderness areas in Virginia to air quality class I. We believe that any such effort would be unnecessary and ill-advised."

Even major national environmental organizations have gone on record stating that they have no plans to seek redesignations for these sites—now or in the future.

Finally, my conversations with the Governor of Virginia make it clear that the Commonwealth of Virginia has no desire to redesignate any of the wilderness areas from class II to class I.

Third, given the proximity of these and other class II wilderness areas to important industrial activities throughout the country, there is no reason to believe that this Congress—or some future Congress—would seek to redesignate class II wilderness areas to class I.

After a thorough investigation it is abundantly clear to me that H.R. 5121 does not threaten jobs and that these wilderness sites will not be redesignated to class I air quality areas.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Interior Committee, and the chairman of the subcommittee involved, Mr. SEIBERLING, for its prompt attention to H.R. 5121 and for bringing it to the floor today. I believe this is a balanced and fair bill which deserves the support of our colleagues, and I urge the adoption of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to describe the recommendations of the U.S. Forest Service under its RARE II study and the areas recommended for wilderness and further study under H.R. 5121.

In all of our analysis, the starting point was the Forest Service recommendations for specific sites. In the Sixth District, six sites were originally recommended for wilderness. They were: First, head of Dry Run in Rockingham County in the George Washington National Forest; second, St. Mary's in Augusta County in the George Washington National Forest; third, Ramsey's Draft in Augusta County in the George Washington National Forest; fourth, Rough Mountain in Bath County in the George Washington National Forest; fifth, Rich Hole in Alleghany and Rockbridge Counties in the George Washington National Forest; and sixth, Thunder Ridge in Rockbridge, Botetourt, and Bedford Counties in the Thomas Jefferson National Forest.

In addition, three sites were recommended for further planning: First, Southern Massanutten in Rockingham and Page Counties in the George Washington National Forest; second, Dolly Anne in Alleghany County in the George Washington National Forest; and third, Ramsey's Draft Addition in Augusta and Highland Counties in the George Washington National Forest.

The proposed St. Mary's Wilderness Area is 10,090 acres in southeastern Augusta County. It is situated mostly within the watershed of the St. Mary's River and its tributaries. The site lies on the western slopes of the Blue Ridge just off the Blue Ridge Parkway. The most outstanding feature of this area is the St. Mary's River itself and its numerous cascades.

The St. Mary's River is classed as a No. 1 native trout stream in its upper reaches and No. 2 in the lower reaches. The stream contains native trout. Because of its rugged terrain, St. Mary's is also prime bear habitat.

Ramsey's Draft is another good wilderness candidate. It is 6,725 acres in northestern Augusta County and located just off Route 250. The boundary of Ramsey's Draft is the ridge of mountains which surround the draft. It is a beautiful area with large stands of virgin timber and is a popular area for hikers and campers. The area also has a good parking area adjacent to it just off Route 250.

The Thunder Ridge Wilderness proposal will complement the existing adjacent James River Face Wilderness Area. This will provide a continuous wilderness area in the Blue Ridge Mountains chain from the James River to Apple Orchard Mountain, and it includes a portion of the Appalachian Trail. The two wilderness areas are separated only by Petites Gap Road. A 2-acre trail-head parking area is provided for. James River face is a permanent class I air quality area.

In addition to these three sites, H.R. 5121 also adds 160 acres to the James River Face Wilderness Area. As I indicated, the Thunder Ridge Wilderness Area would be adjacent to the James River Face Wilderness Area with a road separating the two areas. In several small sections, however, designating Thunder Ridge as a wilderness area would leave small pockets of nonwilderness Forest Service lands surrounded by wilderness areas. The addition of the 160 acres to the James River Face Wilderness Area eliminates these nonwilderness pockets and improves the ability of the Forest Service to manage both wilderness areas more effectively.

At two of the sites recommended for wilderness designation by the U.S. Forest Service—Rough Mountain and Rich Hole—concerns have been raised by some that wilderness designations might restrict economic growth in nearby communities. The possibility of a future redesignation of these sites to class I air under the Clean Air Act, the likelihood of such a redesignation, and the implications of such a redesignation have been the subject of some debate and conflicting opinions. I would like to focus on this debate for a few minutes.

Covington, VA, is the site of a major paper mill operation of the Westvaco Corp. It is a major source of employment to the area and an important source of tax revenues. I am pleased to report that Westvaco has now begun a major new expansion at its Covington facility. This will mean the creation of a number of new jobs for the region. Obviously, Westvaco is anxious to insure that they are able to proceed with this expansion and modernization and that actions not be taken which might impede normal and responsible growth in its work at Covington.

In this context, Westvaco, and others in the area, have expressed concerns that if wilderness areas are established in too close of proximity to their Covington plant they might be constrained in their activities if at some future point in time these new wilderness areas were somehow redesignated as class I areas under the Clean Air Act. Let me hasten to add that no one has suggested that Westvaco would be constrained in its growth if these areas retain their current class II designations. The concerns focus on whether these sites might be redesignated as class I and what that might mean to the Covington facility.

Mr. Speaker, as I have described earlier, the designation of areas as wilderness does not change their air quality standard. The areas reviewed under RARE II are all class II and those which are designated wilderness will remain class II. Further, there is no visible interest on anyone's part to seek a redesignation from class II to class I, and the likelihood that these areas would be redesignated as class I is extremely remote.

Nevertheless, I wanted to better understand what the impact on Westvaco might be if several close sites were somehow redesignated as class I air quality areas. I raised this question with the State Air Pollution Control Board, the agency charged with enforcing the Clean Air Act in Virginia for the Environmental Protection Agency.

For study purposes the State Board looked at a worst-case scenario in which four areas between 10 and 20 miles away from Covington would be designated as wilderness and would have their air quality redesignated to class I. The Air Board then used an EPA approved computer model to see whether Westvaco could expand and increase its emissions without violating class I air quality standards.

In its preliminary report, the regional director of the State Air Pollution Control Board concluded that even in this worst case situation, Westvaco would be violating its existing class II air quality standards around Covington long before class I air at wilderness sites 10 to 20 miles away would impose any restrictions on Westvaco's expansion.

The sites examined in the Air Board Study were Rich Hole, Rough Mountain, Barbours Creek, and Shawvers Run.

Still Westvaco felt that additional scientific data would be necessary before the Air Board's preliminary finding could be verified. Because I am so committed to job creation in the Virginia's Sixth Congressional District, I decided to hold off on any decision on wilderness designation for Rough Mountain and Rich Hole until meteorological data could be collected and analyzed in a technical and dispassionate manner. My colleague, Mr. BOUCHER from the Ninth Congressional District agreed with this approach and also agreed to hold off on any designation recommendations for Barbours Creek and Shawvers Run until scientific data became available.

Toward this goal, Congressman BOUCHER and I have written to the Environmental Protection Agency requesting that agency to conduct a thorough review of the Clean Air Act issues and questions which have been raised in this debate. Mr. Speaker, for the record I am including a copy of the letter to EPA Administrator Ruckelshaus, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, March 15, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM D. RUCKELSHAUS,
Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. RUCKELSHAUS: In evaluating U.S. Forest Service proposals to designate National Forest System lands in our Congressional Districts as wilderness, we have found considerable disagreement on the question of whether designating areas as wilderness might impose Clean Air Act restrictions which might hamper economic growth in nearby communities.

While all of the areas proposed for wilderness are currently class II, as defined under the Clean Air Act of 1977, concerns exist that these areas might be redesignated to class I sometime in the future. We have been presented with conflicting data on whether class I air quality standards at three specific sites would impose restrictions on possible future expansions of the Westvaco Corporation at its Covington, Virginia facility. These sites are: Rough Mountain, in Bath County; Rich Hole, in Alleghany and Rockbridge Counties; and, Barbours Creek, in Craig County. These are identified on the enclosed map.

We are anxious to maintain a climate which is conducive to future economic growth and job creation in Virginia. Nevertheless, we also support the preservation of wild and primitive areas for future generations.

Since the Environmental Protection Agency is charged with administering the Clean Air Act, and the wilderness debate on the three areas cited above is essentially a technical and scientific one on the impact of the Clean Air Act at these specific sites, we are asking for your help in better understanding the facts. It would be very helpful for us to have your opinion as to the circumstances, or lack thereof, under which a class I designation at each of these sites would impose restrictions on future expansions at Westvaco Corporation's facility in Covington. We would also appreciate some estimates on the likelihood of any scenarios under which restrictions would be placed on Westvaco and the costs of existing technologies for meeting and complying with those restrictions.

We recognize that the answers to these questions will take some analysis by your agency; however, it is important for us to have a sound opinion based on scientific and technical fact, not emotion or idle conjecture. We would very much appreciate your opinion so that we may proceed in a thoughtful way on the wilderness recommendations for the sites referenced above.

Please keep us apprised of your progress in answering these questions. If we can provide you with any information or answer any questions on this for you, please don't hesitate to let us know.

Sincerely,

JIM OLIN,
Member of Congress.
FREDERICK C. BOUCHER,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5121 leaves Rich Hole and Rough Mountain in their current study status. The same is true for Barbours Creek and Shawvers Run in Craig County in Mr. BOUCHER's district. Keeping these areas in their current status will protect them from development and maintain their natural charter and integrity. At the same time, it provides us with the time needed to resolve technical, scientific questions on the Clean Air Act without holding hostage the other areas provided for under H.R. 5121.

The remaining site recommended for wilderness designation by the U.S. Forest Service under its RARE II study was head of Dry Run in Rockingham County. In 1980, the Forest Service reassessed this site and changed its recommendation from wilderness to multiple-use. This change was based on the small size of Head of Dry Run—1,300 acres—and the difficulties the Forest Service would encounter in trying to manage a wilderness area of such small size. I have concurred with the Forest Service in this assessment of the site and have not recommended it for wilderness. Instead, under H.R. 5121 it would be released for multiple-use.

Other than the four specific sites held for further planning in the bill, and those designated as wilderness, all other sites in Virginia reviewed under RARE II in both the George Washington and the Thomas Jefferson National Forests are returned to U.S. Forest Service multiple-use management under H.R. 5121.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to misunderstandings about the relationship of the Wilderness Act and the Clean Air Act, I have found some misconceptions about how wilderness areas are managed. For example, some have feared that if a fire starts in a wilderness area, the Forest Service would have to use bucket brigades and hand tools to fight it. The truth is that the Forest Service can take whatever actions are necessary to put out a fire. The Wilderness Act of 1964 is clear on this point; section 4(d)(1) provides:

. . . such measures may be taken as may be necessary in the control of fire, insects, and diseases . . .

Another misconception is that if someone gets hurt in a wilderness area they could only be brought out on foot. Again, the Wilderness Act of 1964 is clear that any steps necessary can be taken, including the construction of roads, or place to land aircraft, the construction of a temporary structure, or anything else that is necessary in emergencies involving the health and safety of persons in a wilderness area.

Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, I believe this is a fair and balanced bill. It is the result of input from many people and reflects a sincere effort to be responsive to concerns that exist over wilderness designations without undermining the basic need to protect unique natural treasures.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill and I urge its adoption.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5121, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to insert their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

TEXAS WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3788) to designate various areas as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System in the national forests in the State of Texas, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3788

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Texas Wilderness Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act (78 Stat. 890), the following lands are hereby designated as wilderness, and therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System:

(1) certain lands in the Angelina National Forest, Texas, which comprise approximately five thousand four hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Turkey Hill Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Turkey Hill Wilderness;

(2) certain lands in the Angelina National Forest, Texas, which comprise approximately twelve thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Upland Island Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Upland Island Wilderness;

(3) certain lands in the Davy Crockett National Forest, Texas, which comprise approximately three thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Big Slough Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Big Slough Wilderness;

(4) certain lands in the Sabine National Forest, Texas, which comprise approximately ten thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Indian Mounds Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Indian Mounds Wilderness; and

(5) certain lands in the Sam Houston National Forest, Texas, which comprise approximately four thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Little Lake Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated March 1984, and which shall be known as the Little Lake Creek Wilderness.

MAPS AND DESCRIPTIONS

SEC. 3. As soon as practicable after this Act takes effect, the Secretary of Agriculture shall file a map and legal description of each wilderness area designated by this Act with the Committees on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, and the Committees on Agriculture and Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, and each such map and legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act: Provided, however, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in such legal descriptions and maps may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

ADMINISTRATION OF WILDERNESS

SEC. 4. (a) Subject to valid existing rights, each wilderness area designated by this Act shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness areas, except that, with respect to any area designated in this Act, any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this Act.

(b) The Congress finds that the Indian Mounds and Upland Island Wilderness Areas designated by this Act contain significant amounts of intermingled lands owned by the Temple-Eastex Incorporated and that in order to manage the wilderness in an efficient and effective manner it is in the public interest that these lands be owned by the Federal Government. Accordingly, notwithstanding any other provision of the law, within ninety days of enactment of this Act, the United States through the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by exchange from Temple-Eastex Incorporated, subject to the concurrence of said corporation, the lands depicted on a map entitled "Indian Mounds Land Exchange", dated March 1984, consisting of tracts 2264, 2265, 1302, and 2289 and the lands depicted on a map entitled "Upland Island Land Exchange", dated March 1984, and consisting of tract 3191. The lands acquired by the United States under the provisions of this section shall become parts of the Sabine and Angelina National Forest respectively and shall be administered in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations applicable to the national forests and the National Wilderness Preservation System, as appropriate.

(c) Upon acceptance of title by the United States to the lands described in subsection (a) of this section, the United States through the Secretary of Agriculture shall convey to Temple-Eastex Incorporated and the national forest system lands depicted on a map entitled "Indian Mounds Land Exchange—Conveyance to Temple-Eastex", dated March 1984, and consisting of tracts K-La-II, K-la-III, K-La-I, K-2r, S-3, S-2r and S-2o and the lands depicted on a map entitled "Upland Island Land Exchange—Conveyance to Temple-Eastex" dated March 1984, and consisting of tracts S-13-J, S-29-I and S-29-II. The exchange of land authorized by this section shall not include mineral interests.

(d) Upon enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall, for any existing timber sale contracts or portions of sale contracts within the boundaries of the Indian Mounds, Upland Island and Little Creek Wilderness Areas as designated by this Act, terminate the timber sale contracts without cost to the buyer: Provided, That with respect to the portion of the timber sale located in compartment 80 within the proposed Indian Mounds Wilderness and sold to the Saint Regis Paper Company, the Secretary shall upon termination of the contract compensate the buyer by offering to sell the buyer similar timber of approximately equal volumes and values. Such compensatory sale shall be carried out on a negotiated basis.

EFFECT OF RARE II

SEC. 5. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the second roadless area review and evaluation program (RARE II);

(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of national forest system roadless areas in Texas and of the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress hereby determines and directs that—

(2) with respect to the national forest system lands in the State of Texas which were reviewed by the Department of Agriculture in the second roadless area review and evaluation (RARE II) and those lands referred to in subsection (d), that review and evaluation or reference shall be deemed for the purposes of the initial land management plans required for such lands by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, to be an adequate consideration of the suitability of such lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System and the Department of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option prior to the revisions of the plans, but shall review the wilderness option when the plans are revised, which revisions will ordinarily occur on a ten-year cycle, or at least every fifteen years, unless, prior to such time the Secretary of Agriculture finds that conditions in a unit have significantly changed;

(3) areas in the State of Texas reviewed in such final environmental statement or referenced in subsection (d) and not designated wilderness upon enactment of this Act shall be managed for multiple use in accordance with land management plans pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976: Provided, That such areas need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of the initial land management plans;

(4) in the event that revised land management plans in the State of Texas are implemented pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law, areas not recommended for wilderness designation need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of such plans, and areas recommended for wilderness designation shall be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation as may be required by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law; and

(5) unless expressly authorized by Congress, the Department of Agriculture shall not conduct any further statewide roadless area review and evaluation of national forest system lands in the State of Texas for the purpose of determining their suitability for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

(c) As used in this section, and as provided in section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, the term "revision" shall not include an "amendment" to a plan.

(d) The provisions of this section shall also apply to national forest system roadless lands in the State of Texas which are less than 5,000 acres in size.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially pleased to bring this consensus legislation before the House today because it represents a middle ground compromise on an issue that the committee has struggled with since 1979.

When the Forest Service completed its RARE II review of national forest roadless lands in 1979 it recommended that only 8,790 acres of roadless land be designated as wilderness in Texas. Texas conservationists noted that this recommendation amounted to a mere 1.1 percent of the national forest land in a State that currently has no national forest wilderness. They argued for a much larger wilderness package in order to set aside some areas to serve the recreation and wilderness needs of the fast growing Houston and Dallas metropolitan areas. In response to their concerns our former colleague, Bob Eckhardt, introduced legislation to designate some 63,000 acres of wilderness. The Subcommittee on Public Lands held a hearing on that legislation in 1980 and also visited several of the areas proposed for wilderness. However, due to sharp divisions of opinion on the wilderness issue, the legislation never went to markup. The impasse continued in the 97th Congress.

In 1983, Texas conservationists, buoyed by the increasing demand among hunters, other sportsmen's groups, and urban residents to set aside select areas for primitive recreation, initiated a new effort to secure wilderness protection for the 63,000 acres formerly proposed by Congressman Eckhardt. Their new bill, H.R. 3788 was introduced by Congressman JOHN BRYANT and cosponsored by Congressmen STEVE BARTLETT and MARTIN FROST, and hearings were held last November. During those hearings, I believe it became apparent to all concerned that further delay on the wilderness issue would be detrimental to both those proposing wilderness and those who wished to see national forest roadless areas opened for logging and other development. Fortunately, our colleagues, Congressmen CHARLES WILSON and JOHN BRYANT, agreed to participate in a series of negotiations aimed at resolving the issue. At several points in the negotiations, it would have been easy for both Members to adopt unyielding positions, and I am personally grateful for the patience, diligence, and flexibility they demonstrated in arriving at the consensus product before us today.

The compromise proposal will designate 34,000 acres of wilderness in east Texas, 25,000 in Congressman WILSON's district, 5,400 in Congressman SAM HALL's district and 4,000 in Congressman PHIL GRAMM's district, and strikes almost the exact middle ground between the administration's 8,790-acre position and the conservationists' 63,000-acre bill. Having hiked in several of the areas in question in 1980, I also believe we have selected the finest areas for wilderness protection.

For example, the proposed 12,000-acre Upland Island Wilderness is a virtual microcosm of the varying ecosystems of east Texas, ranging from palmetto, oak, cypress flats along the river bottom on the south to spacious and relatively open pine forests on the rolling hills to the north. Further to the east, the proposed 10,000-acre Indian Mounds Wilderness consists of gently rolling terrain with magnificent creek bottoms and several State champion trees. And the 3,000-acre Big Slough Wilderness will afford excellent hunting and canoeing opportunities, including a near circular canoe route and impressive stands of virgin timber along the Neches River. It should additionally be noted that the wilderness proposals lie with a 1½- to 2½-hour drive of Houston and a 4- to 5-hour drive from Dallas, and along with the Big Thicket National Preserve established a decade ago, will provide the only nearby opportunity for residents of those metropolitan areas to enjoy a wilderness type experience. Wilderness designation will also guarantee that hunters and other sportsmen are assured of at least some relatively large areas where they can pursue recreation in an environment undisturbed by roads, clearcuts and the other marks of development.

On the development side of the ledger, the "release" language of H.R. 3788 provides that the east Texas roadless lands not designated as wilderness may be made available for such nonwilderness uses as are determined appropriate through the Forest Service's land management planning process. This is an important concession by conservationists, because absent such "release" language the Forest Service would continue their ongoing RARE III wilderness studies of roadless lands in east Texas, and development activities such as timber harvest might be delayed or thwarted by administrative or judicial appeals.

As a final point, I would note that portions of the wilderness proposals of H.R. 3788 are underlain by privately owned mineral rights. Pursuant to the Wilderness Act, such rights will be honored. However, I believe it is the hope of all concerned that if and when an owner decides to exercise his rights in a wilderness area the Forest Service would work with him to determine if a mineral exchange or some other mutually acceptable arrangement could be made to avoid any undue disruption of wilderness values. I am informed that at any given time, certain national forest lands in east Texas are generally unleased and might be available for such a mineral rights exchange in order to protect wilderness values, and I am confident that the Forest Service will carefully examine this option if and when a problem arises. I also note that the potential for wilderness/mineral conflicts will decrease over time as some of the privately owned rights are due to expire in the near future and others may ultimately be sold to the Government under the willing buyer-willing seller authority of section 5 of the Wilderness Act.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 3788, as amended, is a meritorious proposal which will successfully resolve the longstanding dispute over wilderness in east Texas. Due to the hard work of Congressmen WILSON and BRYANT, we have come up with a proposal that equitably balances the interests concerned, and I, once again, cannot commend the Members enough for their hard work and good faith in reaching this agreement. I also note that our compromise proposal has been introduced and cosponsored by Senators TOWER and BENTSEN in the other body, which is but another indication of the overall consensus nature of this bill. I, therefore, urge my colleagues' strong support of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Texas wilderness bill contains a number of provisions to which the Forest Service strongly object.

While I realize the bill is the end product of lengthy negotiations and debate between those affected, I believe it is essential that all Members know what is involved.

The five areas to be designated as wilderness contain 34,400 acres which exceeds the RARE II recommendation of three areas by 8,790 acres. The Forest Service opposes these additions.

More importantly, the Department objects to the land exchange and timber sale provisions inserted in the bill. The following is the precise wording of their report dated just yesterday, May 7.

Sections 4 (b) and (c) of the Committee bill have been amended to mandate a land exchange between the Forest Service and Temple-Eastex Corporation to acquire private lands lying within two of the areas designated as wilderness. About 2,725 acres of National Forest land would be conveyed for about 2,735 acres of Temple-Eastex Corporation lands. This exchange of nearly equal land areas has several objectionable features. Forest Service estimates of value based on transaction evidence, show the National Forest land to be as much as $1.6 million more valuable than the private lands. The difference in value is attributable to the larger volume and better quality of the timber stands on the National Forest lands. Existing authorities, under which the Forest Service regularly exchanges land with private parties, require an equal value transaction. We strongly recommend, therefore, that the bill be amended to provide that the land exchange be based on equal value.

While I commend my colleague from Texas (Mr. WILSON) for his efforts in reaching a compromise on acreage and the number of wilderness areas, I believe we need to take a closer look at the other provisions of the bill to make sure we are not "ripping off" the taxpayer.

There are clearly hidden costs to creating wilderness both in terms of opportunities lost to develop the resource of an area and now we are being asked to actually buy the land.

I intend to oppose the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the good gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT), a strong supporter of the legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3788, the Texas wilderness bill, which I cosponsored in its original form and which I also endorse in its current form.

I commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING), and I also commend the ranking Republican on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), as well as both my colleagues from Texas who are sponsors of the bill, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRYANT) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. WILSON).

As you will recall, the original legislation designated 63,700 acres in 10 components of the national wilderness preservation system in the national forests of Texas. This current compromise bill sets aside a more modest 34,000 acres for wilderness designation in only five of these components.

The largest State in the lower 48, composed of 168 million acres, Texas, has only 46,850 acres, or 0.028 percent, designated as wilderness. In contrast, the State of New Mexico, less than half the size of Texas, has more than 32 times as much designated wilderness. Montana, which is a little larger than half the size of Texas, has roughly 73 times the wilderness acreage. California, which is about two-thirds the size of Texas, has about 58 times as much wilderness as Texas does.

Mr. Speaker, a critical need exists for additional wilderness areas to be preserved for future generations in the State of Texas. The only current designated wilderness area in Texas is located in the Guadalupe Mountains National Park in west Texas. West Texas encompasses a vastly different type of ecosystem than that in east Texas. The east Texas parcels under consideration are incredibly unique, and they are worth setting aside.

The east Texas wilderness contains vast stands of longleaf pine, as well as the national champion long leaf pine, the largest Florida basswood, and the largest cherrybark oak in Texas national forests. The Indian Mounds component of this bill contains distinctive plants such as greenvein orchids and yellow lady's slipper, as well as fossil beds, and a permanent spring pool where pioneer wagon trains watered. In preserving these areas, we are protecting not only a unique ecosystem, but we are also preserving a bit of Texas history.

Texas needs more designated wilderness because Guadalupe Mountains National Park in west Texas is far away and inaccessible from the major population centers of the State. The wilderness areas designated in this bill in east Texas are in fact within less than 5 hours' drive from Houston, San Antonio, Austin, and Dallas-Fort Worth.

Ten million people live within a 5-hour drive from the wilderness areas set aside in this bill.

As a result of our recent economic growth and urban expansion, the demand for a variety of outdoor wilderness activities in east Texas in spiraling. Wilderness designation will allow these pristine areas to remain available for nonimpairing recreational uses such as hiking, camping, hunting, horseback riding, and nature study, within the reach, and uniquely so, of urban centers.

Now, that is not to say that all outdoor recreation areas should be designated as wilderness. The whole concept of preservation and recreation require a mix of uses. East Texas already has national forests and national parks and Corps of Engineer lakes. We need designated wilderness areas to be set aside to complement these other uses.

Now, several times I personally visited the areas under consideration for wilderness designation in this bill and in the earlier version. Several weeks ago, I visited this wilderness with my son. From firsthand experience, I can report to my colleagues in the House that nothing compares with the east Texas wilderness in a way to rest the mind and invigorate the body.

Texas wilderness areas are a precious natural resource. They are not infinite. The simple fact is that Texas needs this bill to preserve our wilderness lands. With your help, we can preserve them now, for we cannot do it later. These tracts must be protected as a part of our Texas heritage for our children and grandchildren to enjoy.

Now, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) correctly noted that there has been one question raised about the cost. Mr. Chairman, I would point out to this House that, in fact, the cost estimate of $1,600,000, that is not correct; it is somewhat of a frivolous estimate because there is no out-of-pocket cost to the Treasury. These lands are already owned by the Federal Government, with the exception of some land swaps, so there will be no dollar cost to the Treasury. In fact, the United States will be exchanging private land for public land on a roughly equal basis.

So, Mr. Chairman, to summarize my support and the reason for the support that this House should give to this bill:

First, there are no wilderness areas in east Texas now and this provides a modest 34,000 acres.

Second, there are significant and unique ecosystems to be protected for future generations.

Third, unlike wilderness areas in other States, these 34,000 acres are close to urban populations.

Fourth, having some of the forests designated as official wilderness areas will add to the diversity and to the enjoyment of the outdoors.

So I congratulate my colleagues from Texas (Mr. BRYANT and Mr. WILSON) on their success in developing this compromise measure and I urge my colleagues here in the House to approve it today.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished colleague from Texas (Mr. BRYANT) who was one of the Members who worked out this very commendable compromise.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, this is a proud day for Texas and for the legions of citizens, public interest organizations, and environmental groups throughout my State and the Nation who have struggled so long and so tirelessly to preserve for all time, as wilderness, some of the most unusual and scenic woodlands in the world.

Today, after years of hoping and planning by so many, and months of delicate and occasionally frustrating negotiations spearheaded by Congressman JOHN SEIBERLING, I am pleased to ask this House to approve H.R. 3788, the Texas wilderness bill.

This compromise measure secures for generations to come 34,400 acres—five relatively small, but spectacular tracts in the four national forests of east Texas. Enactment of this legislation, a companion to which has been introduced in the other body by Texas Senators LLOYD BENTSEN, and JOHN TOWER will provide the only wilderness areas within convenient reach of the majority of Texans.

While I initially sought to place a much larger area within the national wilderness preservation system, I am satisfied that Texans today and tomorrow will have the opportunity to visit and enjoy some of the finest examples of our dwindling natural heritage in its most pristine form, if this bill becomes law.

In addition to the natural physical beauty of these areas, which will almost double the amount of wilderness acreage in Texas, they contain an array of champion trees and various species of plants and animals which exist in few, if any, other places in the Nation or the world.

By saving these few acres—less than one-quarter of 1 percent of all the commercial timberland in Texas—we will protect forever an irreplaceable bit of our natural heritage.

In spite of its vast 171.1 million acres and astounding population growth, Texas has only one small parcel of wilderness—46,850 acres in the remote Guadalupe National Park of far west Texas—as compared with more than 80 million acres designated in other States since 1964. Its distance from the major population centers in the eastern half of the State removes it from general access and significant human enjoyment.

Each of the five areas in this compromise bill is within easy driving distance of Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, and the other metropolitan areas where most Texans live and work. Each is composed entirely of public lands. Each is unique. And each—without the essential wilderness designation we seek today—would eventually be clearcut to the bare ground for commercial timber.

The astounding population growth of Texas—due in large measure to vast migration from the Northeast—constitutes a severe threat to Texas' once lavish and numerous natural areas. Enactment of this legislation will help keep a tiny piece of Texas as it is.

Only by giving these prime examples of nature's beauty and abundance wilderness designation will our children and grandchildren know what so much of Texas was like when their ancestors first explored and settled what is now east Texas. Only with wilderness designation will these areas continue to be as desirable as they are today for hunting, fishing, hiking, camping, and nature studies.

I am also grateful to two of my colleagues, without whose diligence, cooperation, and good faith commitment, the Texas wilderness bill would continue to be only the dream that it has been for two decades.

Congressman CHARLES WILSON, my colleague from Texas who well represented the divergent interests of his district during our lengthy negotiations, and Congressman JOHN SEIBERLING, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks who forged the compromise, worked long and hard to write the version of the Texas wilderness bill that is before us today.

They have earned my thanks and deserve the appreciation of the people of Texas.

Although I take pride in being the author of the Texas wilderness bill, today's victory is not that of any one individual. It belongs to literally thousands of Texans who never became tired of this task, who never lost sight of the goal or lost faith that it could and would be achieved.

Today's victory belongs to the members of the Texas Committee on Natural Resources, the Sierra Club, the sportsmen's clubs of Texas, the Houston Sportsmen's Association, the Texas Independent Birdhunters Association, the Texas League of Women Voters, the Audubon Society, and countless other civic, community, and conservation groups. It belongs to everyone who wrote a letter, signed a petition, made a phone call, attended a meeting, or only hoped for the preservation of the Texas wilderness.

Fellow members, today I ask you to vote for H.R. 3788 to preserve for future generations a small part of the Texas natural heritage that we still have today.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.)

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Ohio and also the gentlemen from Texas (Mr. BRYANT) and (Mr. WILSON) and (Mr. BARTLETT) from the Dallas area for their work on this bill.

It pleases me to see these gentlemen, especially the gentleman from Ohio who has praised the virtues of east Texas. We are talking about 34,000 acres in this bill, however, I live down there next to it and you can talk about east Texas in its entirety, as we are talking about this 34,000 acres.

We invite anyone to come down there and visit with us. I think the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) knows more about wilderness areas than any person in this Congress and we appreciate what he has done in these areas.

I do want to bring up one point with the gentleman if I may. When we were discussing this measure sometime back, the question came to my mind about the mineral interests that are owned by individuals within the confines of the boundaries of this 34,000-acre tract. It is my understanding, and I would like to ask clarification from the gentleman from Ohio, that the mineral interests that are owned by individuals under this acreage designated the Texas wilderness bill, or H.R. 3788, will not be affected. The ownership of those mineral interests will still be owned and subject to use by the people who own the interests.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I am happy to yield.

□ 1420

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is absolutely correct. Under the Wilderness Act such rights will be honored, must be honored. However, if and when an owner decides to exercise his rights in a wilderness area in the national forest, it is our intent the Forest Service would work with him to determine if a mineral exchange or some other mutually acceptable arrangement could be made to avoid any undue disruption of the wilderness values. I am informed that at any given time there are enough national forest lands in east Texas that are normally unleased for mineral purposes that could be available for mineral rights exchange in order to provide that kind of quid pro quo if the owners are interested in engaging in it. And I certainly think it is the intent of the committee that the Forest Service carefully examine this option if and when a question arises of that sort, and the Service tries to minimize wilderness mineral conflicts by recognizing the rights of the owners of the minerals fully, as does the existing law.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. If I may direct another question to the gentleman, and let me make it in the form of a question, suppose that a person owns 200 acres of minerals under this wilderness bill and the lease is for a term of 5 or 10 years. And there is other acreage outside of the Wilderness Act which of course this bill would not cover. But suppose that the operator needed this 200 acres to form a unit, to drill a well for gas which would be a 640-acre unit with a 10-percent tolerance, or a lesser amount for oil, whatever the case may be. Would the mineral interest owner be deprived of the right to place his or her mineral interest into this producing unit or drilling unit under the provisions of this act, of this bill?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I do not know enough about mineral law particularly in Texas to give a definitive answer. But let me simply say this: That this bill would in no way change the rights of the existing mineral leases or mineral ownership from what they would be in the absence of this legislation.

So to the extent that the owner of the mineral interests can now make that kind of grouping he would still be able to do so.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I want to make perfectly clear for the RECORD, if I can follow the gentleman's hypothetical problem, if there is a unit of 600 acres and the individual owners owned the mineral rights in the area which we are setting aside as wilderness, they could use that 200 acres to make the full 600 acres, if there was no disturbance on the surface of the land.

I believe that would be correct. That is No. 1.

No. 2, though, to make sure your position is protected, and those that own those mineral rights, we must make sure that the Forest Service, once we classify this as wilderness, does not write regulations so prohibitive that they would force the individual to exchange even if he would not want to. That is what I think you are seeking.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I agree with my distinguished friend and colleague from Alaska, except that I would say that the Forest Service must allow that mineral owner to develop those rights and make whatever surface disturbance is necessary to do so.

The only control the Forest Service has is to require no more disturbance than is necessary to fully exploit those rights is made.

But that is true of the national forests, even in the absence of wilderness. The Forest Service is supposed to protect the surface to the degree that it can be done, subject to the overriding right of the mineral owner to do whatever is necessary.

So as far as I am concerned, it is the intent of this legislation to make no change whatsoever in the rights of those mineral owners.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. The thing that gave me concern was a paragraph on page 14 of the report which reads:

Lands designated as wilderness are also withdrawn from mineral activity under the terms of the National Wilderness Preservation Act. No significant loss of mineral receipts is expected to result from this bill, however, because mineral resources can be removed under valid existing rights.

As I understand the gentleman from Alaska, and I concur, if this hypothetical 200 acres is made a part of the drilling unit, there is no reason why you could not, I assume, directionally drill under this acreage?

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is correct.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Or to include this within the drilling unit. I assume that you would not have the right, an operator would not have the right to drill a well on this 200-acre tract even though the surface is not owned by the mineral owner? There would be no drilling on that tract; is that correct?

Mr. SEIBERLING. No, that is not correct. To the extent that the mineral owner must use the surface to actually develop his mineral rights, he is entitled to do so, even though it is in a wilderness area.

All this language means that the gentleman read from the committee report is that the area is withdrawn from further mineral leasing by the Forest Service beyond what rights have already been leased or otherwise exist. So what it means is that, if there were adjoining areas under which there was no privately existing mineral right or lease, that the Forest Service would no longer be able to lease adjacent areas within the wilderness area.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Again I think what the paragraph the gentleman read or the comment he read from the report refers to is only the Federal lands.

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is correct.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. It does not refer to the privately owned lands that are incorporated in the wilderness area. Their rights are protected. And I go back to the 200 acres, knowing that these units have to be made up because of the size under Texas law, I believe, and this would not affect, this legislation would protect the rights of the private owner. It just affects any other Federal lands that have not been leased. That is my interpretation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. If I might direct a question to either of you gentlemen: If this 200 acres that we are talking about, if the lease expired without any development under the existing lease, the mineral owner would still own the mineral rights, of course.

Mr. SEIBERLING. It would depend. If the lease was a lease of the mineral interests then when the lease expired then his rights expired. So if the lease requires timely development within a certain period of time then he will have to do that or else his rights will expire.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I understand, Mr. Chairman. But many times in Texas you will have a 10-year lease or a 3-year lease, and that lease might expire because of nonproduction. And some other company or individual may come along at the time of the expiration of the original lease, or sometime prior thereto, if there is not development, and take a lease on it again for another 5 years.

Will this bill prevent that mineral owner from subsequently leasing his or her land?

Mr. SEIBERLING. The bill would prohibit the Forest Service from subsequently leasing land with respect to which a previous lease had expired.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. The point I am making, sir, is after this lease expires, that does not mean that the mineral interests revert to the Federal Government, does it?

Mr. SEIBERLING. No. If the mineral interests were privately owned.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. I am speaking of privately owned leases, private ownership.

Mr. SEIBERLING. That would continue forever, as long as that owner decided to continue to hold that ownership.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. And could that owner in the future execute another oil or gas or mineral lease on that 200 acres?

Mr. SEIBERLING. The answer is yes.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. In the future?

Mr. SEIBERLING. In the future, definitely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to advise the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that he has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Yes, it does.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I would ask the gentleman from Alaska if he would yield me time to respond to his question.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I would like to respond about the Forest Service evaluation of the land.

On an acre-for-acre basis the Government will get 10.6 acres more than it would give to Temple-Eastex, which is the owner of the land that would be exchanged. And while the Forest Service lands involved might have slightly higher timber values, they are nothing like $1,600,000. In fact, the Temple-Eastex lands have higher land value as land per se, because a significant part of them are adjoining the Toledo Bend Reservoir, which makes them very valuable from the standpoint of development for recreational and subdivision development.

So it is the committee's view that any slight differences in timber values are balanced out by the higher subdivision value of the Temple-Eastex lands. And even to the extent there may be differences in timber values, I would simply like to put a couple of facts in the RECORD here because I think it is very important.

The Forest Service estimates of $1,600,000 would amount to approximately $600 per acre, an unrealistically large difference given the fact that an acre of east Texas forest land is generally selling for only about $1,000 to $1,500.

Temple-Eastex estimates the difference, if any, to be less than $70 per acre. The committee believes Temple-Eastex's estimate is much closer to the actual fact for several reasons.

First, the land involved on both sides of this exchange is simply typical forest land common to east Texas. There is no evidence that the Forest Service lands are better growing sites or otherwise better suited to timber production. The Forest Service has not even got an appraisal. They simply pulled this figure out of the air.

Aerial photos indicate that 408 acres of the Temple-Eastex land versus 550 acres of the Forest Service land to be exchanged have been converted to higher yielding pine plantations. Pine trees are more valuable in east Texas than hardwoods. However, this is only a 142-acre difference in lands that have been planted.

Finally, I point out that both lands have some clearcuts on them already; of about equal proportions. And that the hardwood that has been left has little value in either case.

I would like to make a couple of other observations that I do think are important to answer some of the points raised in the Forest Service's letter, which, incidentally was received after the committee had already reported this bill.

The Forest Service says the proposed exchange is imprecise in its description of lands to be exchanged. This is difficult to accept because all of the tracts are identified by tract number and by maps referenced in the bill and most of them are surrounded by other ownership, so that they are especially easy to identify.

Furthermore, the Forest Service had already been negotiating with Temple-Eastex on some of these lands. The reason they say it is imprecise is that there is certain land, about 400 acres of Temple-Eastex lands that are part of the tracts to be exchanged, that are outside of the boundaries of the wilderness areas, and they say they are not sure whether those are to be exchanged.

Let me make it absolutely clear: Those lands are to be included in the exchange. One of the reasons is to enable the Forest Service to consolidate its holdings including the holdings outside of the wilderness area and avoid leaving Temple-Eastex with very small tracts of land as in-holdings inside the national forest.

Finally, the Forest Service indicates that cutting and sales are already underway. The only place where cutting is underway is a minor thinning sale which, as far as the committee is concerned, can go right ahead. And two of the three other areas of sales are areas where the purchasers have agreed to the termination of their contracts and the substitution of timber elsewhere, and we think that the third one can probably be worked out.

Finally, the Forest Service says 90 days is not enough to complete that exchange. Since the parcels are already identified and mapped out, we believe that there is no reason to take even 90 days to do it.

However, the Forest Service supervisor, who was the person behind this letter, I am sure, has been fighting this legislation for years, ever since the RARE–II program was first promulgated. I think the letter is simply a part of the same foot dragging we have encountered before.

Now the Congressmen concerned have worked this thing out, and it does seem to me that it is time to push this matter over the dam so that the uncertainty is ended, and the forest products industry, the Forest Service and everybody else has a clear idea of where they stand.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman.

For clarification and to make sure the RECORD is absolutely clear, it is my understanding in fact there is no acquisition or purchase with Treasury dollars of land but there is merely a swap and that some private land is set aside that is more suitable for wilderness designation is being exchanged almost on an acre-for-acre basis with the existing Forest Service land.

So the $1,600,000 allegation of cost is not an actual dollar check that would be written out of the Treasury. In fact, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) does not believe it is a cost at all.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield, that is absolutely correct. Furthermore, if the Forest Service went through its normal exchange process, they would be spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in environmental impact statements and all the bureaucratic rigamarole, so by avoiding that we would be saving them some actual cash.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for clarifying that point, because it needed to be.

Mr. SEIBERLING. In any event, no cash outlay is involved.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is no cash involved.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3788, legislation to designate 34,400 acres of east Texas land as wilderness areas. This bill represents an equitable compromise to preserve a significant area of east Texas woodlands for future generations of all Americans, and I commend my fellow Texans for their leadership on this issue.

Currently, the State of Texas has but a single designated wilderness area. Located in Guadalupe National Park, west Texas, this area is vastly different from the wilderness acreage proposed under H.R. 3788. The unique character and environment of the woodland areas of east Texas must be preserved. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3788, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1129, DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1129) to authorize appropriations for programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of April 12, 1984.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are able to bring to the floor for consideration the conference report on S. 1129, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1984. The bill reauthorizes the domestic volunteer programs of the action agency through fiscal year 1986.

These programs include in title I the volunteers in service to America program (VISTA), service learning programs, and special volunteer programs. Title II reauthorizes the Foster Grandparent program, the retired senior volunteer program and the Senior Companion program. Title IV of the act provides authority for the overall administration and management of the ACTION Agency and its programs.

Before discussing the details of the conference report, I would like to take this opportunity to thank my full committee chairman CARL PERKINS of Kentucky for his commitment in guiding this bill through conference and his invaluable role in bringing the report to the floor today. My colleague IKE ANDREWS of North Carolina, chairman of the Human Resources Subcommittee, also deserves special thanks for his cooperation in developing this bill and for his support throughout the entire reauthorization process.

There were more than 50 points of difference between the House and Senate bills, and the report before us is the result of months of negotiations and give and take between the House and Senate conferees on both sides of the aisle. The result of these extensive and prolonged negotiations is a bill that enjoys broad bipartisan support by the conferees, as well as strong support from affected constituency groups, senior citizens organizations, private voluntary organizations, and grassroots self-help groups that are most dramatically impacted by this legislation.

Prior to the Easter recess, the Senate approved this conference report by unanimous consent. In October of last year the House overwhelmingly approved its version of the bill by a vote of 312 to 30. I ask for your similar bipartisan support today.

There are a number of specific issues addressed in the conference report that I would like to comment upon.

As chairman of the authorizing subcommittee for title I of the act, I am particularly pleased with provisions that should begin the process of restoring and revitalizing VISTA and reverse the "lingering death" the program has been subjected to over the last 3 years.

Since 1980 VISTA's budget has been slashed from $34 million to under $12 million, the number of VISTA volunteers has dropped from over 5,000 to under 2,000, and the number of VISTA projects has declined from 840 to 450. This has occurred at a time when the Census Bureau has reported the greatest increases in poverty in two decades. Today more than 34 million Americans are living in poverty with another 12 million surviving only marginally above poverty levels.

These poverty figures are the highest since 1965—the first full year of the VISTA program. In the face of these developments, VISTA volunteers and projects have been continuing to make contributions to meeting poor people's most desperate needs all across our Nation. I know, first hand, the kind of irreplaceable role VISTA volunteers are playing in feeding the hungry in Pittsburgh, through the Hunger Action Council's Community Food Bank, and in combating illiteracy throughout the State of Pennsylvania through the Beaver County Federated Library System. Recently I visited, with my colleagues Congressman CORRADA and Congressman BOUCHER, VISTA projects in some of America's poorest neighborhoods. VISTA volunteers there are providing critical assistance in fighting alcohol and drug abuse, increasing educational opportunities for the young and combating the effects of poverty on the elderly. We heard moving pleas for more VISTA volunteers, as well as for support and training for those volunteers.

S. 1129 will begin the road back to restoring VISTA to its full, and desperately needed, potential. The conference report calls for minimum volunteer service year levels of 2,000 volunteers in 1984, 2,200 in 1985, and 2,400 in 1986. These service year levels translate into minimum funding levels of $14.4 million, $15.8 million, and $17.3 million. The bill also provides authorizing levels for fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986 of $17, $20, and $25 million respectively for the VISTA program.

I want to stress that the conferees intend that the VISTA volunteer service year levels be minimum levels, not ceilings. The dollar figures for both the mandatory minimum service year levels and the reauthorization levels are far lower than the VISTA funding floors approved by this body last fall. I intend to work with the Appropriations Committee to insure that the VISTA appropriations is as close as possible to its authorization level in each of the years of this reauthorization.

Further, I will be urging the Appropriations Committee to provide an emergency supplemental appropriation for VISTA in fiscal year 1984. The current continuing resolution level of $11.8 million will have a devastating effect upon the VISTA program by the end of this fiscal year. According to the Congressional Research Service, the number of actual VISTA volunteers will drop from the current 1,950 to 860 by September 1984 if no new funds are appropriated. Parts of the country with some of the greatest need for VISTA, the South and Southwest, will lose nearly all of their VISTA volunteers. In fact, VISTA will require an additional $2 million in fiscal year 1984 just to maintain the 1983 level of volunteers. I hope my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee will agree that we should not allow this devastation to occur. In addition to laying the basis for VISTA's revival in 1985 and 1986, we must keep the program alive in 1984.

The conference agreement touches upon several areas of concern to me in regard to the current administration of the VISTA program. These include the failure to recruit volunteers on a national basis, the lack of public promotion of VISTA, and the inadequate level of support services, training, and supervision provided to VISTA volunteers and projects. VISTA sponsoring organizations have repeatedly stressed the importance of preservice training, career development, and the need for other essential support functions such as adequate funds for transportation and supervision of VISTA volunteers. As the conference report states, these services, small in cost, are often critical to a project's success and ability to continue once VISTA assistance is phased out.

The amendments included in S. 1129 should make it clear that Congress intends VISTA to be a national program, providing opportunity for service to all Americans, regardless of geographic location, income level, age, sex, and professional experience. Locally recruited volunteers from the poverty-stricken areas where VISTA projects are located have done exemplary work as VISTA's. But it has not been, and is not now, the intent of Congress to limit volunteer opportunities to only those individuals who reside in communities that have approved VISTA projects and who are fortunate enough to be aware of an available VISTA position at one of those projects.

It is time that VISTA's name reappear on the ACTION agency stationery, that VISTA reinstate its "800" information number and that recruitment and public awareness efforts be made to bring broader attention to the program and increased recognition of the invaluable contribution that over 75,000 VISTA volunteers have made since 1965.

Another area of concern addressed by the conference agreement is in regard to the ACTION agency's use of its noncareer and political hiring authorities. The conference agreement includes a ceiling of 8.5 percent on all personnel who may be in the combined total of certain categories of noncareer employees. Specifically, these include schedule C employees, experts, consultants, and temporaries at the GS-8 level and higher. The House version of the bill included schedule B employees in the list of restricted employees, but these employees were dropped from the restricted list in conference.

Although House conferees were willing to drop schedule B's from the restricted list in an effort to reach a compromise, I am hopeful that the Office of Personnel Management will take some action in regard to the agency's schedule B hiring authority once a final report from the General Accounting Office on ACTION personnel practices is available. The authority is granted for the purpose of employing individuals with highly specialized skills for specific short-term tasks that otherwise could not be attained through normal civil service hiring procedures. A GAO statement of findings provided to the Committee on Education and Labor indicates that ACTION has used the authority inappropriately, and has avoided civil service procedures to hire employees who have replaced "riffed" career civil servants.

According to GAO data, the ACTION agency has perhaps the greatest percentage of noncareer employees of any Federal agency. As of September 30, 1983, ACTION's noncareer employees were 18.6 percent of ACTION total staff, about 3 percent higher than in November 1981 when ACTION had twice as many employees. The conference agreement regarding a noncareer personnel ceiling for the agency is in response to these figures. It is also in response to the fact that ACTION has hired many noncareer political employees to replace riffed career employees who were knowledgeable and concerned about the programs in the Agency. Although the 8.5 percent cap in S. 1129 is not likely to have an immediate or drastic impact on ACTION hiring practices, it is evidence of congressional concern and an indication that we fully intend to continue to monitor agency personnel policies in the future.

S. 1129 represents a comprehensive approach to President Reagan's challenge to "restore, in our time, the American spirit of voluntary service, of cooperation, of private and community initiatives; a spirit that flows like a mighty river through the history of our Nation." These programs have been tapping that spirit for many years, to the benefit of millions of disadvantaged Americans who need assistance in their struggle for a better life for themselves, their families and their communities. I urge your support for this conference report so that the vital contributions of volunteers, both young and old, may continue.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF S. 1129, DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

TITLE I, PART A, VISTA

Broadens the opportunities for persons from all walks of life, geographic areas, ages, and economic levels to serve as VISTA volunteers.

Establishes as an objective of the VISTA program the generation of private sector resources and the encouragement of part-time volunteer service at the local level.

Provides that if a VISTA applicant who is locally recruited becomes unavailable for service prior to the commencement of service, the VISTA sponsoring organization may replace the VISTA applicant with another qualified applicant approved by ACTION/VISTA.

Requires that 20% of all VISTA volunteers be 55 years of age or older.

Expands the list of possible VISTA volunteer assignments to include addressing the programs of the homeless, jobless, hungry, illiterate or functionally illiterate youth or other persons, and special needs connected to alcohol and drug abuse. These additions are not intended to restrict activities to these areas or other areas already specified in the Act, nor is it intended to eliminate from eligibility other programs or projects that meet VISTA's anti-poverty criteria and purpose.

Provides for low-income community volunteers as well as nationally-recruited specialist volunteers, in addition to requiring that the Director make national efforts to attract volunteers into the program.

Requires career development and individual plans for job advancement for each low-income volunteer. These efforts are to be coordinated, where appropriate, with local private industry councils (PIC's).

Requires the Director to provide VISTA volunteers with pre-service, and where appropriate, in-service training.

Mandates that ACTION conduct biennial evaluations of the VISTA program and other ACTION programs.

Requires the Director to establish a mechanism for meaningful participation by program beneficiaries in the planning, developing and implementing of VISTA programs.

TITLE I, PART B, SERVICE LEARNING

Amends the Service Learning portion of the Act to require that any project assisted under this Part meet the anti-poverty criteria of the VISTA program and contain a clear educational and service component.

TITLE I, PART C, SPECIAL VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

Mandates the establishment of criteria for the awarding of Part C (Demonstration/Citizen Participation) grants and contracts on the basis of merit and an equitable geographic distribution of programs. All grants in excess of $50,000 are to be selected through a competitive process.

TITLE IV, ADMINISTRATION AND COORDINATION

Amends the Act to state that ACTION is to provide a focal point for volunteers at the national, state and local level.

Strikes the authority for the appointment of two Presidential appointees as Associate Directors, two Presidential appointees as Assistant Directors, and provides for the appointment of an Associate Director for Domestic and Anti-Poverty Operations, and three Assistant Directors. One such Assistant Director shall be responsible for VISTA and other anti-poverty programs under Title I, one shall be primarily responsible for the Older American Volunteer Programs, and one for liaison with private voluntary organizations.

Places a cap of 8.5% on certain non-career employees in the following categories: Schedule C's, experts, consultants and temporaries over the GS-8 level.

Repeals the National Volunteer Advisory Council effective January 1, 1986.

Changes the requirement for periodic evaluation of ACTION programs to a biennial requirement and requires reports to Congress to reflect findings and actions taken as a result of final evaluations.

Requires ACTION to provide all grantees denied renewal funding 75-days advance notice as well as the grounds for the denial. In a case where the project is denied refunding for failure to comply with the terms and conditions of the grant award, the recipient must be afforded an opportunity for an informal hearing at a location convenient to the recipient agency before an impartial hearing examiner mutually agreed to by ACTION and the recipient.

Deletes the Director's ability to waive requirements for 30-days public notice in the Federal Register of all regulations prior to their effective date and the Director's ability to waive the 45-days notice requirement to Congress prior to the implementation of final regulations.

Authorizes for $1.8 million for Service Learning Programs (Part B, Title 1) in FY 84, 85 and 86.

Authorizes for $1.984 for Special Volunteer Programs (Part C, Title 1) for FY 84, 85 and 86.

Prohibits the use of VISTA funds or volunteers for any other ACTION program or project unless the program or project meets VISTA's strict anti-poverty criteria.

Authorizes for the RSVP programs $29.7 million in FY 84, $30.4 million in FY 85 and $31.1 million in FY 86.

Authorizes for the Foster Grandparents Program $54.3 million in FY 84, $56.7 million in FY 85 and $58.7 million in FY 86.

Authorizes for the Senior Companion program $27.8 million in FY 84, $28.3 million in FY 85 and $28.6 million in FY 86.

Authorizes an appropriation for Administration and Coordination of the ACTION Agency and its programs of $25.8 million in FY 84, $27 million in FY 85 and $28 million in FY 86.

TITLE IV—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Provides for a three-year reauthorization for VISTA of $17 million for FY 84; $20 million for FY 85, and $25 million for FY 86.

Establishes minimum VISTA service year levels—guaranteed VISTA funding levels—that must be funded first, prior to providing funds for Part B (Service Learning) and Part C (Special Volunteer Programs).

Mandates that of the funds appropriated for VISTA, there first must be made available funds adequate to produce a minimum of: 2,000 VISTA service years in FY 84, 2,200 VISTA service years in FY 85, and 2,400 VISTA service years in FY 86.

Specifies that in FY 84 the service year level is contingent upon the receipt of an additional appropriation in excess of the current $15.6 million appropriated for all Title 1 programs under the Continuing Resolution.

Prohibits the use of VISTA funds or volunteers for any other ACTION program or project unless the program or project meets VISTA's strict anti-poverty criteria.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this bill and this conference report is probably going to pass anyway. But I do rise in opposition to the report as it is reported to S. 1129 as reported to the House floor.

I had hoped during the course of the negotiations in the conference to be able to submit a conference report that I could stand here and support, but I cannot, because the final version of the conference report, in effect, includes a funding floor, so I cannot and will not support it.

I strongly believe in volunteerism. I recognize the vital contribution that volunteers have made to every facet of our society. And thus I am opposed to any Federal venture which competes with, restricts, or channels the development and expansion of locally generated volunteer efforts.

I believe that S. 1129, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1983, as reported by the conference, would do just that.

Now from the beginning of the reauthorization process I have consistently opposed the extension of VISTA with a funding floor. I have recognized and stated on every occasion the value of other volunteer programs authorized under the act, the volunteer programs for the elderly, the volunteer programs for youth, and the community volunteer demonstration programs. These programs have merit. They represent legitimate forms of Federal support for volunteer activities.

But unfortunately, these very important programs and their continuation continue to be held hostage by those that would attempt to guarantee a funding floor for VISTA.

So I continue to be distressed that this legislation here before us does include a version of the funding floor.

Inclusion of such a funding floor is an example of a serious abuse of the legislative process.

In order to insure reauthorization of volunteer programs for which there was strong support, many conferees, who opposed a funding floor for VISTA, agreed to an assurance that monies first be made available for a specific number of VISTA volunteer service years before funds could be appropriated for other volunteer programs under title I of the act.

Now this agreement, perhaps in different words, represents in effect an endorsement of a funding floor for VISTA.

Such an endorsement is ill-advised. In this time of limited resources that must be stretched, a funding floor for VISTA could jeopardize appropriations for the other vital volunteer programs in title I. Such a funding floor, by whatever name, will reduce the flexibility of the ACTION agency to respond to new and to emerging priorities. The floor constitutes an obvious intrusion into the authority of the Appropriations Committee.

And finally, a guarantee of a specified number of VISTA volunteer service years is an illustration of blatant fiscal protectionism.

This is a time when Congress should begin to carefully select our legislative objectives and to put aside or to challenge all those that would sacrifice some much-needed programs in the interest of just one program, the VISTA program in this case.

For these reasons, the ranking member of the Committee on Education and Labor and I did not sign the conference report. We urge our colleagues to vote "No" on S. 1129.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on S. 1129 have just recently completed the long and difficult task of coming to an agreement on two very different versions of legislation reauthorizing the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973. I oppose the report of the conferees with some reluctance because I know of the tremendous amount of work which has gone into the production of the agreement. I cannot, however, agree to support the conference report because it contains what I consider to be a fundamental flaw—it continues the so-called funding floor for the VISTA program.

The VISTA funding floor operates by stating that of any appropriation made under title I of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act, a set amount must first be committed to the VISTA program. In so doing, the activities authorized under part B—the service-learning program—and part C—demonstration projects—are effectively held hostage to VISTA funding.

Throughout the consideration of this legislation, I have expressed opposition to VISTA and the VISTA funding floor. I have done so, for two principal reasons:

First, a funding floor denies the appropriations committees of both Houses their prerogative to establish priorities among various authorized activities under the three parts of title I. The Appropriations Committee must, in effect, agree to meet the VISTA funding floor or resign itself to fund no activities under part B on part C; and Second, the VISTA program itself merits no special consideration in the appropriations process. It is, first of all, not really a volunteer program in that the participants receive stipends for their service. It is also a program which has been subject to criticism and controversy throughout its history.

I firmly believe that if the VISTA program is to be continued, it must be forced to compete on an equal footing with other domestic spending programs. S. 1129 continues the bad practice of protecting VISTA from competition from other volunteer programs at the ACTION agency.

Because the conference report did not address this basic problem, I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, to further clarify the gentleman's objections to the VISTA floor funding, I would like to say that since the year 1980 VISTA's budget has been slashed in our austerity measures in Congress from $34 million to the present year of under $12 million. The number of VISTA volunteers has dropped from over 5,000 volunteers throughout our Nation to under 2,000. And the number of VISTA projects has declined from 840 projects to 450 projects.

This has occurred at a time when the Census Bureau is reporting to us that we are experiencing a great increase in poverty in our country. Poverty among American families is at its highest level for the past two decades. Today more than 34 million Americans are living in poverty, with another 12 million surviving only on marginally above poverty levels.

The VISTA floor funding, which is perhaps misnamed by the gentleman from Texas, is merely a mandate that the VISTA volunteers could go no less than 2,000 VISTA service years in fiscal year 1984; 2,200 VISTA service years in 1985; and 2,400 VISTA service years in 1986, only to keep the VISTA Program from disappearing totally.

The Senate conferees agreed unanimously to this concept and we believe that it was a good compromise.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement on S. 1129, to revise and extend the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973. This agreement represents a carefully developed compromise between the Senate and the House versions of this important piece of legislation. I wish to commend Mr. MURPHY, chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, Mr. ANDREWS, chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, and Mr. HATCH, chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, for fashioning what I consider to be a masterful solution for the continuation of these valuable volunteer programs which will continue to address the problems of the poor.

Mr. Speaker, this is a modest piece of legislation which will extend the volunteer programs under title I of this act and provide for the maintenance of those volunteers in service to America (VISTA) who are now placed, and to provide for a modest increase in volunteers to serve in already approved projects which serve the poor, providing needed services in programs such as food banks, shelters for the homeless, literacy improvement, youth development, and employment placement and counseling.

This legislation will provide a minimum of 2,000 VISTA volunteer service years in fiscal year 1984 if a supplemental appropriation is provided; a minimum of 2,200 VISTA volunteer service years in fiscal year 1985; and a minimum of 2,400 VISTA volunteer service years in fiscal year 1986 for part A of title I. The authorization provides for the important service learning programs in part B and the demonstration and citizen participation programs in part C to be maintained at current levels.

In addition, this legislation will continue those important programs for older Americans in title II of this act, such as Foster Grandparents and retired senior volunteers. Also, there is a provision to provide a new authorization for the Senior Companion program to address the needs of the homebound elderly. I believe that this is an important addition to these worthwhile efforts to serve the elderly of this country. This additional authorization should provide opportunities for over 4,000 additional older American volunteers.

Mr. Speaker, I will not go through the details of this bill since it has been explained adequately by the chairmen of the two subcommittees, but I do wish to reiterate that these authorization levels are extremely modest, and in some cases, considerably below the amounts provided for these programs in 1981. The continuation of VISTA and the Older American Volunteer programs are vital if our local communities are to continue providing opportunities and services to the 34 million Americans who are now living in poverty.

Unfortunately, these programs have been operating under the continuing resolution for fiscal year 1984, and this fact will have an adverse effect on maintaining the current level of volunteers if we do not act quickly. This action is needed in order for us to request additional funds for 1984 to maintain those projects which are currently operating and to provide additional volunteers for those already approved projects.

Favorable action here today on this reauthorization is imperative, and I urge my colleagues to vote yes on this conference report to continue the Older Americans Volunteer programs, volunteers in service to America, along with those smaller volunteer programs such as service learning and citizen participation.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker I rise in support of the conference agreement on S. 1129, and particularly title II of the bill, that portion of it that reauthorizes the Older American Volunteer programs.

This title was first introduced separately in the House by Chairman PERKINS and myself as H.R. 1719, was later combined with H.R. 2655, which reauthorizes the VISTA program, and, finally, is part of S. 1129, the bill which is the subject of the conference agreement we are considering today.

We hear so freqently about what we owe to our senior citizens, and what their needs are, and what we should be doing for them. What we do not hear about so often is what they are doing for others. The Older American Volunteer programs are instances of senior citizens contributing to make a better life for all of us—but particularly vulnerable children and other older Americans in need. They include the Foster Grandparents program, the Senior Companion program, and the Retired Senior Volunteer program, better known as RSVP.

The provisions in title II of S. 1129 pertaining to these senior volunteer programs were largely contained in the House-passed version of this bill, H.R. 2655. They were accepted by the Senate conferees, with some minor modifications, and I am convinced they will provide modest but needed fine-tuning.

One substantive provision of which we are proud is a bipartisan proposal to expand the Senior Companion program in order to increase and improve their volunteer service to the homebound elderly. Another provision would put into statute the current practice of maintaining a 30 percent ceiling on required local contributions for RSVP programs. Also, with regard to local match, the ACTION agency's control over local funds raised in excess of the required amount would be limited.

S. 1129 will lessen restrictions now existing regarding Foster Grandparent service to mentally retarded individuals who reach 21 years of age. Finally, the allowable stipend for Foster Grandparents and Senior Companions would be raised from $2 per hour to $2.20 per hour. This increase, dependent upon the availability of adequate appropriations, would in small part provide for inflation during the past 5 years.

The conferees agreed on authorization levels that struck a middle ground between the House figures and the somewhat lower Senate authorizations, with an added provision to permit sufficient appropriations to provide for the increase in the Foster Grandparents and Senior Companions' stipend.

In my judgment, the agreement reached by the conferees on S. 1129 is a very reasonable one, and one that House Members can enthusiastically support. I urge favorable action on this conference agreement.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would join in the commendation of the chairman of the subcommittee, with whom I worked on this legislation and worked with on many other pieces of legislation over the last year.

I think we are both—even though I continue to oppose the conference report—grateful that we finally do have some legislation that we can get behind us and move on to some other subjects.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I join the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee and the chairman of the Select Education Subcommittee in expressing my strong support for the conference report accompanying S. 1129, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1984.

This bill has been a very long time in coming. The Subcommittee on Select Education first began considering this bill in April 1983. In October 1983, the House approved H.R. 2655 by an overwhelming 312 to 20. But from October 1983 until a few weeks ago, those who opposed assurances of funding for VISTA, the Federal Government's only domestic full-time antipoverty volunteer program, used every possible delaying tactic.

As a result, critical and proven cost-effective VISTA projects across the country were placed, and remain today, in great jeopardy. Without the necessary authorization, VISTA has been held to a fiscal year 1984 appropriation, providing only $11.8 million, a 71-percent cut from just 3 years ago. This woefully inadequate budget, according to CRS, will slash the number of VISTA volunteers by over half, from 1,950 to 931, and cut the number of VISTA projects from 418 to 320 by September 1984.

Our success in finally bringing this report to the floor today is largely due to the efforts of our chairmen, Mr. PERKINS and Mr. MURPHY. Their efforts were buttressed by the tenacity of the wide VISTA network, supported by Friends of VISTA and its Executive Director, Mimi Mager. This bill enjoyed strong and continued support from a range of national and grassroots organizations as diverse as the American Association of Retired Persons, Blinded Veterans of America, League of Women Voters, Literacy Volunteers of America, the three National Directors' Associations of the Foster Grandparents, the Retired Senior Volunteer programs, and the Senior Companion program, the National Coalition Against Domesic Violence, Second Harvest, the Steelworkers of America, and Volunteer National Center for Citizen Involvement.

The report we are considering today was approved unanimously by the Senate prior to the Easter recess. Although the VISTA funding levels included in this bill for fiscal years 1984-86 are not as high as those I advocated during the conference, the bill overall is a strong and good one. It makes much-needed improvements in the VISTA and Older American Volunteer programs administered by the ACTION agency.

The VISTA program, the Older American Volunteer programs, and the poor and elderly citizens and communities they serve, have been hurt badly by our delay in approving this legislation. The first step in repairing this damage must be our swift action to pass the conference report.

A necessary next step is an emergency fiscal year 1984 supplemental for VISTA to bring the program up to its authorized level of $17 million. This would begin to reverse the last 3 years of neglect, abuse and misuse of VISTA resources.

Some argue that the funding levels included for VISTA in S. 1129 are excessive and budget busting. I want to point out that the minimum service years of 2000, 2200, and 2400 respectively for fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986 required to be funded under this conference agreement are $36 million, or 43 percent, below the earlier House-approved levels. Even the authorization ceilings included in this bill are $21 million, or 23 percent, lower than the earlier House-approved levels.

In fact, VISTA's authorization ceiling in this bill for fiscal years 1986—2 years from now—is identical to VISTA's appropriation in 1969—15 years ago. Since that time, the Consumer Price Index has risen by nearly 200 percent. To return VISTA—2 years from now—to its 1969 funding level is hardly an extravagance. It is an embarrassment.

Despite the claims by VISTA's opponents, the funding guarantees provided for VISTA in this bill are not new. For over 10 years, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act has contained funding floors for VISTA. This has been, and I hope will continue to be, Congress way of insuring that VISTA, the ACTION agency's only full-time antipoverty program, receives first priority funding—prior to the funding of other title I programs deemed to be less essential than the VISTA program.

One thing is clear: VISTA remains ACTION's most unique and effective tool in addressing the most basic problems of the poor of this Nation. There is no more cost-effective or productive way to support the administration's new priorities than through the VISTA program. The funding floors provided for VISTA will in no way set back the ACTION agency's new program initiatives. Indeed, they could only hence these efforts.

I take special pride in having been one of the Members responsible for preserving VISTA funding floors in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981. Had these floors not been maintained in fiscal years 1982 and 1983, it is clear we would not be here today discussing funding for VISTA in fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986. The funding floors provided VISTA with a lifejacket to keep it afloat and enabled the program to hang on despite continued administrative and legislative efforts to undermine and eliminate it.

I also want to make perfectly clear that the VISTA funding floors in no way jeopardize the Older American Volunteer programs. Perhaps the clearest proof of this fact is the action taken by the National Council of Senior Citizens designating defeat of Mr. BARTLETT's amendment last October to eliminate VISTA's funding floor as one of the 10 key congressional votes for senior citizens. Last fall, nearly every major civic organization representing senior citizens joined 40 other national organizations in a letter urging the maintenance and expansion of the VISTA program including the funding floor.

Another point of deep concern not only to Members of Congress but also to the General Accounting Office involves ACTION's abuse and politicization of its noncareer hiring authorities.

The conference report includes an 8.5-percent cap on certain categories of noncareer and political appointees. I regret having to admit to my colleagues that this cap is nothing short of a joke. In real terms, phased in over a 1-year period, the cap will result in reducing few, if any, of the excessive numbers of political employees currently padding the ACTION agency payroll.

Over the past 3 years, ACTION RIF'd over 200 talented career civil servants, many of whom had 10 or more years of experience in administering ACTION programs. No sooner were those career civil servants out the door than ACTION hired new employees—strong in partisan political credentials but weak on programmatic experience—to replace the RIF'd employees.

For 3 years ACTION has served as a dumping ground for Reagan loyalists and their siblings as well as political appointees fired or dismissed from other agencies. Recently, someone joked that ACTION was a classic example of a CETA program for Reaganites.

According to the GAO, as of September 30, 1983, nearly one in every five of ACTION's employees were noncareer and primarily political appointees. This is probably the highest percentage of any Federal agency or department. Since 1981, ACTION has had more political appointees than the much-criticized previous administration which was responsible for over twice the number of career employees. Further, in the last administration, no ACTION career civil servants lost their jobs as a result of a reduction in force.

Information submitted by the ACTION agency to Congress showed that the agency has also developed a bizarre policy of encouraging and paying its top civil servants to work at ACTION's expense at other Federal agencies. Recently, we learned that ACTION's practice of paying employees to work elsewhere is not limited to career civil servants.

The San Francisco Examiner recently disclosed that Susan Borchard, previously the ACTION Regional Director in San Francisco, had been transferred "on paper" from San Francisco to the ACTION Director's office as a Special and Confidential Assistant. Yet it was disclosed that Ms. Borchard had never spent a day working in this capacity, but instead is working full-time in the White House personnel office, clearing political appointments for positions throughout the Reagan administration. I might note that Ms. Borchard's salary of nearly $52,000 would more than support seven full-time VISTA volunteers for a full year of service. This is only one example of the politically motivated hiring practices of the ACTION agency. Unfortunately, this bill does not go far enough in addressing abuses such as this.

Following a 2-year investigation, the GAO found a clear pattern of ACTION's questionable use and mismanagement of noncareer hiring authorities. GAO is scheduled to issue its final report on this matter within the next few weeks. It is my firm hope that GAO, OPM, and the Congress will force ACTION to curb these abuses once and for all.

This bill also includes a provision I authored prohibiting the use of VISTA volunteers or VISTA resources for any other ACTION program or project that does not meet the strict antipoverty criteria of the VISTA program. GAO confirmed that the ACTION Agency illegally diverted VISTA funds and volunteers into new Agency initiatives, unauthorized by the Congress, and clearly lacking the mandated antipoverty purpose and focus of the VISTA program.

By including this prohibition in the authorization of appropriations section of the bill, the conferees clearly intend to prohibit any such diversions of VISTA's limited resources.

Today, more than ever, the VISTA program is desperately needed. Recently the Census Bureau reported that the 1982 poverty rate had risen to 15 percent of the population, the highest since 1965, the first year of the VISTA program, and other War on Poverty programs. Today, more than 1 out of 5 children in this country lives in poverty. One out of two black children lives in poverty. One out of three Hispanic children lives in poverty.

We must insure, through the passage of S. 1129, continuation of VISTA, a critical antipoverty program that has proven its cost-effectiveness. We must insure that dedicated Americans—many of them poor themselves—can continue to volunteer their services full-time to those in this Nation who face the harsh struggles of poverty.

Above all, during these times of massive cutbacks in so many social programs, we must give our wholehearted support to programs that promote self-help, generate private sector resources, and leave low-income neighborhoods and communities more independent and more capable than ever. VISTA has demonstrated its ability to help the poor help themselves, to generate new resources to alleviate poverty, to promote business ventures, and to develop economic programs that make a lasting and tangible difference in low-income communities.

Let us not delay any further the passage of this legislation. We must begin immediately to rebuild the VISTA program, to restore VISTA services so desperately needed by poor people throughout America, and to reopen the opportunities for antipoverty volunteer service for all Americans.●

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to add my voice to those who have already spoken in support of swift passage of the conference report on bill S. 1129. I do so because I know firsthand the invaluable aid VISTA volunteers have given to keep antipoverty projects in my district and throughout the country. VISTA has meant substantial new resources, volunteers, and coordination efforts that low-income communities and poor people struggling for a new life for themselves and their families simply cannot do without.

I find it noteworthy that so many of us Texans have been and are deeply involved with VISTA. One Texan, Lyndon B. Johnson, gave VISTA its birth and launched the program on the path it follows today. Since 1965, over 3,500 Volunteers have served the poor and the disadvantaged throughout the State of Texas, and countless Texans have served as VISTA volunteers nationwide.

Another Texan, Mr. Thomas Pauken, has been seeking VISTA's demise for the last 3 years and has succeeded in cutting the program to the bone. Yet another Texan, my colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, has assisted Mr. Pauken in the drive to put VISTA in an early grave through elimination of the program's funding guarantees. As a result of these efforts, I am sorry to report, the number of VISTA volunteers in Texas has dropped from 153 in 1980 to 67 today and the number of projects has been cut from 26 to 6.

But this Texan is here today to support VISTA's resurrection and rebirth. This is particularly the case as I now have the privilege of heading the Select Committee on Hunger. Nowhere is the irreplaceable work of VISTA volunteers clearer than in VISTA's ongoing efforts to reduce hunger and malnutrition in our Nation. The success VISTA volunteers have registered already indicate the vast untapped potential of VISTA to significantly affect the growing danger of hunger in America.

Unfortunately there are no comprehensive and complete statistics on the exact number of the tens of thousands of Americans who are going hungry every day. But objective studies by, among others, the General Accounting Office, U.S. Conference of Mayors, Food Research and Action Center, Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture itself, document a vast and accelerating increase in the demand at emergency food distribution centers over the last 2 years. Some of these increases are as high as 400 and 500 percent over the last 2 years.

Low-income individuals and families, hard hit by employment and budget cutbacks, have been joined in poverty by the new poor of formerly stable, self-sufficient families now enduring long-term unemployment, and all of these people are now without enough to eat.

In a particularly ominous development, a new study by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health indicates that as many as 500,000 low-income children under the age of 6 are now suffering from chronic malnutrition. This catastrophe simply cannot be allowed to continue.

In response of this growing national emergency, more than 400 VISTA volunteers, 1 of every 5, are working in 94 projects in 40 States to organize and expand emergency food banks, develop nutrition programs for the elderly and children, and initiate food gleaning projects. The real gains these 400 volunteers have made highlight what could be accomplished by even more VISTA volunteers and efforts.

We in Texas have a bird's-eye view of VISTA's success because of the work of volunteers at the Brownsville Community Food Bank, the San Antonio Food Bank, the Capital Area Food Bank in Austin and the Houston Area Food Bank in my own district.

VISTA's at the Houston Food Bank have, just over the course of 2 years, helped to increase the number of member agencies from 70 to 190, boost food collections from 10,000 pounds per month to 280,000 pounds, expand food distribution from 20,000 to 300,000 pounds a month, and recruit 30 new community volunteers.

The North Texas Food Bank has been highly regarded by many, including President Reagan, who visited last year to demonstrate his admiration for this VISTA-supported organization which is funneling thousands of tons of free food to needy people in 26 counties of the State. Yet, despite the President's words of praise, this project was denied refunding by Mr. Paukan, as was a statewide antihunger network that would have distributed food to dozens of food banks throughout the State.

Texas is not the only State fortunate enough to have VISTA's working at projects addressing hunger and hunger-related problems:

At the Community Food Bank in Newark, N.J., two VISTA's were crucial in expanding distribution from 70,000 pounds a month to 350,000 pounds a month and increasing member agencies from 100 to over 350 during the year ending December 1983.

The work of 20 VISTA's at Oregon Food Share in Portland since 1981 significantly contributed to the April 1983 award to Oregon Food Share of the President's National Volunteer Action Award. The volunteers' key financial, personnel, and logistical coordination prepared the statewide network for a massive increase in food distribution from 1.5 million pounds to just under 8 million pounds, including 2.3 million pounds in surplus government commodities, in 1983. VISTA's helped establish 5 new Community Food Advisory Committees, recruit 50 new statewide corporate food donors, coordinate 5 gleaning projects producing 1 million pounds of food, and extend the network to every county in the state, now service 12,000 people a week.

VISTA efforts have not been limited to just food banks or local soup kitchens and food pantries. Volunteers have also been the key organizers of both rural and urban food gleaning projects. VISTA's have coordinated hot breakfast and lunch programs for children, both in summer months when the schools are closed, and where budget cutbacks have eliminated school food programs altogether. Urban meals-on-wheels programs for the elderly, rural transportation to elderly nutrition centers, nutrition classes, and food buying co-ops have all been developed by VISTA volunteers.

VISTA volunteers are already playing an exemplary role in addressing this growing national emergency. Their current success demonstrates the potential for doing even more with VISTA volunteers to end the crises of hungry children throughout America.

For all reasons I urge my colleagues to swiftly approve S. 1129. The time to act is now. We must assure the beneficiaries of VISTA projects that their voices are heard, and that we care.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we have before us today the final conference agreement on legislation to extend the Older American Volunteer programs and the VISTA program for the next 3 years. In adopting this legislation, Congress has once again reaffirmed our commitment to maintaining a Federal volunteer agency that will foster and promote expanded volunteer opportunities for all people across this Nation—of all backgrounds—and of all ages.

As a member of the conference committee which brings this report to the floor of the House today, I am especially glad that we have finalized our work prior to the work on the fiscal year 1985 appropriations bills that will assure that the changes that were made through this reauthorization can be effectively implemented.

This bill authorizes funds for the three Older American Volunteer programs: Foster Grandparents, Senior Companions, and the Retired Senior Volunteer program at the following levels: Foster Grandparents: $58.8 million in fiscal year 1984; $61.4 million in fiscal year 1985 and $63.9 million in fiscal year 1986. For the Senior Companions program, the following amounts are provided: $27.8 million in fiscal year 1984; $28.3 million in fiscal year 1985 and $28.6 million in fiscal year 1986. Finally, the following amounts are provided for the RSVP program: $29.7 million in fiscal year 1984, $30.4 million in fiscal year 1985 and $31.1 million in fiscal year 1986.

I am pleased to note that this bill also increases the hourly stipend for Foster Grandparents and RSVP's from $2 to $2.20 per hour, which is long overdue considering that many of these volunteers offer their services with little compensation in addition to this stipend such as transportation, meals, and health services. We have also retained one other feature of the House bill, H.R. 2655, which limits the local contribution to Senior Volunteer projects to 30 percent of the total cost. Foster Grandparents have proven to be valuable resources in local communities where they work with developmentally disabled children and those in institutionalized settings.

This report also extends authorizations for the VISTA program, as well as our other two Federal antipoverty programs, service learning and special volunteer. For VISTA, we have retained the character of the program by requiring sufficient funds to support at least 2,000 VISTA volunteers in fiscal year 1984, 2,200 in fiscal year 1985 and 2,400 in fiscal year 1986 at the following levels: $25 million in fiscal year 1984, $28 million in fiscal year 1985 and $30 million in fiscal year 1986.

I am pleased that this report also contains a provision I authored in committee which requires at least 20 percent of VISTA volunteers to be 55 years of age or older. With this provision, we have assured an age-integrated volunteer program as well as appropriate participation by older Americans who are valuable resources to local communities. The scope and nature of volunteer opportunities provided through VISTA differ substantially from those provided through the Older American Volunteer programs. They are longer in duration, for at least 1 year, and require a full-time commitment as opposed to senior volunteers in the OAVP who donate somewhere between 8 and 10 hours per week. I believe that both the VISTA program and the Older American Volunteer programs provide important and much-needed volunteer opportunities for senior citizens. In passing this report today, we have reaffirmed that commitment and underscored our overriding concern that volunteer opportunities must continue to exist in communities in order to combat poverty and its byproducts.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend our subcommittee chairman, AUSTIN MURPHY for his diligence in steering this bill through committee, as well as our full committee chairman, CARL PERKINS, for his continued commitment to all social programs which form a floor of support for those Americans who need assistance in order to achieve self-sufficiency. I urge my colleagues to join in support of this report before us today.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, I want to speak in support of rapid approval of the conference report S. 1129, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act amendments reauthorizing the ACTION agency, VISTA, and the Older American Volunteer programs.

This legislation is essential for the continuation of the Foster Grandparent, Retired Senior Volunteer and Senior Companion programs, which have always enjoyed broad bipartisan support and have been recognized across the Nation for their contributions made to the elderly.

What is not as well recognized is the importance of the VISTA program for senior citizens. VISTA has had a significant and greatly beneficial impact on the lives of the elderly and will do so even more with the provisions of the bill before us expanding the opportunities for the elderly to become VISTA volunteers.

Throughout its history VISTA has had a significant impact upon the lives of this Nation's elderly. VISTA has been essential to leveraging resources in local neighborhoods which benefit elderly residents in developing solutions to problems of the elderly in housing, energy conservation, crime prevention, food and nutrition projects, health care, advocacy projects for the handicapped and disabled, alcohol and medication abuse programs, development of adult day care, and innovative new rural transportation systems for the elderly.

Today approximately 15 percent of all VISTA volunteers in the field are assigned to over 70 projects in 35 States serving the elderly poor. These 200 VISTA's are dedicating a year of their lives working on projects designed to improve the quality of senior citizens' lives and they are providing a resource that the elderly simply cannot do without.

Another significant fact that my colleagues should be aware of is the number of VISTA volunteers who are themselves senior citizens. Currently 17 percent of all VISTA's are over the age of 55 and the bill before us will require that a full 20 percent of volunteers be older Americans. As VISTA volunteers, the elderly receive even more than the renewed sense of purpose and accomplishment VISTA service brings. They receive an income supplement to assist them in retirement and medical benefits as well. Many of these senior VISTA's have gone on to full-time paying jobs, including as the administrators on staffs of the charitable and nonprofit organizations meeting the needs of the elderly.

One of the most significant measures of VISTA's importance to the elderly is the National Council of Senior Citizens' recent listing of the 10 most important votes taken by this body last fall.

NCSC declared that a vote against the Bartlett amendment was a vote for senior citizens and 1 of the 10 most important of the year. I might also point out that VISTA has been strongly supported by all the senior citizens organizations, not just NCSC, who view the program as essential to the welfare and future of elderly Americans.

We are blessed as a Nation to have citizens who are willing to make this commitment to better the lives of the elderly and all poor people. In conclusion, I urge my colleagues, on behalf of senior citizens throughout this nation, to swiftly approve this conference report, not only because of the three Older American Volunteer programs, but also because of VISTA's invaluable contributions.●

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DURBIN). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, further proceedings on this conference report will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5119, INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 497, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 497

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution, the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5119) to authorize international development and security assistance programs and Peace Corps programs for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order by this resolution, and which shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider an amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of the bill (H.R. 5421) as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI and clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. Said substitute shall be considered for amendment by titles instead of by sections, and each title shall be considered as having been read, but the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, determine when title X of the substitute shall be considered for amendment. No amendment to the substitute shall be in order which changes, includes, or affects the subject matter of title X, funding and policies specifically relating to Central America or the countries of which it consists (Panama, Belize, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica, and El Salvador), except the following amendments to title X, which shall not be subject to amendment, shall be considered as having been read, and shall be considered only in the following order: (1) the amendment printed in the Congressional Record of May 3, 1984, by, and if offered by, Representative Studds of Massachusetts, said amendment shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in Committee of the Whole, and said amendment shall be debatable for not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by Representative Studds and a Member opposed thereto; and (2) the amendment printed in the Congressional Record of May 3, 1984, by, and if offered by, Representative Broomfield of Michigan, all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI and clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived, and said amendment shall be debatable for not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by Representative Broomfield and a Member opposed thereto. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text by this resolution. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

□ 1450

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, as is the custom, I yield 30 minutes, for the purpose of debate only, to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT), and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 497 provides for consideration of H.R. 5119, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984. It is a modified open rule, providing for 2 hours of general debate to be equally divided between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The rule waives points of order against consideration of the bill for failure to comply with section 402(a) of the Budget Act, which requires that legislation authorizing new budget authority be reported by May 15 preceding the beginning of the fiscal year in which the new budget authority becomes effective.

This waiver is necessary because the bill authorizes the appropriation of $1,636,000 in fiscal year 1984 for payment to the International Atomic Energy Agency. Since the bill was not reported by May 15, 1983, it would be subject to a point of order under section 402(a) of the Budget Act.

In addition, the rule makes in order the text of H.R. 5421 as an original bill for the purpose of amendment. To facilitate debate, the substitute shall be considered for amendment by title instead of by section, and each title shall be considered as read.

The rule grants a waiver of clause 7 of rule XVI—the germaneness rule—to allow consideration of the substitute. The waiver is necessary because title X of the substitute contains provisions which impose conditions on troops and military advisors in Central America which were not included in the bill as introduced.

The rule also waives points of order against the substitute for failure to comply with clause 5(a) of rule XXI which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill. This waiver is necessary because various provisions of the bill provide that funds are available for expenditure upon enactment of the bill, provide for new use of previously appropriated funds, or might otherwise constitute appropriations in a legislative bill.

An example of this violation would be a provision in H.R. 5421 which provides for a foreign military exchange educational program which does not limit participation to the amount of funds provided in the appropriations bill. All students who apply would be eligible for participation in educational programs at our military schools upon enactment of the bill, and the bill would require the appropriate expenditure of funds by the Secretary to accomodate their participation.

Because the parliamentary procedure established by the rule is slightly unusual, I would like to spend a few moments to make sure that Members understand how it would operate and why this procedure is necessary.

Subsequent to the committee report, an agreement was reached by the majority and minority leadership of the Foreign Affairs Committee to seek a rule that would allow the House to consider a text including provisions establishing congressional policy with respect to Central America. The Chairman of the committee introduced a bill (H.R. 5420) to provide a legislative vehicle that could be properly referenced in the rule as a base text.

That text included provisions limiting aid to El Salvador and providing for joint resolutions which would waive those limitations. The text, however, also included a rule providing expedited procedures for the consideration of such subsequent resolutions, a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules.

During consideration of the rule, serious reservations were raised by members of our committee. Specifically, the committee feels that any changes affecting the rules of the House should not be made in a piecemeal fashion, but should be thoughtfully considered and reviewed. If a case can be made that expedited procedures can, and should, accompany congressional approval procedures, then the rules should be changed to reflect that decision through the appropriate process. Acting separately through individual bills as they move through the House is unwise and does not adequately protect the privileges and policies of the House.

However, in order to act quickly and accommodate the Foreign Affairs Committee request, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY) introduced a bill, H.R. 5421. The bill was identical to the Foreign Affairs text except that it deleted a single, two-sentence subsection, which provided the expedited procedure language.

Although this is an unusual procedure, it provides the only manner in which the Rules Committee can retain control over our responsibility for reviewing and recommending changes in the rules of the House, and still provide timely consideration of a foreign aid bill.

By making in order H.R. 5421 as original text, the Committee on Rules serves notice that, as in the past, it will not entertain efforts by legislative committees to alter the rules piecemeal—bill by bill—and that it will continue to assert its authority in matters affecting the rules of the House in the most effective way possible.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 497 further prohibits consideration of title X of the substitute, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, until the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole so specifies. Under the normal procedures of the House, the bill would be read by title or section. However, during the Rules Committee consideration of this bill, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee requested that flexibility be given to the consideration of this title since it deals with the controversial issue of Central America.

After careful deliberation, the committee approved this rule granting the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole the discretion to determine when title X shall be considered. This procedure would allow the consideration of the Central American title at the beginning, or at the end, or at any time during consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule.

Titles 1 through 9 will be completely open to amendment under the 5-minute rule. However, the rule specifies that until, and after title X is considered for amendment, no amendments which affect the matter in title X relating to Central America may be offered. The resolution makes in order only the following amendments, which must be offered in the following order, and shall themselves not be subject to amendment:

First, the amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 3 by Representative STUDDS to be debatable for 3 hours with the time equally divided and controlled by Mr. STUDDS and a Member opposed to the amendment. To accomplish his goal of providing a one-step procedure for certification and funding for military and economic assistance, Representative STUDDS must amend three different parts of the bill. Therefore, to allow one vote on the Studds proposal, the rule provides that the amendment shall not be subject to a demand for a division in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Second, the amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 3 by Representative BROOMFIELD to be debatable for 3 hours with the time equally divided and controlled by Representative BROOMFIELD and a Member opposed to the amendment. The resolution grants a waiver of clause 5(a) of rule XXI which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill. This waiver is needed because various provisions of the Broomfield amendment provide that funds are available for expenditure upon enactment of the bill or provide for new use of previously appropriated funds or might otherwise constitute appropriations in a legislative bill.

The rule also grants a waiver of clause 7, rule XVI, the germaneness rule, against the Broomfield amendment. This waiver is needed because the trade credit insurance program expands the authority of the Export-Import Bank, which is beyond the scope of the bill as introduced.

Finally, the rule provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5119 authorizes appropriations of $10.5 billion for foreign and economic security assistance programs in fiscal 1985, and $301 million in supplemental authorizations for fiscal 1984.

Approximately $300 million is available for Central American nations in fiscal 1984, and $1 billion is provided for fiscal 1985. Of the latter amount, $233 million is provided for military assistance, while the balance is reserved for economic support and developmental assistance for Central American countries.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5119 is a bill of considerable consequence and of considerable urgency. I urge my colleagues to adopt this rule, so that the House can consider this important legislation.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the rule before us is an unusual rule in that it makes in order as an original bill for the purpose of amendment a substitute introduced by a member of the Rules Committee for the bill reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

I want to allay the concerns of my colleagues that the Rules Committee has somehow assumed the role of a supercommittee that may override the judgment of other committees at will by superimposing its own bills on theirs.

I can understand that concern—it is one I voiced in the Rules Committee, and I offered an amendment to deal with that problem. I hope we are not setting a precedent by this action today.

But what brought us to this unusual rule was prompted by the Democratic Caucus of the Foreign Affairs Committee when it waited until after the foreign aid bill had been reported to recommend a new title X providing aid for Central America. That title included a provision that infringed on the Rules Committee's jurisdiction by giving privileged status to joint resolutions approving the release of the remainder of El Salvador aid or any presidential waivers.

So the Rules Committee's Democratic Caucus retaliated to the Foreign Affairs Committee's Democratic Caucus mosquito bite with a sledge hammer—it agreed to make in order a Moakley substitute deleting that special rules provision.

I am pleased to report that the mosquito is quite dead, though I fear the lump we raised on our own arm is considerably larger and more painful than anything the mosquito might have caused.

This whole convoluted process of amending a bill in closed committee caucuses brings to mind the line about how laws are like sausages—people should not see how they are made.

But I fear that when it is done, in the smoke-filled caucus sausage machine, the product that emerges is of a far more suspicious aroma and appearance than anything that might emerge from the public, sunshine sausage machine.

I suspect this is the Democrats' way of giving us smoked sausages.

This is a modified open rule, with titles I through IX open to any and all germane amendments following 2 hours of general debate. But title X, relating to Central America aid—the title which was not reported from committee—is closed to all but two amendments: A perfecting amendment by Representative STUDDS, and a substitute title by Representative BROOMFIELD, neither of which is subject to amendment.

This is the first time, to my knowledge, that we have had any kind of a closed rule on a foreign aid bill, and again I hope this is not a precedent. But there were no other requests to make in order further amendments to this title, and the minority was thus in agreement with the request.

Both the Studds and Broomfield amendments are subject to 3 hours of debate, divided between proponents and opponents.

I think it is safe to say that the Studds amendment in effect bars all fiscal 1985 funds to El Salvador because it imposes almost impossible conditions on the release of that aid. The Broomfield substitute, on the other hand, places more reasonable conditions on that aid than either the Studds or Fascell-Moakley language. Moreover, the Broomfield substitute is nearly identical to the President's request which is based on the Kissinger Commission's recommendations.

I want to conclude by emphasizing my concern about producing bills from these caucus sausage machines. It does not bode well for either the legislative process or the prospects for enacting this bill. We have not had a foreign aid authorization since 1981, and this whole process makes a repetition of that trend all the more likely.

I also want to express my reservations about burdening these bills with so many conditions and instructions and directions and strings that we literally tie the President's hands in the day-to-day conduct of foreign policy.

Yes, we have a role in foreign policy; but that role should be to facilitate and promote our national interests, not to impede and hamstring the President to the point of policy paralysis. I hope the amendment process will help to cut away some of these tangling strings, but I do support the rule.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ZSCHAU).

Mr. ZSCHAU. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, although I understand that this rule has the approval and support of the leadership of both parties, I plan to oppose it. I would like to explain why.

As the gentleman from Mississippi has just indicated, this is the first time in memory that a foreign aid authorization bill has been brought to the floor not subject to an open rule. I think that history has served us well. Foreign policy issues are complex. They need deliberation, they need debate, they need creative suggestions that Members of this body are able to provide. For that reason I think it is appropriate that foreign aid bills do come to the floor under an open rule.

Second, foreign policy issues need consensus. That means that the ideas of all Members of this body should get a hearing when we debate foreign policy issues. For that reason, I am disturbed that we have a break of tradition now by closing one section of the foreign aid bill under this proposed rule.

This case, as the gentleman from Mississippi has already indicated, is even worse. The very section of the bill—section 10—which is not open to amendment, is the only section that was not marked up in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is the section dealing with Central America. I have the privilege of serving on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have some ideas regarding our policy in Central America that I thought might have been constructive, but this section dealing with the complex and vexing problems of Central America was not open to debate even in the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The very set of issues that are the most difficult, that beg for deliberation and creative proposals, were not open for discussion in the committee. It is for that reason that I think that this rule, which precludes amendments to that section on the House floor too, does not serve this body well.

For example, let us consider one particular part of section 10—the various proposals that we will be considering related to the aid to El Salvador, specifically the procedures for congressional concurrence with the Presidential certification as to whether or not the Government of El Salvador has complied with the conditions that govern further military assistance.

Tomorrow we will be forced to choose between two extremes. In the one extreme, the Moakley language, either House, by a simple majority, can veto the President's certification.

This is governance by one House of Congress. I feel that approach does not create a proper balance of power. It certainly was not the sort of balance that was envisioned by the framers of the Constitution.

On the other hand, the Broomfield-Murtha proposal would require two-thirds of both Houses in order to veto a Presidential certification as to whether or not the Government of El Salvador had complied with the conditions. That approach may not give Congress a loud enough voice in the process.

I had a proposal that fell somewhere in between, under which a simple majority of both Houses of Congress would be required for overturning a Presidential certification. It would have provided that if both Houses pass a concurrent resolution disapproving a Presidential certification, it would not be in order for either the House or the Senate to consider any appropriations measure providing money for El Salvador.

Such a provision avoids the extremes of the two alternatives we are being permitted to consider, that is, either a one-house veto or the necessity of both Houses mustering a two-thirds vote to override a Presidential certification. Instead, my proposal would allow a simple majority in Congress to decide whether El Salvador had met the conditions imposed on aid to that Government.

This is precisely the procedure followed under the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974. Under that act, neither House may consider any bill that exceeds the budget resolution, a concurrent resolution adopted each year by Congress.

The procedure is fair, it is constitutional, and it makes sense. Following is the text of the amendment which I had hoped to offer to the Central America section of the foreign aid bill:

AMENDMENT TO H.R. 5421

Amend section 1003(d)(2) of the bill (page 87, lines 9-24) to read as follows:

"(2) Not to exceed an additional $124,500,000 of military assistance and financing, and the remaining amounts of economic support assistance approved by the Congress for El Salvador, may be provided if the President submits a second report pursuant to subsection (b) stating that the President has determined that the Government of El Salvador has achieved the objectives described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (c) and, since the first report was submitted, has made additional demonstrated progress in achieving the objectives described in paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) of subsection (c).

"(3) If within thirty calendar days after receiving the reports required by this section, the Congress adopts a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress finds that the objectives described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (c) have not been met, and since the first report was submitted, the government of El Salvador has not made additional demonstrated progress in achieving the objectives described in paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) of subsection (c), it shall not be in order for the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any provision of an appropriations measure for fiscal year 1985 which would make funds available for military assistance for El Salvador. If such a resolution is adopted with respect to a report, a new report may be submitted if the President states in such report that it describes new plans, steps or policies by the Government of El Salvador designed to address the objectives described in subsection (b) or that it describes new circumstances or new information showing that the plan, steps or policies address the objectives described in subsection (b). Any such revised report shall be subject to this paragraph.".

Whether or not my proposal is a good idea or not is an open question. But that is not the issue. The point is that under the proposed rule we do not even have the chance to debate it. We do not have the chance to discuss any other ideas relating to the difficult situation in Central America that may have been offered by members of the Foreign Affairs Committee or other Members of this body.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I plan to oppose this rule.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes, for purposes of debate only, to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and I want to express my appreciation to him and to the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee for presenting this rule so clearly and concisely.

It is an unusual rule, but these are unusual times, Mr. Speaker. The Committee on Foreign Affairs was anxious to get a bill authorizing the appropriation of funds for foreign assistance programs before the House for consideration. And I want to advise my colleagues that a lot of diligent work went into getting a bill here for consideration under a rule. The rule would perhaps not satisfy every single Member but it is one which will give the Members the opportunity to debate the principal points of view that seem to be represented in this body.

We did have ample discussion in the committee on all of the issues. We did our best to bring out a bill which reflected the consensus of the committee, but that was impossible on all points despite how much we tried. Therefore, an agreement was reached that we would come to the floor and let the House work its will with respect to the one title on which we could not get a consensus, that dealing with assistance for Central America. We did that in the fashion whereby the principal points of view would get heard and there would be an opportunity for Members not only to express themselves but to vote on those different approaches to a very difficult problem.

I will admit that in the process it was not possible to give every single Member an opportunity to offer amendments with respect to his particular idea or suggestion. I would simply say that I would hope that they would understand, however, that in this case the basic issues will be aired and will be heard, and the House will work its will. In the ultimate process, it is essential to get an authorization bill passed so that we do not depend continually on an appropriation by continuing resolution. In the course of the lengthy deliberations and consideration of the bill, we will make those adjustments that are agreed on during the course of consideration, whether that be in Committee of the Whole or in conference or otherwise.

So I would ask the forbearance of my colleagues, particularly my friend, the gentleman from California, who is such a valued member on the Foreign Affairs Committee. We note his objection. I regret that he feels it is necessary to make that point, but he is right in making the point. I would just hope, however, that he would bear with us, have the House adopt this rule and begin consideration of the bill.

Again, Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Rules Committee for understanding the problem and both sides of the aisle for giving the House an opportunity to work its will on a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and if the gentleman from Louisiana has no further requests, I would yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time for the purpose of inquiring about the schedule from this point on into the afternoon. We had been advised on this side of the aisle earlier that we would take up the soil conservation bill, H.R. 3457, after the rule, and then we were informed that we would go ahead after the rule on the foreign aid authorization bill and proceed with general debate on the foreign aid authorization bill.

There seems to be now some confusion on that. Apparently we are going to go ahead with the soil conservation bill.

Mr. Speaker, so that we can have the Members on our side of the aisle here that would be involved in the debate on either one of those bills, could we inquire as to what would be next on the agenda?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATKINS) for a response.

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that we are going to take up the soil conservation bill, then have the votes on the suspensions and the conference report, and then have the 2 hours of debate.

Mr. LOTT. So the votes on the suspension and the conference report would come after the completion of the Soil Conservation Act legislation?

Mr. WATKINS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the Chair, and I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma.

SOIL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 493 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3457.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3457) to prohibit the payment of certain agriculture incentives to persons who produce certain agricultural commodities on highly erodible land; to allow farmers who plant perennial grasses and legumes as a means of building soil quality, rotating crops, or protecting land from wind and water erosion, to enter a certified voluntary set-aside program; and to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into long-term contracts with farmers to remove certain erosion-prone lands from cultivation, with Mr. FASCELL (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Monday, May 7, 1984, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) had 19 minutes of general debate remaining, and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN) had 6 minutes of general debate remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. JONES.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I believe that on both sides of the aisle today, the ones having the minority side as well as the majority side of the bill, may have some more debate and they are not here yet. If the Chair will permit me, I will give an explanation of the bill until some of them arrive.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3457, known as the Soil Conservation Act of 1984, would provide that any person who after enactment of the bill produces during any crop year an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land on a field on which the highly erodible land is the predominant class, shall be ineligible for farm program benefits on any commodity that person produces during the same crop year. The farm program benefits denied under this provision include price support or commodity program payments, farm storage facility loans, Federal crop insurance, disaster payments, and any Farmers Home Administration insured or guaranteed loan if the Farmers Home Administration loan would be used for a purpose that would contribute to excessive erosion on the field. The bill would also exempt persons who produce a commodity on highly erodible land if the commodity was: First, produced on land cultivated for any of the 1973 or 1984 crops; second, planted before the date of enactment of the bill; third, planted during any crop year beginning before the date of enactment of the bill; or fourth, produced under a conservation system approved by a conservation district. It would also exempt a loan made before the date of enactment of the bill.

The bill also, Mr. Chairman, requires the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out a conservation reserve program with owners and operators of erosion-prone cropland under long-term contracts of between 7 and 15 years to assist in conserving and improving the soil and water resources of the farm. Under these contracts, landowners would be required to adopt conservation plans to convert erosion-prone land to less erosive use, such as pasture or trees. In return, landowners would receive technical and financial assistance to carry out the conservation measures as well as an annual rental fee for the term of the contract. The bill limits signup of conservation reserve contracts to a 3-year period beginning October 1, 1984, and restricts the amount of payments which may be made under contracts entered into during the signup period to $50 million in fiscal year 1985, $75 million in fiscal year 1986, and $100 million in fiscal year 1987.

Mr. Chairman, that fairly well sums up what we did yesterday in general debate and also describes partially what this bill is all about.

I see that my friend, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN), the ranking member of the subcommittee is here and it may be that he has someone who would like to debate the remaining part of the 6 minutes that he has allotted to him.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, at this time I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of our time on this side.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances, let me just say that yesterday when a number of Members were not here, the gentleman from Tennessee and I both discussed the merits of this proposal. We both support it. I have a few reservations. There might be amendments offered this afternoon. We will talk about those then; but basically this is a bill which we think is important enough subject matter that it not be put into next year's farm bill and that it be highlighted as necessary.

The price tag on it has been reduced through an amendment I offered in committee. The bill passed the committee 38 to 1.

I think it is necessary to preserve the soil in our country. I support the proposition.

Mr. Chairman, at this time since the persons requesting additional time on my side are not present, they can take 5 minutes under the 5-minute rule and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984. As an original cosponsor of this bill, I am proud to have played a role in the development of this important legislation.

For much too long, the Federal Government has inadvertently sanctioned the practice of "sodbusting" by extending farm program benefits to those who plow up and plant fragile, erosion-prone land. This bill stops that. Likewise, this bill recognizes that farm programs and soil conservation program can no longer be divorced but must increasingly interact with one another to both save soil and protect farm income.

To achieve these goals, H.R. 3457 contains a three-part strategy which includes:

First, a sodbuster provision that prohibits any farm program benefits—price support loans and payments, storage facility loans, Federal crop insurance, disaster payments and FmHA loans—to any farmer who plows and plants any field which is predominantly highly erodible land (class IVe, VIe, VII, or VIII land) unless the land is cultivated under a system approved by the Conservation District;

Second, a conservation reserve program in which the Federal Government will share the cost of making serious long-term reductions in soil erosion through 7- to 15-year contracts with farmers who choose to set aside highly erodible lands on their farms; and

Third, a cropland base protection study on various voluntary set-aside programs to analyse a program under which farmers who set aside cropland to perennial grasses or legumes as part of a crop rotation pattern, first, may qualify under future commodity programs to have lands designated as cropland in rotation for the purpose of establishing a normal acreage base for the farm, or, second, designate cropland as "set-aside or conserving-use acreage" under these programs.

This last provision is aimed at correcting an inequity in farm programs that I have heard expressed over and over again by Iowa farmers. Specifically, farmers who have historically practiced good conservation and crop rotation have been penalized by our farm programs. Particularly hard hit have been livestock producers. This study has the potential of addressing and correcting this longstanding inequity.

Contrary to some of the rhetoric we are likely to hear during the debate today, the "sodbuster" title in this bill does not legislate farming practices. Farmers will still be free to do what they please with their land—even to abuse it. The bill merely says that farmers who plow highly erodible land that has not been cropped since 1973, and who do so without a plan approved by local conservation officials, will not be entitled to important Federal program benefits. That makes sense, particularly when one recognizes that extensive plowing of fragile grasslands in recent years has aggravated soil erosion, added to crop surpluses, and raised the price tag for farm programs.

This bill rectifies several weaknesses identified in sodbuster legislation which passed the Senate in November. Under the amendment I offered during committee consideration, if a farmer plows up a field predominantly composed of highly erodible land, he will be ineligible for price supports and other benefits not just on that land, but on any other land he farms.

The conservation reserve in H.R. 3457 is likewise a much needed improvement of existing production control programs. In 1977, a USDA survey disclosed that just 3 percent of the country's cropland—11 million acres—accounted for 26 percent of all cropland erosion caused by wind and water. Soil erosion is similarly concentrated in Iowa, as it is in most States. Obviously, this small amount of land constitutes a very large part of America's serious soil erosion problem. Soil scientists agree that it would be prohibitively expensive to try to protect this land from erosion while keeping it in intensive cultivation. The only practical solution is to plant the land to long-term cover crops.

With the long-term contracts, farmers could enroll erosion prone cropland in a 7 to 15 year conservation reserve. In return for an annual rental fee, the contract would require the farmer to establish and maintain suitable cover crops. In times of national emergency, the Secretary of Agriculture would be able to temporarily release land under contract for production of needed crops.

Instead of storing surplus grain in bins, where it lasts a few years, the conservation reserve would store the capacity to grow it in the soil, where it will last until we really need it. We would also be preventing hundreds of millions of tons of pesticide and fertilizer rich soil sediment from polluting the Nation's surface waters.

The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 will not solve all of the America's farm income or soil conservation problems. But this bill is a logical, long-overdue step away from the crisis management that now masquerades as agricultural policy, and which on balance degrades one of America's most valuable resources.

In closing, this bill enjoys broad support amongst agricultural, environmental and religious organizations, and I insert for the record a letter I received in support of this bill from a broad coalition of religious groups:

APRIL 19, 1984.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 (H.R. 3457) is likely to be considered during the week of April 30. We, the undersigned organizations, support H.R. 3457 as an important initiative in the ongoing effort to conserve our nation's food and fiber producing resources.

We believe that stewardship of the land is an urgent concern which we all share. Our food security and our contribution to world food security are dependent on the preservation of our soil. We support a sustainable system of agriculture, based on family farms, in which soil productivity and agricultural diversity are maintained.

Soil loss threatens to undermine the sustainability of our agricultural production. Nearly 6.5 billion tons of U.S. soil are washed or blown away annually. Much of this soil loss is concentrated on a relatively small number of fragile, highly erodible acres where the rate of topsoil loss greatly exceeds the soil's natural regenerative capacity.

Of the 8 million acres brought into production between 1977 and 1982, nearly one-half are highly erodible. Contrary to popular belief, highly erodible acres are often highly productive and represent a valuable resource when properly managed. Although improved conservation practice could reduce erosion to safe levels on a handful of these acres, retirement from continuous intensive production is usually the best solution. In most cases, highly erodible land can be used for intensive crop production in two of ten years without damage.

Furthermore, highly erodible land contributes disproportionately to the pollution of the nation's waterways through sedimentation and agricultural chemical run-off. These pollutants are a major obstacle to realization of national water quality goals. The U.S. spends approximately $1 billion annually on dredging operations to keep navigable waterways and harbors open to commercial traffic.

The Soil Conservation Act has two major objectives. First, public incentives to plow additional highly erodible land would be eliminated. If passed in its current form, H.R. 3457 would stop all farm program payments to farmers who produce any commodities on highly erodible land in the absence of a Soil Conservation Service-approved on-farm conservation plan. Known as the sodbuster provision, it would apply only to land plowed for crop production after enactment of the bill.

Secondly, the bill would provide incentives for farmers to retire highly erodible land already in production. Known as the conservation reserve, it would offer farmers technical assistance and cost-sharing on initial conversion as well as an annual rental fee for agreeing to place land in conservation (non-erosive) use for a period of from 7 to 15 years. By removing this land from intensive production, its productive capacity can be preserved for future needs. Land placed in the conservation reserve could be brought back into production of grain crops in the event of short supply.

Furthermore, by reducing the number of acres elgible for farm support payments, the conservation reserve would have little or no additional budgetary impact. Long term retirement of highly erodible land would cost less than removing land from production on a short-term basis through land diversion payments. As approved by Committee, the conservation reserve would be a pilot project with total funding of $225 million over three years.

We strongly urge passage of H.R. 3457 as approved by the Agriculture Committee. Farm programs—the public investment in agriculture—should enhance national goals, including conservation of productive resources. The Soil Conservation Act is an important initiative in the effort to preserve our nation's farmlands. Approval of H.R. 3457 would help ensure that topsoil continues to produce food, rather than becoming a pollutant in our waterways.

Sincerely,

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984. This bill recognizes that farm programs and soil conservation programs can no longer operate in separate worlds, but must interact in order to save soil and protect farm income. H.R. 3457 contains innovative, but practical soil conservation measures that will help to preserve agricultural resources and water quality, reduce farm surpluses, and protect both farmers and consumers from extremes in commodity prices.

H.R. 3457 is comprised of three important programs: the sodbuster program, the conservation reserve program and the cropland base protection program. The sodbuster program insures that Federal farm programs are taken out of the business of subsidizing farm practices which cause soil erosion. By making "sodbusters" ineligible for Federal price supports, crop insurance, farm loans and disaster payments, the bill seeks to discourage sodbusters from beginning new cropping on highly erodible land. The Department of Agriculture (USDA) projects that between 40 and 100 million acres of highly erodible land could be brought under the plow in the future if current farm program incentives and the prospect of rising commodity prices continue. Government farm and loan programs should stop underwriting the risk for plowing up and cropping highly erodible lands.

The conservation reserve program, the second component of H.R. 3457, seeks to protect some of the Nation's most erosive lands through 7-to-10-year contracts with farmers who choose to set aside highly erodible lands on their farms. The program is a fine-tuned and effective approach to soil conservation because it selectively targets highly erodible lands, and is based on local decisionmaking and economic practicality. If 12.5 million of the most erodible acres—an amount of land equivalent to that temporarily set aside under 1982 commodity programs—were set aside in longer term arrangements, about 600 million tons of soil could be saved each year, or roughly one-third of all soil being lost today. Opponents of this legislation who object to the costs of the conservation reserve program are being penny-wise and pound-foolish. The Government will not spend more by paying farmers to take erodible land out of production. Rather, these payments will be made in lieu of Federal crop price supports and other payments which would be made for crops grown on that land. Furthermore, the long-term benefits for our children and grandchildren of protecting these fragile lands are incalculable.

The third provision in the bill is the cropland base protection program. One current disincentive for farmers who practice sound crop rotation and other kinds of conservation practices is that such land is currently not counted as part of their normal cropland acreage, the base formula which is used to compute farm payments in commodity programs. H.R. 3457 authorizes a study of this situation to determine whether such conservation and rotation lands should be included in a farmer's normal cropland acreage. Under the Reagan administration PIK programs, for example, farmers who had previously seeded cropland to alfalfa, either in rotation or as part of a conservation plan to stabilize marginal cropland, could not count those acres as part of their farm's base acreage, nor could such acres qualify as set asides in the wheat or feed grain programs. These farmers practicing conservation, were in effect, penalized by these programs. By incorporating conservation lands into the normal cropland base, more farmers will have an incentive to practice sound conservation farming.

The strong and effective soil conservation measures in H.R. 3457 are needed to slow soil erosion, the consequences of which go far beyond the loss of farmland. As farmland washes into streams and rivers, it carries with it dangerous pesticides which degrade water quality. Farm soil erosion is also a major contributor to sedimentation which clogs our waterways, reservoirs, irrigation ditches and streams, kills fish and increases the costs of treating drinking water.

My home State of Ohio has long understood the importance of soil conservation. Ohio has been an aggressive leader in soil conservation, with more local and State employees than Federal employees focusing on soil and water conservation within the State. Yet officials in Ohio still estimate that Ohio has 5,772,000 acres of highly erodible land. Over the long run, these acres may lose their productive capacity if measures such as H.R. 3457 are not in place to encourage landowners to manage their soil in a responsible fashion.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this bill, which is a reasonable approach to a serious natural resource problem. The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 is an important step toward reducing the alarming rates of soil erosion in the United States.●

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the approval of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984. As a cosponsor of this measure, I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of the passage of this important legislation.

In assessing the importance of soil conservation, President Roosevelt once noted that the history of every nation is eventually written by the way it cares for its soil. The history being written today by our Nation is not encouraging. According to preliminary national resources inventory data, more than 44 million acres of highly erodible acreas are currently being cultivated in the United States and an additional 247 million acreas of highly erodible land are potential acres for new cultivation in the future. In South Dakota, from 7 to 14 tons of soil are being lost per acre on 8½ million acres of cropland because of wind and water erosion.

The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 now being considered recognizes the importance of conserving our soil resources by providing incentives for the long-term conversion of erosion prone cropland to less intensive uses and by discouraging the future cultivation of erosion prone grasslands for crop production by eliminating incentives for sodbusting. This legislation which has received the strong support of the Conservation, Credit and Rural Development Subcommittee and the Committee on Agriculture provides a needed and balanced approach to conserving our Nation's soil resources and I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of the Soil Conservation Act of 1984.●

● Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984 and commend Chairman DE LA GARZA, Subcommittee Chairman JONES and ranking member Mr. COLEMAN for presenting this Congress with a piece of conservation legislation.

As a cosponsor of the original sodbuster bill, I am pleased to note that its provisions have been included as part of H.R. 3457.

Of course, no piece of legislation is perfect and I have some concerns about some of the details of this bill, but on the whole, I think producers are ready for some conservation legislation with teeth.

It is important to keep in mind that no matter how beneficial this bill might be, farmers and ranchers would be doing more of their own conservation work if incomes were better.

Second, we need to look at the Tax Code and price-support programs to see what incentives they are giving nonfarm investors to crop marginal ground.

However, this bill is an important step forward and should raise the national conciousness about the need for conservation.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I would like to insert into the RECORD a copy of my testimony before the House Agriculture Committee, Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development regarding H.R. 3457 and urge adoption of the bill:

HON. VIRGINIA SMITH, TESTIMONY BEFORE THE AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE SUBCOMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION, CREDIT, AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT, SEPTEMBER 20, 1983

I would like to thank the Subcommittee Chairman, Mr. Jones, the Ranking Minority Member, Mr. Coleman, and the entire Subcommittee for calling this hearing and for allotting this time for me to testify. Your consideration is appreciated.

As most of you, I have just completed an extensive tour of my District, holding 77 meetings and talking with thousands of people. I want this Subcommittee to know that one of the issues of top concern is the conservation issue.

My District is one that contains more cattle than people. So, as you can imagine, it also consists of vast pastureland expanses. The beautiful and unique Sandhill Range provides one of nature's best cattle grassland regions. These rolling dunes covered with a thin layer of topsoil and grass are also blessed with the most mighty underground water aquifers on the continent.

The Ogallala aquifer stretches from Nebraska to Texas and is 600 miles wide. Nebraska is by far the biggest benefactor of this aquifer's fresh water treasure. We stand second only to California in irrigation, with upwards of 8 million acres, practically immune to the present drought that wracks the rest of the Nation's heartland.

The mindless and tragic destruction of this land has people in my District upset. We have seen quarter section after quarter section plowed, drained, leveled, or otherwise defaced and planted to row crops. Some of this development has come at the hands of corporations, who have no interest in farming and only invest as a way to hide from inflation or to gain tax advantages. Some has come at the hands of individuals who live in the area, and who have exploited the resource for their own short term advantage.

For these reasons, I strongly support the efforts of this Committee to formulate legislation aimed at dealing with America's conservation problems. I especially appreciate inclusion of the Sodbuster bill as Title II of H.R. 3457. The Sodbuster bill had wide support and is seen as a response by government to the plowing of fragile grasslands that should never be torn up.

Many producers, agricultural and conservation groups, and farm experts think that farm programs discourage conservation and, in many cases, even encourage bad farming practices. Title III, the Certified Voluntary Set-aside, whereby producers who use grasses or legumes as part of a crop rotation can designate that ground as set-aside for farm program purposes, will certainly go a long way to end the discrimination those producers have endured from most farm programs.

I also support Title IV, the Conservation Reserve program, which would operate much like the old Soil Bank program. This program was very popular with producers as well as people interested in wildlife and hunting. There is certainly a need for some longer-term acreage set-aside as the world economic situation and the export situation do not indicate a need to return to full production.

Despite my overall support for the legislation, I would like to caution the Subcommittee on some well intentioned, but potentially harmful provisions.

Although I am a strong supporter of conservation and fight for conservation funds in the Agricultural Appropriation bill every year, I am also a strong advocate of local control and local decision-making.

Specifically, Section 201(b)(5), which deals with exceptions to the provisions of the Sodbuster bill, states that penalties will not apply to crops produced using a conservation system that has been approved by a conservation district and that is based on technical standards set forth in the Soil Conservation Service technical guide for that conservation district.

I do not question SCS expertise in the technical aspects of conservation, but I do question whether that huge beauracracy can keep up with the ever-changing methods of conservation farming.

I understand the need for uniform standards, but can also see a nightmare whereby certain implements or farming practices are not approved simply because SCS has not had time to evaluate them. The diversity in agriculture, as well as geography and the diversity of producers preference, dictate that there are thousands of ways to farm.

I suggest that if there must be SCS guidelines, they should be as general as possible. Maximum flexibility must be given to the local conservation districts, most of whom have elected officers, so that local conditions and local practices can be approved without interference from Washington. Local people care most about their land and water resources, and they should be the ones to make these decisions.

Also, I would like to call the Subcommittee's attention to Section 103(3), specifying which land classes come under jurisdiction of the Sodbuster bill. In Nebraska, we have 4.6 million acres of class IIIe land and 2.7 million acres of class IVe land under cultivation. Although these lands would be grandfathered by the legislation, there is still 1.9 million acres of IIIe and 2.5 million acres of IVe land that could potentially be farmed.

You may be surprised to hear me concerned about this ground after expressing my support for conservation. I want to note that farming this type of ground in Nebraska and conservation are not necessarily mutually exclusive.

Because of our irrigation resources and sandy land, erosion can be controlled and crops can be grown on class IIIe and IVe land. There are definitely problems with the degree of slope and other factors, but with irrigation and the fact that the sandy soil absorbs the water so quickly, erosion and blowing can be controlled with proper management practices.

I certainly hope that the economic opportunity irrigation affords would not be diminished by including these two land classifications. Again, if they must be included it is even more important that local officials make the decisions about who is allowed to have approved conservation practices and who is not.

This concludes my testimony. I hope you will accept my remarks as supportive and constructive, and I would be happy to answer any questions the Subcommittee might have.●

● Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, soil erosion is a very real problem for farmers in every part of the country. Recent reports of severe wind erosion in the Southwest and excessive rainfall and flooding in other parts of the country dramatically illustrate the damage that erosion can cause.

Mr. Chairman, it is vital in an increasingly competitive world marketplace that we encourage and work with farmers to help protect the productive capabilities of our Nation's cropland. In addition, effective erosion control practices will help preserve and improve the quality of the Nation's lakes, rivers and streams. Excessive runoff of topsoil and agricultural chemicals can result in costly dredging and cleanup efforts and cause severe damage to aquatic life.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House today represents a significant first step toward more effective control of soil erosion and the protection of our lakes and streams. Under this legislation, farmers would be encouraged to remove highly erodible land from production, or refrain from breaking out such land for the production of crops. I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. JONES, and the ranking minority member, Mr. COLEMAN, as well as the other members of the committee for their hard work on this bill.

With the shadow of large budget deficits hanging over their heads these gentlemen along with the other members of the committee reported a bill that is lean but effective. It will provide us with the type of experience and information needed next year when Congress takes up the 1985 farm bill.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is concern by some Members over certain provisions of this bill. I hope that we can discuss fully those concerns and reach agreement on this bill today.●

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the reported bill shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1. The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Soil Conservation Act of 1984".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there any amendments to section 1?

The Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I is as follows:

TITLE I

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "agricultural commodity" means any agricultural commodity planted and produced by annual tilling of the soil, or on an annual basis by one-trip planters;

(2) the term "conservation district" means any district or unit of State or local government formed under State or territorial law for the express purpose of developing and carrying out a local soil and water conservation program. Such districts or units of State or local government may be called conservation districts, soil conservation districts, soil and water conservation districts, resource conservation districts, natural resource districts, land conservation committees, or a similar name;

(3) the term "erosion-prone cropland" means land that is classified by the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture as class IIIe, IVe, VI, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification system in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and that has been devoted to the production of an agricultural commodity in three out of the past five years, or any other land in a State that the Soil Conservation Service determines has an erosion rate, in the production of an agricultural commodity, that is equal to or greater than the average erosion rate in the same State on any of the foregoing classes of land;

(4) the term "field" means that term as defined in section 718.2 of title 7 of the Code of Federal Regulations, except that any highly erodible land on which an agricultural commodity is produced after the date of enactment of this Act and which is not exempt under section 202 shall be considered as part of the field in which such land was included on such date of enactment;

(5) the term "highly erodible land" means land classified by the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture as class IVe, VIe, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification system in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, or any other land in a State that the Soil Conservation Service determines would have an erosion rate, if that land is used to produce an agricultural commodity, that is equal to or greater than the average erosion rate in the same State on any of the foregoing classes of land; and

(6) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there any amendments to title I?

The Clerk will designate title II.

The text of title II is as follows:

TITLE II

PROGRAM INELIGIBILITY FOR PRODUCTION ON HIGHLY ERODIBLE LAND

SEC. 201. Except as provided in sections 202 and 407(c) and notwithstanding any other provision of law, following the date of enactment of this Act any person who during any crop year produces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land on a field on which such highly erodible land is the predominant class shall be ineligible, as to any commodity produced during that crop year by such person, for—

(1) any type of price support or payments made available under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.), the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.), or any other Act;

(2) a farm storage facility loan under section 4 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714b(h));

(3) crop insurance under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.);

(4) a disaster payment under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.); or

(5) a loan made, insured, or guaranteed under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1921 et seq.) or any other provision of law administered by the Farmers Home Administration, if the Secretary determines that such loan will be used for a purpose that will contribute to excessive erosion on such field.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 202. (a) Section 201 shall not apply to any person who, during any crop year, produces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land on a field on which such highly erodible land is the predominant class if all the commodities so produced by such person during that crop year where—

(1) produced on any land that was cultivated to produce any of the 1973 through 1984 crops of agricultural commodities;

(2) planted before the date of enactment of this Act;

(3) planted during any crop year beginning before the date of enactment of this Act; or

(4) produced (A) in an area within a conservation district under a conservation system that has been approved by a conservation district after it has been determined that the conservation system is in conformity with technical standards set forth in the Soil Conservation Service technical guide for that conservation district, or (B) in an area, not within a conservation district, under a conservation system determined by the Secretary to be adequate for the production of such agricultural commodity on highly erodible land.

(b) Section 201 shall not apply to any loan made before the date of enactment of this Act.

COMPLETION OF LAND CAPABILITY CLASSIFICATION SURVEYS

SEC. 203. The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, complete soil surveys on those private lands that have not been classified as to land capability, and, insofar as possible, concentrate on those localities where significant amounts of highly erodible land are being converted to the production of agricultural commodities. In addition to other sums authorized to be appropriated by this Act, such sums as may be necessary are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GLICKMAN

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GLICKMAN: Page 6, line 20, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

Page 6, after line 19, insert the following new subsection: (b) Section 201 shall not apply to any highly erodible land during any crop year if such land was planted in reliance on the determination by the Soil Conservation Service that such land was not highly erodible land. The exemption allowed by the subsection shall not apply to any crop which was planted on any land after the Soil Conversation Service determines such land to be highly erodible land.

Mr. GLICKMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill that I think will do as much to Help American agriculture as well as urban interests as any farm bill we will deal with this year.

One of the key aspects of the working of this bill will be the determinations the Soil Conservation Service makes on land not presently classified according to the official SCS land capability classification system. If a producer has land not classified, he will have to rely on a determination by the SCS that the field will not have an erosion rate equal to or greater than comparable land in the same State; this decison will, obviously, be key to his planting since it will affect whether the crop grown on that land will be eligible for farm program assistance.

I want to be sure that producers who make a good-faith reliance on such a determination are not penalized if the SCS should find at some later date that the original decision was in error. My amendment will provide that safeguard.

The amendment provides that once a determination about the erodible characteristics of the land has been made, the producer can feel confident that the crop grown on that land and elsewhere on his land for that matter will not be declared ineligible for assistance. The safe harbor the amendment creates will remain in effect until SCS makes a decision at some future time and until the producer is notified of the change in the classification. Then, if the SCS reverses its original determination, and the producer is notified, he will have to comply with the new determination for the following crop year.

The amendment will be creating a safe harbor for crops in the ground, but will not create a safe harbor in perpetuity. It simply assures producers that the investment they make on advice from the SCS will not be jeopardized while the crop is in the ground, and it also provides a mechanism by which producers will have to curtail planting on highly erodible ground in the future if the SCS reverses its original decision.

I think this is an important bill and I urge the adoption of this additional safeguard.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague and a member of the subcommittee from the State of Kansas.

This amendment really does strengthen H.R. 3457, because it actually protects farmers who in good faith cultivated highly erodible land after having been misinformed by the Soil Conservation Service.

We have discussed the amendment and we have no objection to it at all on this side.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that. I would say if anything, this will encourage farmers to go to the SCS to get advisory opinions and maybe will help in compliance.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am glad to yield to my chairman.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I further would like to commend the gentleman. He makes a worthy contribution and enhances the legislation and certainly we have no objection to including this amendment in the general bill.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have looked at the gentleman's amendment and I see no reason to oppose it and we would accept it over here.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues on the Agriculture Committee are aware of my longstanding interest and concerns about sodbuster legislation. A couple of those concerns were outlined in my minority views to the report on this bill. I will not reiterate those now, but I do have some general observations to make.

Let me call attention to some of the very grievous impacts of this seemingly innocent and well-meaning legislation. The purported objective of this legislation is to stop sodbusting. This legislation does not stop sodbusting. Tax considerations and poor livestock prices have caused sodbusting. The purported objective of this legislation is to stop Federal subsidies to newly broken land. Newly broken land has no crop base, no cropland history. As a consequence, it receives no taxpayer subsidies.

What does this legislation do? This legislation puts into place a vehicle for forcing conservation measures using farm program benefits to blackmail compliance. This legislation takes managerial decisions from the greatest conservationist of all, the farmer, and makes those managerial decisions subject to the judgmental decisions of a bureaucrat. This legislation adds regulations when none existed. This legislation adds more Government employment. This legislation adds cost to the Government. This legislation confiscates property rights.

It adds all the negative impacts that many of us have campaigned against and worked against and yet it does not and will not stop the conversion of grassland to cropland. This legislation is a vehicle to land use regulations. Many a farm operator will rue the day that this legislation was signed into law by a President who vowed to cut regulation, cut Government employment, and cut Government costs. I would urge that you support the managerial ability of our agricultural producers and vote against making him subserviant to local bureaucratic judgmental decisions.

Vote against H.R. 3457.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I appreciate the opportunity to take a few minutes to make a few comments and observations on our actions with respect to this particular piece of legislation.

Most of us realize that the time has come to recognize that our Federal agricultural programs, however well intended, have had some detrimental side effects. Among them has been the enticement of plowing up and planting fragile land.

While at this time I will not get into a debate on the merits of Federal price and income support programs, it is worth mentioning their negative impact on soil conservations. Sometimes it seems that no matter how well intended Federal action might be, the end result is disastrous.

I am pleased that my colleagues have recognized this conflict in Federal agricultural policy and have moved to elminate it.

I do have reservations, however, about H.R. 3457 in the form in which it has been reported from the committee. In our zeal to correct an environmental problem we must carefully weigh our actions.

The agricultural community is undergoing some difficult times, and I think it is accurate to say that none of us want to bring further hardship on rural America. It can be safely said that many producers who do not implement soil conservation measures where needed would like to do so but simply cannot afford it. Studies have shown that soil conservation measures are often undertaken by those who can devote financial resources necessary to do so, yet a great deal of land has been treated that may not be considered to be high priority.

Given the determination that much soil conservation is left undone due to economic constraints, I have concerns over the severity of H.R. 3457 in its reported form. Our intent here is to reduce soil erosion, not to put farmers out of business.

It is with this concern that I lend my reserved support to H.R. 3457. It is relevant to add at this time that I have done a great deal of work on this issue of soil conservation in recent months and my findings on this legislation have been mixed.

It is for that reason that I introduced legislation of my own, H.R. 5200, the National Agricultural Soil

Protection Act, which would work in conjunction with this bill, H.R. 3457, yet offer a less damaging, more positive approach to the problem. The approach that I have undertaken in H.R. 5200 has been to provide those farmers most in need with the financial assistance to adopt soil conservation measures which they were previously unable to afford.

Additionally, H.R. 5200 proposes structural changes within the Department of Agriculture and on the regional level to allow for greater cooperation between natural resource agencies at USDA and reduced duplication and competition.

Therefore, as I indicated, I am going to support H.R. 3457 with some reservations, and I urge my colleagues to consider the legislation that I previously introduced, H.R. 5200, as we begin work on the 1985 farm bill.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAUB. I am happy to yield.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I would like to commend the gentleman from Nebraska for his statement and for his contribution and constructive innovation in his bill he has introduced. He is certainly working to repair the damage that has been done over the years to our topsoil, and his involvement and his constructive suggestions are going to be heeded, I believe.

I appreciate the gentleman for working with the committee and in the future we look forward to additional leadership from the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DAUB. I want to thank the gentleman for the compliment paid and want to indicate that this morning I introduced another part of that package which I hope will be referred to the Ways and Means Committee, which is a 10-percent tax credit incentive. It alters the way in which we have been inviting people in the watershed and special district areas that are created and better defined in this piece of legislation to get into the program and find a way in which we can stretch those very precious resources that are first within the USDA, and the talent that we have federally to administer these programs, coupled with the precious resource of tax money to implement some of these programs and invite more of our actual growers and producers to participate in a positive way in soil and water conservation.

I thank the gentleman and thank the committee for its time and yield back the balance of the time I may have.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I want to state to my colleagues, and specifically to the two Members who spoke prior to me, that I understand their concerns. I want to reemphasize, though, to both of my two colleagues who preceded me, and I want to make it clear to all the Members and as a part of the legislative history, that nothing in this bill imposes demands on any farmer or rancher concerning what may be or may not be done with his or her land.

Now let me go to the other part. We have had soil conservation legislation by which the farmer, the rancher, and the Government entered into a partnership. We shared the cost. The Government approved the proposal and much land was made productive land. The land was terraced, land was leveled. There was much good done by the Soil Conservation Service in partnership with the individual farmer and the individual rancher.

What we do here, of course, I will have to admit, and all of us would have to admit is not perfect, it is not the end solution, and I assure my colleague from Nebraska that our subcommittee and our committee will take a look at his legislation. It is an ongoing process.

But what we do here, which may seem onerous to some, is not. It is a continuation of that partnership. But what was happening was that one arm working in a partnership was working the land, terracing, leveling, and making it more productive, conserving it.

On the other hand, we were giving assistance in raising certain commodities, certain crops, without any regard to what we were doing over here on the right.

And what land was put in reserve or what land was put in setaside, was left entirely up to the producer without taking into consideration the other aspects of our soil conservation programs.

An attempt is made here now to put them together. You cannot share the benefits of this program here and undo the benefits that the Nation and a region would have gained, what we did with the other program. Not perfect, I agree, but a step in the right direction, I hope.

But never will we yield to any temptation or never will we be oblivious or disregard the concerns which have been mentioned by my two colleagues which are valid concerns. And it is not our intention to do contrary to what they have expressed concerns over.

So what I would say is we need to continue working together. That is a step forward, a modest step; always providing my assurance, and the legislative history always providing the safeguard as we see it; always listening to concerns. But we need to move and I think this is a good first step in this direction.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Montana.

Mr. MARLENEE. I thank the chairman for yielding.

I have great respect for the chairman and his fairness in presenting legislation and hearing all sides, as I do for the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. JONES.

I do have great concern about the legislation. I do not support the payment of subsidies to newly turned land, especially when those newly turned lands are going on, where the sod busting that is going on at a very rapid rate and with a lot of acres.

But I hope that in correcting or attempting to correct those abuses that we do not heap a great deal of abuse on the ordinary, average producer that we have throughout the United States of America. I have a lot of confidence in that producer.

But if those abuses do arise and they do come to our attention, I hope the chairman will join me in correcting the agency or correcting those abuses as they see, as we see fit and they arise out there. And I am sure there will be some arise because we cannot, we are not all knowing when we write legislation.

But my concern is great enough to oppose the legislation. I am sure this legislation is going to pass. Barring that, I am sure we are going to have to come back and relook at some of this and adjust it.

For instance, Montana has only had 90 percent or 60 percent of its land soil-surveyed. We are going to have to adjust that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DE LA GARZA) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DE LA GARZA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Let me assure the gentleman from Montana, my dear distinguished colleague, that we honor and respect his opinion and certainly would not do otherwise.

But our assurance to him of continuous oversight, of continuous specific concern to the areas of concern that have been brought out this afternoon, so that we may not, as our intention is not, prejudice anyone.

Mr. MARLENEE. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAUB. Let me speak for myself when I say that indeed the very positive and constructive work that has been accomplished by the subcommittee and Mr. JONES has worked so very hard on a bill which I can say right now, because of what you said, Mr. Chairman, is one, and your remarks are words which I wish to be associated with, I too agree, this legislation is a good, positive step forward.

The concern I raise simply is that there can be some refinement of this idea of how we really do finally implement the sod-buster preventions which are so fundamentally addressed by this piece of legislation.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. We will continue working with the distinguished gentleman in that respect. Again, I promise and I know that the subcommittee chairman would agree with me, that we will, should this become law; we will have continuous oversight and continuous work to achieve ultimately, hopefully, the perfect solution or as near as we possibly can. Let me thank all the Members who have worked so diligently on this legislation and again assure all my colleagues of our continuous overview of this program.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I will not be long, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to commend the chairman of the Conservation Subcommittee, Mr. ED JONES. His perseverance is largely responsible for bringing this excellent legislation before the House.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us today, H.R. 3457, is a comprehensive one which will at long last give us the tools to affect the underlying causes of soil erosion. It recognizes that effective soil conservation legislation must pursue two goals simultaneously. First, it establishes a program to take out of production the highly erodible farmland that is responsible for the lion's share of current soil loss. Second, it sets some responsible ground rules regarding the granting of Federal farm program benefits that will discourage the breaking out of highly erodible land not yet under cultivation.

It is a real treat for me to see H.R. 3457 finally before the committee for markup. I have for several years now promoted the need for linkage between Federal conservation programs and commodity support programs. In the 96th Congress, I introduced H.R. 3681, the first bill which would require soil and water conservation plans on farms which wished to be eligible for price support benefits. That bill caused quite a stir at the time. For a while I thought that it might even cause another tractorcade.

Now, it seems that we have come full circle. The bill before the committee today would deny Federal farm program benefits to farmers who persisted in cropping highly erodible soils without an acceptable conservation plan. It has overwhelming support.

I shall start my discussion with comments on the conservation reserve that the bill establishes, then proceed to its sodbuster provisions. I choose this order because I believe that you will see just how important the sodbuster provisions are once you learn why we must establish a conservation reserve if we are to have any real hope of reducing soil erosion.

In the mid 1970's, the Federal Government exhorted farmers to farm as many acres as they had available so that the United States could substantially increase its exports of food and feed grains. Farmers responded not only by removing shelterbelts and other erosion control structures which used land that they felt they could crop, but also by breaking out highly erodible fields previously protected from erosion by perennial grasses and trees.

At the time, the market price for grains was adequate to encourage such actions. Many of these newly cultivated fields, however, were not suited to year in, year out production of annual crops because their shallow topsoil and lack of adequate moisture made consistently profitable yields unreliable. Much of this risk of failure, however, was shifted from the farmer to the Federal Government by virtue of the fact that the crops grown on these marginal soils were eligible for commodity price supports, crop insurance, Farmers Home loans and disaster payments, each of which is federally subsidized. In effect, Government policy encouraged the cropping of fragile soils and Government programs minimized the financial risk of so doing.

According to the Natural Resource Inventory conducted in 1977 by the Soil Conservation Service, much of the fragile land that is today contributing a disproportionate share of our total soil loss was converted to cropland in the expansionary period of 1973 through 1976. Preliminary data from the 1982 N.R.I. indicate that there were 421 million acres of cropland in production in 1982, and that at least one half of the additional 8 million acres which came into production since 1977 is highly erodible. Much of this fragile land would never have been brought into production if federal farm program benefits had not minimized the risk of farming such soils.

The average erosion rate on all cropland in the United States is only about 5 tons per acre. Since soil is generated from parent material at about this rate, 5 tons per acre is considered an acceptable rate of erosion within the agricultural community.

The rate of erosion on what this bill terms highly erodible soils, however, is approximately 20 tons per acre, four times the acceptable rate. The highly erodible soils now under cultivation represent only 5 percent of the Nation's cropland base, yet yield 43 percent of all the soil lost from farmland. Such is the magnitude of the problem on these soils. The attached table No. 1, which I would like included in the RECORD, further describes the situation for certain States.

The fact that so small a portion of our farmland contributes so large a share of all erosion is, ironically, encouraging. It means that with a carefully designed program, a major share of all soil loss can be eliminated.

The conservation reserve of H.R. 3457 is directed toward this highly erodible land. By offering cost-share assistance for necessary conservation practices and annual land rental payments to farmers who will plant such soils to grass or trees and maintain them in such a use for 7 to 15 years, a considerable reduction in soil erosion can be achieved.

Why is it so important to control soil erosion? First, the topsoil that we are losing is the source of our much-envied agricultural productivity. Annual crops use only the top 10 to 12 inches of soil. Over the millennia this fraction has developed unique physical and chemical properties that make abundant crop yields possible. Soil erosion destroys this capacity by stripping away this layer of soil. What remains is a thinner layer of topsoil which forces plant roots to seek sustenance in subsoil which has a far poorer ability to hold the nutrients and water necessary for large yields. The net result is lower productivity and higher costs—What actually destroyed the agricultural base that made Rome and Athens the wealthy city-states that they were was soil erosion. Degradation of their mostly hilly cropland caused the water table to fall to depths which plant roots could not reach.

Soil erosion reduces agricultural productivity. If crop yields per acre are the measure of productivity, it may appear that soil erosion is of no consequence. But if erosion results in a need for ever greater quantities of fertilizer in order to maintain per acre yields, then the productivity of that input actually has declined.

There are, however, other costs that are more quantifiable. Soil, when it is washed from cropland, finds its way into watercourses. To the hydrologist, such soil becomes sediment; to those charged with keeping our waterways open and our water potable, it is a very costly form of pollution.

The Mississippi River drains nearly two-thirds of the Nation. Much of the cropland within the drainage basin is level to only gently sloping and does not suffer a great deal of soil loss. However, the remainder erodes at rates of 5 to over 50 tons of soil per acre per year.

The following chart, not included in the RECORD, demonstrates that, in a single year, the Mississippi's drainage area yields 900 million tons of eroded soil.

Accounting of soil transportation within the Mississippi River Basin [1]

Average annual area yield (annually)	900,000,000
A Soil lost to Gulf of Mexico	255,000,000
B Sediment inflow into dams within subbasins off Mississippi mainstem	341,828,000
C Sediment dredged from river channel (for navigation purposes only)	70,000,000
Total (A+B+C)	666,828,000
Soil moving within basin but not necessarily in river system	233,000,000

[1] From "Characterization of the suspended-sediment regime and bed-material gradation of the Mississippi River Basin" Potamology program (P-1), U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Waterways Experimental Station, Vicksburg, Miss. (August 1981).

As you can see, 74 percent of this soil load finds it way into the Mississippi River or its tributaries and setbacks. Indeed the Mississippi delta is the product of over 255 million tons of that sediment moving all the way to the Gulf of Mexico where it is deposited. Eighty percent of what is dropped at the mouth of the river is silt and other fine particles that are the most valuable fractions of topsoil.

The Army Corps of Engineers reports that some 70 million tons of soil per year are dredged from the lower Mississippi mainstem alone so that it may be kept open to barge and boat traffic. The annual expense of this activity is $170 million. Nationally, $300 million to $350 million is spent each year on dredging water-borne sediment from rivers.

The sediment load in the Mississippi is so great that the Corps has had to build weirs along its length to interrupt the transport of soil before it moves to the lower reaches of the river. Some 341,828,000 tons of such soil per year are caught by 362 dams of greater than 75,000 acre-feet of design capacity. The cost of removing this sediment ranges from $1 to $3 per ton per year.

The above figures do not include the costs of dredging the upstream areas of the Mississippi, its tributaries and associated ports; or of cleaning up commercial fisheries, recreation areas, flood control dams; or of building structures for sediment control.

Finally, there are many communities which must remove sediment from water before they can use it for drinking and other community services. This is a critical activity because the fine particles which are removed carry the chemical elements that are hazardous to human health. The city of St. Louis spends $5 to $6 million annually to precipitate soil sediment from Mississippi River water. Virtually all of this cleanup must be done in the spring when snowmelt and rainfall start to move soil that has been destabilized by agricultural cultivation.

These costs are avoidable. The conservation reserve that we propose will reduce soil erosion on that fast eroding protion of our cropland and thereby make unnecessary much of the recurrent annual expenditure for water cleanup activities. I urge you to approve this section without change so that we may break this vicious cycle of erosion, sedimentation, and cleanup.

The conservation reserve will cost us money, it is true. Its costs, however, will be more than offset by the savings generated by a reduced level of expenditure for the water cleanup activities enumerated above and by a reduction in the rate at which our farmland's productivity is lost.

Let me now turn to the sodbuster provisions of this bill. The term "sodbuster," of course, describes the practice by which farmers break out highly erodible soils that have been previously protected from erosion by their grass or forest cover. Sodbusting is primarily to blame for the fact that only 5 percent of our Nation's cropland today yields 43 percent of our total soil loss. The fact is that most of this 5 percent should never have been plowed up in the first place. Yet it was, largely because Federal farm program benefits encouraged farmers to cultivate this fragile land.

If we are to minimize further sodbusting and the need for costly water cleanup and conservation programs, we must do our utmost to insure that no more highly erodible land is brought into production. To accomplish this, we must reorient our Federal farm programs so that they no longer encourage the annual cultivation of these fragile soils.

The sodbuster provisions of H.R. 3457 will deny to farmers who persist in breaking out highly erodible soils the price supports, crop insurance, FmHA loans and disaster payments that shift much of the financial risk of farming such soils to the Federal Government. The sodbuster provisions will not deny the farmer the right to farm highly erodible soils. It will simply deny him the taxpayers' help in doing so unless he agrees to farm them in such a way that will not create unacceptable soil losses.

There are some who feel that these sodbuster provisions are too tough. By contrast, they would only restrict the denial of farm program benefits to the particular produce grown on the newly broken out, highly erodible land. All other crops grown by that farmer on other lands would continue to be eligible.

This makes no sense. For years we have been passing legislation to control soil erosion. Little of it has reached to the core of the problem as does this bill. If we weaken the sodbuster provisions, we will be saying to those who farm highly erodible land, we only partially want to discourage your unwise actions. Preserving the committee's language firmly says, if in the future you farm highly erodible land carelessly, you will farm without the Government's financial assistance. If you wish to benefit from that assistance, you simply must keep your soil loss to an acceptable level: The choice is yours.

Some would also limit the kinds of land that would be restricted by sodbuster. This makes even less sense than the previous suggestion. Land is classified by USDA according to its capability to grow crops. Classes 1 and 2 are generally considered to be relatively stable and not highly erodible.

Classes 3 through 8, however, have limitations which make farming them problematic. Soil loss is largely a function of slope—anything with greater than a 15 percent slope is highly erodible if not farmed carefully. The SCS designates such soils with a small letter "e" suffix. Classes 3e, 4e, and 6e are thus highly erodible, as are all soils in classes 7 and 8. Four of these classes are enumerated in this bill.

Class 3e, however, is not enumerated in the bill but is otherwise described. It is not enumerated because the Committee felt that a broader description than that which the capability classification system ascribes to 3e land would give the Secretary needed flexibility in classifying these traditional soils. Although this is a class of soils that are too steep to be farmed safely without attention to soil conserving practices, some have suggested eliminating it. Like the earlier proposal to limit the scope of the sodbuster restrictions, one must ask, why? We are trying to prevent further degradation of our soil and water resources without the expenditure of Federal tax dollars. Soil Conservation Service statistics clearly prove that 3e soils are by far the most vulnerable to sodbusting in the future. The following table indicates why.

	Million acres—
	Now cropped	Not yet cropped
Category:
3e	83	100
4e	32	89
6e	10	157
7	2.8	270
8	.037	6

From the fact that far more 3e land is now being farmed than all other highly erodible categories combined, one can see that farmers clearly prefer it. Second, farmers now till almost 1 acre of 3e soil for every acre not yet broken out, while they only till about 1 acre of 4e, the "next best," for every 3 acres not yet out tilled. Remember that as you move from 3e through 4e, 6e and 7 to 8, the difficulty and expense of farming grow considerably. The "best" highly erodible soil, therefore, is 3e, and there are still some 100 million acres that can be broken out. Ease of farming dictates that this land will be broken out first and that, therefore, this class is at greatest risk. We cannot let this land slip through our fingers. If we do, we will pay for its erosion through the costs of controlling it and cleaning up the water that it pollutes, or through the costs of putting it into some future conservation reserve.

I want to remind those who worry that this may inconvenience some farmers that governmental cost sharing money through the A.C.P. program will be available to help those farmers install the necessary conservation practices. The farmer will therefore not be left on his own by this legislation. He will not in any way, shape or form be denied the use of his land or absolute control over it. If he, however, wishes to receive Federal farm program benefits to minimize his own financial risk of farming marginal land, he will have to follow accepted conservation practices in order to control soil erosion. As I noted, the Government will even pay a goodly share of the cost of doing that. Ironically, this bill will even make him a better farmer. By installing these conservation practices, his topsoil will be conserved. The chance of crop loss due to drought and flash flooding will be reduced. The cost of fertilization will also be reduced because soil nutrients will not be washed away.

For years we have struggled with soil erosion. We have spent billions of dollars stabilizing land and purifying water. Most of these actions have been either after the fact or piecemeal. This legislation offers us the first comprehensive attack on the root of the problem—highly erodible soils already being farmed and highly erodible soils in danger of being farmed. I urge you to approve this legislation without change.

I again commend the chairman, ranking member of the subcommittee and the chairman and ranking member of the full committee for this fine piece of legislation.

I yield the balance of my time.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have noticed several typographical errors that occurred in the printing of the bill, H.R. 3457 as reported by the Committee on Agriculture.

I understand that these errors will be corrected in the printing of the bill as passed by the House. For the information of the Members, I wish to provide a list of the corrections that need to be made.

The list is as follows:

Page 2, line 17, and page 3, line 1-3, insert quotation remarks around the words "conservation districts," "soil conservation districts," "soil and water conservation districts," "resource conservation districts," "natural resource districts," and "land conservation committees,".

Page 3, line 24, strike out the period and insert thereof a semi-colon.

Page 6, line 2, strike out "where" and insert in lieu thereof "were".

Page 11, line 3, strike out "detemines" and insert in lieu thereof "determines".

Page 13, line 23, strike out "of" and insert in lieu thereof "for".

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the legislation. There is one aspect that I am happy to see now reported in the bill that has been corrected, that was brought up by the gentleman from Iowa, and when the legislation was brought up in the committee.

That is the question where you have highly erodible land and other land not highly erodible contained in the same field. And even though the highly erodible land may be predominant in that one field, yet unless the highly erodible land is broken out, the other land which is not highly erodible will still remain eligible for crop programs and the land that is not highly erodible can be broken out and the crop grown thereon is eligible for crop programs.

As I understand the bill before the House, if I have a 100-acre field and part of it is flat and not highly erodible and a hilly part also, and 60 percent of it is very highly erodible and the other 40 percent is not; that I go in there and break out the 40 percent in that one field which is not highly erodible, yet I can still put a corn crop on it and I will still be eligible for program payments and could sign up on that corn.

I am pleased to see that, because otherwise we would be penalizing persons, requiring them to go in and fence off and divide a field to be able to do the very same thing.

As I understand the legislation now, unless the highly erodible land is actually broken out in a field in which highly erodible land is predominant, then the prohibitions against program participation do not apply and I think that the legislation has been improved by this and I wish to commend the gentleman from Tennessee also and also the gentleman from Missouri for this legislation.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title II?

If not, the Clerk will designate title III.

The text of title III is as follows:

TITLE III

CROPLAND BASE PROTECTION STUDY

SEC. 301. On or before February 15, 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate, a report containing a detailed study and analysis, including legislative recommendations where appropriate, of various voluntary set-aside programs, including those recommended by farm or conservation groups. Such study shall include an analysis of a program under which persons who set aside cropland to approved perennial grasses or legumes as part of a crop rotation pattern to reduce soil erosion or build soil productivity (1) may qualify under future commodity stabilization programs to have such lands designated as cropland in rotation for the purpose of establishing a normal acreage base for the farm, or (2) may designate such cropland as set-aside or conserving-use acreage under such programs. Such study shall also include an analysis of the impact of any voluntary set-aside program on water quality.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title III?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STANGELAND

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STANGELAND: Page 8, immediately after line 2, insert the following new section:

ANALYSIS OF USDA CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 302. The Secretary shall conduct an economic study of the costs and benefits of all current soil conservation programs, including research and extension efforts. This study shall be led by the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). Agencies responsible for administering USDA's soil conservation programs will be responsible for providing necessary data and assistance as required to complete the study.

The study will emphasize an economic analysis of current USDA soil conservation programs. The cost-benefit, both direct and indirect, analyses of these programs should be measured and compared to a situation in which no such programs were in effect. The benefits measured should include, but not necessarily be limited to, increases in, or maintenance of, onsite program benefits, such as topsoil maintenance and soil productivity, and offsite program benefits, such as improved water quality and reduced dredging. Program costs should include, but not necessarily be limited to, state and local matching funds and direct or indirect costs imposed on those outside federal, state and local governments, who assist with, or take part in, USDA conservation programs.

The Secretary shall submit to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report containing the results of this study within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act."

Mr. STANGELAND (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I am introducing an amendment to H.R. 3457 that will require the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct an economic analysis of all current USDA soil conservation programs, including research and extension efforts. Close to $1 billion is projected to be spent on these programs in fiscal year 1984 on top of the billions of dollars that have already been spent by USDA for soil conservation during the past half-century. Nevertheless, I am yet to see a comprehensive and systematic report that summarizes the costs and benefits of these programs in a straightforward manner. I do not think it is too much to ask for such a study in view of the additional proposed spending for soil conservation in the bill we are now considering. All I want to find out is which of the current programs are the most effective. In other words, to maximize the soil saved from these programs we must have this information.

I am proposing that the Economic Research Service (ERS) of USDA undertake this economic study. The study will be due in 9 months so the results can be made available for deliberations on the 1985 farm bill.

The study will examine such benefits as increased or maintained agricultural productivity as well as offsite benefits, including water quality enhancement and reduced dredging costs on our waterways. Costs addressed will not only include Government program costs (Federal, State and local), but also the costs imposed on farmers and others who assist with or participate in USDA's soil conservation programs. I look forward to seeing the results of such a study. Financial resources are scarce in the Federal Government, and it is only commonsense to evaluate the soil conservation programs already on the books if we are going to add new ones.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANGELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have discussed this amendment. I think that both sides here agree that this amendment is worthy and that we should go forward with it. This is appropriately designated in the bill in the proper place because it follows a study that we are going to also conduct.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANGELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly join the chairman in supporting this amendment. I would like to say that the gentleman from Minnnesota is a very hard-working member of our committee and this is an example of his contributions.

I certainly would accept the amendment.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee chairman and I thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN).

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. STANGELAND).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman—

Where soil is lost, civilization often goes with it. Today, soil is as essential for the production of food and fiber as it was during the Neolithic. The decline of our soil is not easily perceived. It is a chronic, slow process without the urgency of an environmental crisis. Yet, soil is the basis for our very existence; it enables us to live off the rocks on their way to the sea.—Dr. Priscilla Grew, Director of the California Department of Conservation.

Today we confront a potential crisis which if unchecked could impact us as dramatically and more severely than the oil crisis of the 1970's.

Just as countries everywhere became dependent on OPEC oil in the 1970's, so they now depend on North America for grain. And just as Middle Eastern oil is being depleted, so too are North American soils. But here the similarity ends, for where substitutes can be developed for oil to run our cars and heat our homes, there is no ready alternative to soil in food production.

Our Nation's most precious natural resource, its once plentiful supply of farmland, is being washed away by rain, blown away by wind and raped by poor farming practices.

Soil erosion may be the most pervasive and persistent environmental problem in the United States and yet it is so gradual, so subtle a process that it has not been viewed as a crisis. Annually erosion is costing the nation about 6.5 billion tons of soil according to USDA estimates.

Annual erosion on Ohio farmland totals more than 68 million tons of soil, about 72 percent of which is on cropland.

Since the Dust Bowl in the 1930's when huge clouds of top soil blew across the country and were washed away in the Atlantic Ocean, the U.S. Department of Agriculture has made reducing erosion a prime objective. Yet, despite over 50 years of Federal technical and financial assistance, soil erosion continues to be a serious national problem.

In 1935 agents of the newly created Soil Conservation Service went across the country teaching farmers how to save their land, millions of dollars were spent building terraces, planting trees as wind breaks, trying new methods of strip-cropping and crop rotation. The experiment worked, erosion slowed and America's farmlands became productive once more.

As we enter the 1980's, however, we face a worldwide shortage of productive cropland and a growing global demand for food products. This demand for increased agricultural production and the opening of giant foreign markets for American grains and beans in the 1970's brought about dramatic changes in agriculture which substantially accelerated the pace of erosion.

In the early 1970's the Department of Agriculture stopped paying farmers to keep land idle and told them to plant fencepost to fencepost to increase production. More than willing to share in the new export boom, farmers began plowing under pasture and grazing lands, some never before touched and previously thought too fragile or not fertile enough. Frequently this was marginal, easily eroded land such as hillsides or sloping fields.

Basic conservation measures were abandoned. In some places, the rows of trees and hedges orginally planted as erosion-controlling windbreaks got in the way of large modern farm equipment and were removed. The availability of cheap nitrogen ferlitizer led farmers to abandon traditional crop rotations for continuous planting of corn and other row crops.

Since the Soviet entry into the U.S. market in 1972, American overseas sales have increased dramatically. About 1 of every 3 acres now produces food for export, bringing home more than $40 billion, and representing one of the few bright spots in our balance of trade picture.

While world food output has more than doubled since 1950, that impressive increase has entailed land abuse so severe that at least one-fifth and up to one-third of the world's cropland is losing topsoil at a rate that is undermining its long-term productivity. Nearly one-third of Ohio's cropland is eroding at a rate that will hurt long-term productivity and has recently been termed "intolerable" by State conservationists.

In 1981 the Department of Agriculture estimated that the productivity of 34 percent of U.S. cropland was declining because of excessive loss of top soil. It is estimated that the productivity capability of 1 to 1.5 million acres of farm land is lost annually because of erosion. That is an area six times the size of Chicago.

Further, soil erosion is a widespread global phenomenon and a problem which few countries have been able to address effectively. A 1977 U.N. survey reported that almost one-fifth of the world's cropland is now being steadily degraded.

Soil in other countries such as the Soviet Union, Indonesia, Pakistan, and Ethiopia are so badly deteriorated that even more pressure is placed on U.S. soils, as North America is increasingly looked upon as the bread basket of the world. As John Timmons, an economics professor who specializes in natural resources issues at Iowa State University puts it, "in effect, we are exporting our soil and water quality in the form of food and feed grains."

Domestically, food prices are rising, and a 1981 national agricultural lands study reported that consumers could experience a 6- to 8-percent increase in food prices for every million acres of agricultural land lost. While our ability to continue to feed our own people in the forseeable future is not in serious question, our ability to continue to export our agricultural products looms as a large question mark. This comes at a time when forecasts for foreign demand and supply suggest that the 1980's could be a period of near-record growth in demand, slower growth in production and increased world dependence on agricultural commodities from the United States.

Despite the Department of Agriculture's recognition that soil erosion is its highest conservation priority, a recent GAO report found that the problem is becoming more serious and USDA programs are not keeping pace with the problem.

The situation is further exaccerbated by the fact that adopting erosion control practices is, in most cases, not cost-effective for the farmer. Detailed studies on the economics of soil conservation do indicate that short-term costs of conservation measures often exceed short-term benefits.

The alternative, however is to face long-term food scarcity as we consume the productive resource bases itself, engaging in what Lester Brown, head of Worldwatch Institute, terms "the biological equivalent of deficit financing." If the costs are too high today, the price to future generations may be even greater, as the worlds supply of land and food produced on it continue to diminish.

This week we have before us a bill which, though it will not stop erosion, will initiate measures to slow the rate of future conversion of fragile lands.

The Soil Conservation Act of 1984 would make farmers planting on highly erodible land—sodbusters—ineligible for Federal price-support or commodity payments, farm storage loans, Federal crop insurance, disaster payments, and any Farmers Home Administration insured or guaranteed loans.

The bill would also establish a conservation reserve program enabling the Department of Agriculture to contract with owners of erosion-prone cropland to preserve and improve farm soil and water resources.

As I said, this bill will not eliminate erosion, but it is a move to address the critical problem of soil erosion and a step that must be taken.

While both economic and political pressures can foster a short-term approach, pressures to wring too much from the land in the short run can destroy it over the long run.

As Lester Brown said, "We have not inherited the Earth from our fathers, we are borrowing it from our children." We have an obligation to protect their heritage.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to title III?

If not, the Clerk will designate title IV.

The text of title IV is as follows:

TITLE IV

CONSERVATION RESERVE PROGRAM

SEC. 401. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall formulate and carry out a program with owners and operators of erosion-prone cropland to assist them in conserving and improving the soil and water resources of their farms or ranches. In any such program, the Secretary shall include other than erosion-prone cropland upon a demonstration by the conservation district that a serious soil erosion problem exists on such land, or in an area not within a conservation district if the Secretary determines that such a serious soil erosion problem exists.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 402. (a) The Secretary shall enter into contracts during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1987, of not less than seven nor more than fifteen years for the purpose of carrying out this title. In such contract, the owner or operator shall agree to—

(1) effectuate during the agreement period a plan approved by a conservation district (or in an area not within a conservation district, a plan approved by the Secretary) for converting erosion-prone cropland normally devoted to the production of an agricultural commodity on a farm or ranch into a less intensive use, such as pasture, permanent grass or legumes, or trees substantially in accordance with the schedule outlined therein, except to the extent that any requirements thereof are waived or modified by the Secretary;

(2) forfeit all rights to further payments under the contract and refund to the United States all payments, with interest, received thereunder upon the violation of the contract at any stage during the time the owner or operator has control of the land if the Secretary, after considering the recommendations of the soil conservation district and the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, determines that such violation is of such a nature as to warrant termination of the contract, or make refunds or accept such payment adjustments as the Secretary may deem appropriate if the Secretary determines that the violation by the owner or operator does not warrant termination of the contract;

(3) upon transfer of the owner or operator's right and interest in the farm or ranch during the contract period, forfeit all rights to further payments under the contract and refund to the United States all payments received thereunder, or accept such payment adjustments or make such refunds as the Secretary may deem appropriate and consistent with the objectives of this title, unless the transferee of any such land agrees with the Secretary to assume all obligations under the contract;

(4) not conduct any harvesting or grazing of otherwise make commercial use of the forage or trees on land that is subject to the contract unless it is expressly permitted in the contract, or adopt any practice specified in the contract by the Secretary as a practice that would tend to defeat the purposes of the contract; and

(5) such additional provisions as the Secretary determines are desirable and are included in the contract to effectuate the purposes of the program or to facilitate the practical administration thereof.

(b) The plan, as described in subsection (a)(1), for converting erosion-prone cropland normally devoted to the production of agricultural commodities on a farm or ranch into a less-intensive use shall set forth the conservation measures and practices to be installed by the owner or operator during the agreement period and the commercial use, if any, to be made of the land during such period and may provide for the permanent retirement of cropland base and allotment history for such land.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY

SEC. 403. In return for such agreement by the owner or operator, the Secretary shall agree to (1) provide technical assistance, (2) share the cost of carrying out the conservation measures and practices set forth in the contract for which the Secretary determines that cost-sharing is appropriate and in the public interest, and (3) pay an annual land rental fee, for a period not in excess of the duration of the contract, on those acres of erosion-prone cropland that are placed in a conservation use and for any cropland base and allotment history that the owner or operator agrees to retire permanently.

COST-SHARING

SEC. 404. The Secretary shall base the amount of cost sharing for conservation measures and practices under this title on that part of the total cost thereof that the Secretary determines is necessary and appropriate to effectuate the installation and maintenance of the conservation plantings and practices for the normally expected life of such a planting or practice.

LAND RENTAL

SEC. 405. The Secretary shall determine on the basis of bids received from owners and operators the amount of land rental to be paid for converting erosion-prone cropland to less intensive uses and for any cropland base or allotment history that the owner or operator agrees to retire permanently. In awarding contracts the Secretary shall give priority to those bids that will result in the lowest cost to the Government when calculated on the basis of all relevant factors, including the following—

(1) tons of soil saved on the diverted land, as calculated by the difference between the estimated soil loss on the precontract cropping system employed by the owner or operator and the system that will be installed as a result of the contract;

(2) the acres per year of erosion-prone cropland diverted;

(3) the units of agricultural commodity that would be diverted from production under the terms of the contract;

(4) the number of acres of cropland base and allotment history that the owner or operator agree to retire permanently as a condition of the contract; and

(5) the value of the cost sharing to be provided for installation of conservation measures and practices.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 406. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, payments under this title shall be made in cash or in commodities in such amount and on such time schedule as agreed upon and specified in the contract. Such payments may be made in advance of determination of performance.

(b) If a producer who is entitled to any such payment or compensation dies, becomes incompetent, or disappears before receiving such payment or compensation, or is succeeded by another who renders or completes the required performance, the Secretary shall make or provide such payment or compensation, in accordance with regulations and without regard to any other provisions of law, in such manner as the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable in light of all of the circumstances.

(c) In carrying out the conservation reserve program, the Secretary may not enter into contracts with producers that would require payments to producers under this title in excess of $50,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, in excess of $75,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and in excess of $100,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987. The Secretary may enter into contracts in any fiscal year that require payments to producers only to such extent or in such amounts as provided in appropriation Acts.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 407. (a) The Secretary shall provide adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers, including provision of sharing, on a fair and equitable basis, in payments under the program.

(b) The Secretary may terminate any contract by mutual agreement with the owner or operator if the Secretary determines that such termination would be in the public interest, and may agree to such modification or contracts as the Secretary may determine to be desirable to carry out the purposes of this title or facilitate its administration.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of title II of this Act, the Secretary shall provide by appropriate regulations for preservation of cropland base and allotment history, applicable to acreage diverted from the production of crops under this title, for the purpose of any Federal program under which such history is used as a basis for participation in such program or for an allotment or other limitation in such program, unless the owner or operator agrees under the contract to retire permanently such cropland base and allotment history.

(d) In carrying out this title, the Secretary may utilize the facilities, services, authorities, and funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation, except that the Secretary may not use funds of the Corporation to carry out this title unless the Corporation has received funds to cover such expenditures from appropriations made to carry out this title.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 408. Effective during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1987, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary for the administration of this title, including such amounts as may be required to make payments to the Commodity Credit Corporation for its costs to be incurred under this title.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title IV?

If not, the Clerk will designate title V.

The text of title V is as follows:

TITLE V

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 501. The Secretary shall, within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register such regulations, as the Secretary determines desirable to implement this Act. In carrying out this Act, the Secretary shall use the services of local, county, and State committees established under section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

APPEAL PROCEDURES

SEC. 502. The Secretary shall establish, by regulation, an appeal procedure under which a person who is adversely affected by any determination made under this Act may seek review of such determination.

ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 503. The authority provided by this Act shall be in addition to and not in place of other authorities available to the Secretary and the Commodity Credit Corporation for carrying out soil and water conservation programs.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3457, the Soil Conservation Act of 1984 and commend Chairman DE LA GARZA, Subcommittee Chairman JONES and Ranking Member Mr. COLEMAN for presenting this Congress with a piece of conservation legislation.

As a cosponsor of the original sodbuster bill, I am pleased to note that its provisions have been included as part of H.R. 3457.

Of course, no piece of legislation is perfect and I have some concerns about some of the details of this bill, but on the whole, I think producers are ready for some conservation legislation with teeth.

It is important to keep in mind that no matter how beneficial this bill might be, farmers and ranchers would be doing more of their own conservation work if incomes were better.

Second, we need to look at the Tax Code and price support programs to see what incentives they are giving nonfarm investors to crop marginal ground.

However, this bill is an important step forward and should raise the national, consciousness about the need for conservation.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to the bill? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore Mr. SMITH of Iowa having assumed the chair, Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3457) to prohibit the payment of certain agriculture incentives to persons who produce certain agricultural commodities on highly erodible land; to allow farmers who plant perennial grasses and legumes as a means of building soil quality, rotating crops, or protecting land from wind and water erosion, to enter a certified voluntary set-aside program; and to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into long-term contracts with farmers to remove certain erosion-prone lands from cultivation, pursuant to House Resolution 493, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to promote soil conservation in the United States.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the pending business is the question on the motion to suspend the rules and the question on agreeing to the conference report on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H.R. 5121, by the yeas and nays; and the conference report on S. 1129, de novo.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for the second electronic vote, if ordered.

VIRGINIA NATIONAL FOREST WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 5121, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5121, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 376, nays 20, not voting 37, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device may be taken on the adoption of the conference report on which the Chair has postponed further proceedings.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1129, DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of agreeing to the conference report on the Senate bill, S. 1129.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 369, noes 25, not voting 39, as follows:

SOIL CONSERVATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 663) to make persons who produce agricultural commodities on highly erodible land ineligible for certain agricultural-related programs, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 663

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Highly Erodible Land Conservation Act of 1983".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "agricultural commodity" means any agricultural product planted and produced by annual tilling of the soil, including one-trip planters;

(2) the term "highly erodible land" means land classified by the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture as class IVe, VIe, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification systems in effect on the date of enactment of this Act. The land capability class for a field shall be that determined by the Secretary to be predominant class under regulations issued by the Secretary; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

PROGRAM INELIGIBILITY

SEC. 3. Except as provided in section 4 and notwithstanding any other provision of law, following the date of enactment of this Act any person who produces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land shall be ineligible, with respect to such commodity produced on such land, for—

(1) any type of price support, income assistance, or production adjustment payments for such commodity made available under the Agricultural Act of 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, or any other Act;

(2) a loan for the construction or purchase of a facility for the storage of such commodity made under section 4(h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act;

(3) crop insurance for such commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act;

(4) a disaster payment for such commodity made under the Agricultural Act of 1949; or

(5) a new loan made, insured, or guaranteed under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, or any other provision of law administered by the Farmers Home Administration, if the Secretary determines that such loan will be used for a purpose that will contribute to excessive erosion of highly erodible land.

EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 4. Section 3 shall not apply to—

(1) any land that was cultivated by a person to produce any of the 1973 through 1983 crops of agricultural commodities;

(2) any crop of an agricultural commodity planted by a person before the date of enactment of this Act;

(3) any crop of an agricultural commodity planted by a person during any crop year beginning before the date of enactment of this Act;

(4) any loan described in section 3 made before the date of enactment of this Act; or

(5) any crop of an agricultural commodity produced using a conservation system that has been approved by soil conservation district and that is based on technical standards set forth in the Soil Conservation Service technical guide for that soil conservation district. In areas where no soil conservation district exists, the Secretary shall determine the adequacy of the conservation system to be used in the production of any agricultural commodity on highly erodible land.

USE OF AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION AND CONSERVATION COUNTY COMMITTEES IN ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 5. To ensure compliance with the provisions of this Act on the part of those persons particpating in the programs described in section 3, as well as fair and equitable treatment in the application of this Act, the Secretary shall use the county committees established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act in the administration of this Act.

APPEAL OF LAND CLASSIFICATION

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall establish, by regulation, an appeal procedure under which a person who produces an agricultural commodity on land classified as class IVe, VIe, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification systems applicable under this Act may seek review of such classification.

COMPLETION OF SOIL SURVEYS

SEC. 7. The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, complete soil surveys on those private lands that do not have a soil survey suitable for use in determining the land capability class for purposes of this Act, and, insofar as possible, concentrate on those localities where significant amounts of highly erodible land are being converted to the production of agricultural commodities.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DE LA GARZA

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DE LA GARZA moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 663, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of the bill, H.R. 3457, as passed, as follows:

That this Act may be cited as the "Soil Conservation Act of 1984".

TITLE I

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "agricultural commodity" means any agricultural commodity planted and produced by annual tilling of the soil, or on an annual basis by one-trip planters;

(2) the term "conservation district" means any district or unit of State or local government formed under State or territorial law for the express purpose of developing and carrying out a local soil and water conservation program. Such districts or units of State or local government may be called "conservation districts", "soil conservation districts", "soil and water conservation districts", "resource conservation districts", "natural resource districts", "land conservation committees", or a similar name;

(3) the term "erosion-prone cropland" means land that is classified by the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture as class IIIe, IVe, VI, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification system in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and that has been devoted to the production of an agricultural commodity in three out of the past five years, or any other land in a State that the Soil Conservation Service determines has an erosion rate, in the production of an agricultural commodity, that is equal to or greater than the average erosion rate in the same State on any of the foregoing classes of land;

(4) the term "field" means that term as defined in section 718.2 of title 7 of the Code of Federal Regulations, except that any highly erodible land on which an agricultural commodity is produced after the date of enactment of this Act and which is not exempt under section 202 shall be considered as part of the field in which such land was included on such date of enactment;

(5) the term "highly erodible land" means land classified by the Soil Conservation Service of the Department of Agriculture as class IVe, VIe, VII, or VIII land under the land capability classification system in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, or any other land in a State that the Soil Conservation Service determines would have an erosion rate, if that land is used to produce an agricultural commodity, that is equal to or greater than the average erosion rate in the same State on any of the foregoing classes of land; and

(6) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

TITLE II

PROGRAM INELIGIBILITY FOR PRODUCTION ON HIGHLY ERODIBLE LAND

SEC. 201. Except as provided in sections 202 and 407(c) and notwithstanding any other provision of law, following the date of enactment of this Act any person who during any crop year produces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land on a field on which such highly erodible land is the predominant class shall be ineligible, as to any commodity produced during that crop year by such person, for—

(1) any type of price support or payments made available under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.), the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714 et seq.), or any other Act;

(2) a farm storage facility loan under section 4 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714b(h));

(3) crop insurance under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.);

(4) a disaster payment under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.); or

(5) a loan made, insured, or guaranteed under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1921 et seq.) or any other provision of law administered by the Farmers Home Administration, if the Secretary determines that such loan will be used for a purpose that will contribute to excessive erosion on such field.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 202. (a) Section 201 shall not apply to any person who, during any crop year, produces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land on a field on which such highly erodible land is the predominant class if all the commodities so produced by such person during that crop year were—

(1) produced on any land that was cultivated to produce any of the 1973 through 1984 crops of agricultural commodities;

(2) planted before the date of enactment of this Act;

(3) planted during any crop year beginning before the date of enactment of this Act; or

(4) produced (A) in an area within a conservation district under a conservation system that has been approved by a conservation district after it has been determined that the conservation system is in conformity with technical standards set forth in the Soil Conservation Service technical guide for that conservation district, or (B) in an area, not within a conservation district, under a conservation system determined by the Secretary to be adequate for the production of such agricultural commodity on highly erodible land.

(b) Section 201 shall not apply to any highly erodible land during any crop year if such land was planted in reliance on the determination by the Soil Conservation Service that such land was not highly erodible land. The exemption allowed by the subsection shall not apply to any crop which was planted on any land after the Soil Conservation Service determines such land to be highly erodible land.

(c) Section 201 shall not apply to any loan made before the date of enactment of this Act.

COMPLETION OF LAND CAPABILITY CLASSIFICATION SURVEYS

SEC. 203. The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable, complete soil surveys on those private lands that have not been classified as to land capability, and, insofar as possible, concentrate on those localities where significant amounts of highly erodible land are being converted to the production of agricultural commodities. In addition to other sums authorized to be appropriated by this Act, such sums as may be necessary are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section.

TITLE III

CROPLAND BASE PROTECTION STUDY

SEC. 301. On or before February 15, 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate, a report containing a detailed study and analysis, including legislative recommendations where appropriate, of various voluntary set-aside programs, including those recommended by farm or conservation groups. Such study shall include an analysis of a program under which persons who set aside cropland to approved perennial grasses or legumes as part of a crop rotation pattern to reduce soil erosion or build soil productivity (1) may qualify under future commodity stabilization programs to have such lands designated as cropland in rotation for the purpose of establishing a normal acreage base for the farm, or (2) may designate such cropland as set-aside or conserving-use acreage under such programs. Such study shall also include an analysis of the impact of any voluntary set-aside program on water quality.

ANALYSIS OF USDA CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 302. (a) The Secretary shall conduct an economic study of the costs and benefits of all current soil conservation programs, including research and extension efforts. This study shall be led by the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). Agencies responsible for administering USDA's soil conservation programs will be responsible for providing necessary data and assistance as required to complete the study.

(b) The study will emphasize an economic analysis of current USDA soil conservation programs. The cost-benefit, both direct and indirect, analyses of these programs should be measured and compared to a situation in which no such programs were in effect. The benefits measured should include, but not necessarily be limited to, increases in, or maintenance of, onsite program benefits, such as topsoil maintenance and soil productivity, and offsite program benefits, such as improved water quality and reduced dredging. Program costs should include, but not necessarily be limited to, state and local matching funds and direct or indirect costs imposed on those outside federal, state and local governments, who assist with, or take part in, USDA conservation programs.

(c) The Secretary shall submit to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report containing the results of t..is study within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE IV

CONSERVATIVE RESERVE PROGRAM

SEC. 401. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall formulate and carry out a program with owners and operators of erosion-prone cropland to assist them in conserving and improving the soil and water resources of their farms or ranches. In any such program, the Secretary shall include other than erosion-prone cropland upon a demonstration by the conservation district that a serious soil erosion problem exists on such land, or in an area not within a conservation district if the Secretary determines that such a serious soil erosion problem exists.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 402. (a) The Secretary shall enter into contracts during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1987, of not less than seven nor more than fifteen years for the purpose of carrying out this title. In such contract, the owner or operator shall agree to—

(1) effectuate during the agreement period a plan approved by a conservation district (or in an area not within a conservation district, a plan approved by the Secretary) for converting erosion-prone cropland normally devoted to the production of an agricultural commodity on a farm or ranch into a less intensive use, such as pasture, permanent grass or legumes, or trees substantially in accordance with the schedule outlined therein, except to the extent that any requirements thereof are waived or modified by the Secretary;

(2) forfeit all rights to further payments under the contract and refund to the United States all payments, with interest, received thereunder upon the violation of the contract at any stage during the time the owner or operator has control of the land if the Secretary, after considering the recommendations of the soil conservation district and the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, determines that such violation is of such a nature as to warrant termination of the contract, or make refunds or accept such payment adjustments as the Secretary may deem appropriate if the Secretary determines that the violation by the owner or operator does not warrant termination of the contract;

(3) upon transfer of the owner or operator's right and interest in the farm or ranch during the contract period, forfeit all rights to further payments under the contract and refund to the United States all payments received thereunder, or accept such payment adjustments or make such refunds as the Secretary may deem appropriate and consistent with the objectives of this title, unless the transferee of any such land agrees with the Secretary to assume all obligations under the contract;

(4) not conduct any harvesting or grazing or otherwise make commercial use of the forage or trees on land that is subject to the contract unless it is expressly permitted in the contract, or adopt any practice specified in the contract by the Secretary as a practice that would tend to defeat the purposes of the contract; and

(5) such additional provisions as the Secretary determines are desirable and are included in the contract to effectuate the purposes of the program or to facilitate the practical administration thereof.

(b) The plan, as described in subsection (a)(1), for converting erosion-prone cropland normally devoted to the production of agricultural commodities on a farm or ranch into a less-intensive use shall set forth the conservation measures and practices to be installed by the owner or operator during the agreement period and the commercial use, if any, to be made of the land during such period and may provide for the permanent retirement of cropland base and allotment history for such land.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY

SEC. 403. In return for such agreement by the owner or operator, the Secretary shall agree to (1) provide technical assistance, (2) share the cost of carrying out the conservation measures and practices set forth in the contract for which the Secretary determines that cost sharing is appropriate and in the public interest, and (3) pay an annual land rental fee, for a period not in excess of the duration of the contract, on those acres of erosion-prone cropland that are placed in a conservation use and for any cropland base and allotment history that the owner or operator agrees to retire permanently.

COST SHARING

SEC. 404. The Secretary shall base the amount of cost sharing for conservation measures and practices under this title on that part of the total cost thereof that the Secretary determines is necessary and appropriate to effectuate the installation and maintenance of the conservation plantings and practices for the normally expected life of such a planting or practice.

LAND RENTAL

SEC. 405. The Secretary shall determine on the basis of bids received from owners and operators the amount of land rental to be paid for converting erosion-prone cropland to less intensive uses and for any cropland base or allotment history that the owner or operator agrees to retire permanently. In awarding contracts the Secretary shall give priority to those bids that will result in the lowest cost to the Government when calculated on the basis of all relevant factors, including the following—

(1) tons of soil saved on the diverted land, as calculated by the difference between the estimated soil loss on the precontract cropping system employed by the owner or operator and the system that will be installed as a result of the contract;

(2) the acres per year of erosion-prone cropland diverted;

(3) the units of agricultural commodity that would be diverted from production under the terms of the contract;

(4) the number of acres of cropland base and allotment history that the owner or operator agree to retire permanently as a condition of the contract; and

(5) the value of the cost sharing to be provided for installation of conservation measures and practices.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 406. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, payments under this title shall be made in cash or in commodities in such amount and on such time schedule as agreed upon and specified in the contract. Such payments may be made in advance of determination of performance.

(b) If a producer who is entitled to any such payment or compensation dies, becomes incompetent, or disappears before receiving such payment or compensation, or is succeeded by another who renders or completes the required performance, the Secretary shall make or provide such payment or compensation, in accordance with regulations and without regard to any other provisions of law, in such manner as the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable in light of all of the circumstances.

(c) In carrying out the conservation reserve program, the Secretary may not enter into contracts with producers that would require payments to producers under this title in excess of $50,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, in excess of $75,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and in excess of $100,000,000 for contracts entered into during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987. The Secretary may enter into contracts in any fiscal year that require payments to producers only to such extent or in such amounts as provided in appropriation Acts.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 407. (a) The Secretary shall provide adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers, including provision for sharing, on a fair and equitable basis, in payments under the program.

(b) The Secretary may terminate any contract by mutual agreement with the owner or operator if the Secretary determines that such termination would be in the public interest, and may agree to such modification or contracts as the Secretary may determine to be desirable to carry out the purposes of this title or facilitate its administration.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of title II of this Act, the Secretary shall provide by appropriate regulations for preservation of cropland base and allotment history, applicable to acreage diverted from the production of crops under this title, for the purpose of any Federal program under which such history is used as a basis for participation in such program or for an allotment or other limitation in such program, unless the owner or operator agrees under the contract to retire permanently such cropland base and allotment history.

(d) In carrying out this title, the Secretary may utilize the facilities, services, authorities, and funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation, except that the Secretary may not use funds of the Corporation to carry out this title unless the Corporation has received funds to cover such expenditures from appropriations made to carry out this title.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 408. Effective during the period beginning October 1, 1984, and ending September 30, 1987, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary for the administration of this title, including such amounts as may be required to make payments to the Commodity Credit Corporation for its costs to be incurred under this title.

TITLE V

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 501. The Secretary shall, within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register such regulations as the Secretary determines desirable to implement this Act. In carrying out this Act, the Secretary shall use the services of local, county, and State committees established under section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

APPEAL PROCEDURES

SEC. 502. The authority provided by this Act shall be in addition to and not in place of other authorities available to the Secretary and the Commodity Credit Corporation for carrying out soil and water conservation programs.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to promote soil conservation in the United States."

A similar House bill, H.R. 3457, was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks either on S. 663, the Senate bill just passed, or on H.R. 3457, the bill as passed earlier today by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 497, and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5119.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AUCOIN) as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5119) to authorize international development and security assistance programs and Peace Corps programs for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes, with Mr. KILDEE (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) will be recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL).

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding.

I simply want to rise in strong support of H.R. 5421.

I want to salute our chairman for bringing this bill to the floor. If anybody could bring it here, it was our chairman, and if anybody can pass it, it is our chairman. I will be supporting our chairman throughout the effort to pass this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5421, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984.

Compared to many of the measures that we consider in this Chamber, this is a very modest bill. It authorizes only $10.5 billion—a suprisingly low amount considering that this is one of the main vehicles by which we invest in a better world. The philosophy behind this bill is that the United States is more secure in a world in which all nations are secure and at peace, and that our own people are better off in a world in which all people have hope that they can meet their basic aspirations for themselves and for their children. Despite our differences, I believe we all share that philosophy. So when all is said and done—when all the amendments have been offered and debated and voted up or down—I hope all the Members will join the chairman and me and the other members of the committee in voting for the bill.

The committee and its subcommittees have worked hard on this bill. We have produced a bill that we think our colleagues can confidently support. My own personal belief is that, while military aid is important, economic aid is more important in building a secure world. Those who believe as I do will be pleased with the results of the committee's work. While fully providing for the military security of our friends and allies, the committee has made modest cuts in the administration's military aid request in order to permit modest increases in economic aid.

We have increased funds for population assistance, in order to provide more effective assistance to those millions of parents throughout the world who want to plan the size of their families so they can live within their means. We have increased funds for education, in recognition of the fact that the future depends on the education of the world's children.

We have increased funds for international organizations and programs, because in that way our money is leveraged by being matched by other contributions in order to achieve a greater impact on the alleviation of poverty throughout the world. We have increased funds for the Peace Corps, so we can begin to build that unique organization back up to what it was in its prouder days.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, I want to inform the House of the provisions of the bill that pertain to that region. The committee has strengthened the limitations and prohibitions on arms sales to some of the hemisphere's most notorious human rights violators: Chile, Paraguay, and Uruguay. The committee has also strengthened the conditions on economic and military aid to Haiti in view of that country's human rights situation.

The committee has provided increased economic assistance for three struggling Andean democracies—Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia—that have been severely affected by adverse weather conditions. We have also provided increased assistance for the islands of the eastern Caribbean in order to strengthen the ability of those democracies to resist disorder and meet the needs of their people.

The committee has established a scholarship program for economically disadvantaged students from Latin America and the Caribbean. We decided to take this good idea, which was proposed by the Kissinger Commission, and expand it to include all of Latin America and the Caribbean.

The committee adopted several measures to strengthen the independence and integrity of the Inter-American Foundation, so that that organization will be able to continue its uniquely effective support for self-help development projects in this hemisphere.

And the committee adopted language applauding Argentina for the reestablishment of democracy, and urging the President to do everything to help Argentina restructure its debt.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about the committee's recommendations with respect to Central America. The Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, which developed most of these recommendations, had before it the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission, on which I was privileged to serve as a senior counselor. It was my intent that the subcommittee recommendations be faithful to the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission. I believe they were, and I believe the committee bill remains faithful to those recommendations.

That is not to say that all the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission were adopted in their entirety by the committee, nor should they have been. It is not the function of Congress simply to translate the recommendations of private commissions into public policy without making any changes. Nor is it to say that the committee bill is identical to the administration's bill. It certainly is not. In fact, I would argue that our bill comes closer to the spirit of the Commission than the administration's bill does.

The Kissinger Commission found that the challenges that we face in Central America are military, economic, and political. The bill that we bring before the House today meets the challenges on all three of those fronts.

On the military front, the bill provides resources that are completely adequate to the problems that we confront. For fiscal year 1985, the bill authorizes more than a quarter of a billion dollars in military aid for Central America, which is more than twice what Congress has authorized for any preceding fiscal year. For El Salvador, the bill authorizes almost $190 million, which is again more than double what has been provided in previous fiscal years. Honduras is provided a further $41 million in 1985, which is equivalent to the administration's request for the current fiscal year, and surely sufficient for a country that is not at war and faces no viable guerrilla threat. The administration's 1984 and 1985 military aid requests for Costa Rica are fully funded by the bill, and would give that country sufficient resources to meet the threats it faces.

On the economic front, the committee bill fully funds the administration request for Central America for both fiscal years 1984 and 1985. The committee is fully cognizant of the importance of the economic dimension of Central America's problems and, in fact, has been in the forefront in trying to get the administration to pay adequate attention to this dimension. However, there is one important observation of the Kissinger Commission that the administration has chosen to ignore, and that is the impossibility of achieving economic development in the absence of a more peaceful and secure environment. Because that is so crucial, the committee chose to withhold obligation of $250 million of the authorized economic aid pending the achievement of a comprehensive peace agreement and the elaboration of a regional development plan among the countries of the region.

Mr. Chairman, there are many incentives for war in Central America, but there are few incentives for peace. This is an incentive for peace. It is an incentive for the Central American nations to work together to achieve the conditions that will make economic development possible. It is an important part of the bill, and I hope the Members will look favorably on it.

On the political front, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the most important finding of the Kissinger Commission was that violence and terror by government forces and death squads in El Salvador really do threaten our objectives in El Salvador and those of the democratic forces in that country. From that finding stemmed what I believe is the most important recommendation of the Commission, which reads as follows:

> With respect to El Salvador, military aid should, through legislation requiring periodic reports, be made contingent upon demonstrated progress toward free elections; freedom of association; the establishment of the rule of law and an effective judicial system; and the termination of the activities of the so-called death squads, as well as vigorous action against those guilty of crimes and the prosecution to the extent possible of past offenders. These conditions should be seriously enforced.

The administration bill completely ignored this recommendation. The administration's so-called conditionality language was so soft that it would have been laughed at by the Salvadorans. The committee bill contains real conditionality language, of the type envisioned by the Kissinger Commission. Specifically, the committee bill says that military aid for El Salvador can be continued at currently authorized levels of 64.8 million without a certification, but if the Salvadoran Government wants the entire authorization for 1985 then it must achieve, not perfection, but only the following minimally acceptable conditions:

First, ending the involvement of its own forces in indiscriminate violence, secret detentions, abductions, torture, and murder;

Second, compliance with the Geneva Conventions relating to the protection of civilians during combat, which really amounts to nothing more than a requirement that the Salvadoran Air Force stop bombing civilian noncombatants; and Third, participation by the government in negotiations with the left.

The government must also be making progress on other reforms. In view of the dubious factual basis of previous Presidential certifications, the bill also provides for congressional approval of a certification by joint resolution.

Mr. Chairman, that honorable man and my good friend, Napoleon Duarte, has apparently been elected President of El Salvador. He has pledged to end the death squads and to begin a dialog with the left. To do either, he will have to overcome extremely powerful and dangerous forces who do not want to see either of those things happen. We must back President Duarte up. We must enable him to go to the army and say, "The United States means business. If we don't clean up the death squads and seek a political solution to the conflict, the United States will not back us." The committee bill gives President Duarte that backing. The committee bill makes it clear that U.S. aid depends on action in these areas. It is very important that we send this message to El Salvador.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to pay tribute to the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL), for his tireless efforts in putting this package together and bringing it to the floor. It is not easy on our committee, where opinions are diverse and strongly held, to fashion a bill that will be supported by a majority of the committee—and, I believe, a majority of the House. But under DANTE FASCELL's leadership, we have done it. It is not easy to bring a foreign aid bill to the floor in an election year; most people said we would never get this far, but under DANTE FASCELL's leadership, we have done it. So I want to congratulate the chairman, and also the committee staff for their excellent work.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a good bill, that would increase security in our world, foster economic development, and encourage peace in Central America. I again urge all Members to support it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Maryland. I appreciate his kind remarks and his strong work on behalf of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, for the first time I rise in support of the foreign assistance program as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The bill which is before you, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984, provides for a supplemental authorization for foreign assistance for fiscal year 1984, and the authorization for fiscal year 1985.

Now, as you know, we have not passed a regular foreign aid authorization bill since 1981. I am here to tell you that in my opinion it is time we faced up to what is happening to the legislative process, and that we face up to what has to be done.

I have been around long enough to know that foreign aid is not exactly the most appealing topic in the Congress. I also know it is an election year and aside from the normal strains of nervousness that are common at this time, I know that people have very strong convictions about various issues in this bill. There is not going to be much chance of passing a bill of this nature which has that kind of atmosphere attached to it on many issues, unless you want to preserve the normal processes of this House.

In the past, we have enjoyed the luxury of ducking the issue and I think that is unfortunate, because that has been at the expense of the regular process. The issue is not whether we are going to approve foreign aid in this Congress. We are going to do that. We have been doing it without authorization in continuing resolutions. The only question, therefore, is will we pass authorizing legislation this year or will we duck the issue and rely on a continuing resolution again? Will we follow the normal processes of this House, or will we continue to let the process atrophy and take what amounts to, for some people, the easy way out by letting the Appropriations Committee have the responsibility for the entire legislative and appropriations process.

It seems to me that that is the real issue here today.

Another point also needs to be stressed: Every President of the United States since World War II, and President Reagan is one of those, without exception has recommended and strongly supported and asked for foreign assistance. Now, why is that? We have to ask, why is that?

The answer is that every President has recognized that there are programs in this legislation which are absolutely vital to the national interests of the United States, whether they be economic, military, social, or political. The fact is that if we did not have a tool of this kind, a measure of this kind, we would be in effect really tying the hands of the President in pursuing America's national interests abroad.

Now all of us here, whether you vote for or against this bill, know that these programs are in our best interest. Our friends around the world must have assistance to help themselves, and without their economic development our economic strength will suffer. We cannot trade if they cannot buy.

And they need military security. We know that many of our friends who have committed themselves to our mutual security cannot do that on their own. And it would be a mistake for us to delude the American people that we could walk away from our friends abroad and just let people shift for themselves in the rest of the world, and that the United States thereby would be served, because that is not true. This we all know is a world where it is more and more difficult for any nation to go it alone. And even the United States as rich and as blessed as we are in this country, must realize every single day that what happens anywhere in any corner of the globe may affect every American citizen.

Every President of both parties has recognized that the permanent international interests of the United States are served by the American people making a commitment to provide the assistance necessary to achieve the objectives that we believe in. There is no way to do that by denying the President the tools necessary to do the job by not providing the economic, and security assistance necessary to enable the peoples of the world to help themselves.

This bill does not bail them out, but in some small way it does provide some assistance which helps them help themselves. And that advances the interests of the United States.

We must pass this bill. No bill is perfect. There is going to be something in this bill somebody does not like. There may be some people who, for one reason or another, will never vote for foreign aid because a matter of strong conviction.

I cannot argue with them on that. They are entitled to their opinion. I happen to think they are wrong. They think I am wrong. And we have to rely on the majority of this body and the American people to arrive at some consensus which I hope is more reasonable, forward looking, and progressive.

The principal features of H.R. 5421 are basically that it authorizes $301,174,000 for fiscal year 1984 and $10,537,010,000 for fiscal year 1985.

This total amount is $1.9 billion below the President's budget. I will explain that in a moment.

The principal provisions of the bill include $3.9 billion for foreign military sales credits, grant military assistance, training, and peacekeeping operations. That is to help U.S. friends and allies improve their self-defense capabilities. Their strengthened defenses in turn contribute to the security of the United States.

The bill contains $5 million to strengthen the international antiterrorism effort. Some of you may have heard recently, and I do not know whether it is terrorists or not, or who will take the credit for it, but in the Quebec Provincial Parliament somebody decided to shoot up the Members, and I dare say that we are faced today in this world with a new type of phenomena which seeks to rule the world by terror and violence. This bill has a provision which deals with that problem.

There is $3.7 billion for the economic support fund to support friends in areas of special interest to the United States, particularly in the Middle East.

There is $1.9 billion for the bilateral development assistance to help improve living conditions for poor majorities in the developing countries in the Third World. This includes $75 million for a new economic initiative in the sub-Sahara Africa, and $25 million for a new child survival fund.

Included are substantial amounts in this bill both for security and economic assistance for programs in Israel, Egypt, and other Middle East countries.

The Central American provisions in title X authorize about a billion dollars in fiscal 1985 which is about $200 million below the request from the President, based on the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission. Title X will be discussed in detail during the 6-hour period allotted to the consideration of amendments in the Central American title of the bill.

Most of the reduction in the funding in the bill below the President's request are due to the committee's handling of the foreign military sales account. Whereas the President had recommended a proposal that all FMS credits be placed on the budget as direct credits, the committee left FMS market rate financing off the budget, as it is in the present law.

We did say, however, in the report, and we advised the administration, that we see the wisdom of putting all of that directly on the budget. But we did not see how in this particular time we could add that to the budget deficit, an additional several billion dollars. So we decided to put part of it on budget this year, and advised the administration that the committee would look favorably upon putting the rest of it on budget next year.

We also made other reductions, however, we reduced the FMS guarantee reserve fund by $160 million and the grant military assistance programs were also reduced below the amounts requested.

And in order to achieve a balance in this bill, the committee made some inceases in economic programs and other assistance. Those increases include assistance for Israel, for development assistance programs in agricultural and rural development, health and population, for the United Nations development program, for UNICEF, and for American schools and hospitals and for the Peace Corps.

In the total funding in the bill is below the budget request.

In spite of these selective increases, the total funding in the bill is below the budget request.

The military portion of this bill is less than 2 percent of the U.S. military budget. I want to repeat that: The military portion of this bill is less than 2 percent of the current U.S. defense budget. And what we get in return are important base rights in countries such as Greece, Turkey, and other places around the world; pre-positioning of equipment and material. It also contributes more to the security of the United States in a more cost-effective way than if we had the direct involvement of U.S. forces.

So we not only get better efficiency, more effectiveness, better dollar value, but we help our friends and ourselves in the process. I think we need to remember also that most of this money, about 85 percent of it, is spent in the United States.

Furthermore, it is estimated by the Department of Commerce that it provides several hundred thousand jobs for Americans who are involved in producing goods and services for these aid program.

This is a good bill, I submit, Mr. Chairman. I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to support this bill. There will be amendments, obviously. Some will pass, some will get defeated. And the House is going to work its will.

We did the best we could in the committee to bring a bill to the floor that would have wide bipartisan support on most issues. I want to compliment my ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BROOMFIELD, and others; the subcommittee chairmen and their ranking members and Members on both sides of the aisle. Everybody worked hard on this legislation and the product is one that we can be proud of.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I would be happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. HAMILTON. I want to thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that it has been a great pleasure for me as a member of the committee to work under the gentleman's leadership. He has taken over responsibility of the Foreign Affairs Committee and I think has impressed all of us with the skill that he has exercised in bringing this bill to the floor.

I rise in support of the bill. I think the funds in it promote U.S. political and military interests around the world. I think there is a very careful balance in here between security and economic programs and I strongly support the bill and I commend the gentleman for his leadership.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5421, the version of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984 which the House will be considering today.

This important legislation was passed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in March 1984 and authorizes appropriations of over $10.5 billion which is nearly $2 billion less than requested by the administration for foreign assistance for fiscal year 1985. This bill also authorizes nearly $300 million in fiscal year 1984 supplemental aid. This funding, which includes military assistance, economic support and development and humanitarian assistance, is an essential component of American foreign policy.

These funds help protect and promote U.S. political and military interests around the world as well as help others help themselves. They also help our national economy. Some 70 percent of these funds will be spent in the United States and represent hundreds of thousands of jobs here.

The bill is cost-effective. It facilitates base rights, prepositioning, facilities, enhancement of friendly forces, at far less cost than direct U.S. defense measures.

The interrelationship between our ability to protect key American national interests and the economic and security programs contained in this legislation can be dramatically illustrated by a quick perusal of how H.R. 5421 affects the Middle East and Europe. These two areas are to receive over 60 percent of the funds in this bill.

EUROPE

In Europe, Mr. Chairman, this bill supports the continued vitality of NATO's southern flank and the strengthening of Western security interests in the Mediterranean region.

Four key NATO allies—Portugal, Spain, Greece, and Turkey—are to receive some $270 million in economic support fund money, some $290 million in grant military assistance and $1.46 billion in foreign military sales financing in addition to military training funds.

Together these four nations, along with Italy and France, have responsibilities in NATO's southern region. Today, this region is increasingly vital to Western security. The political instability of the Middle East offers a possible arena for the Soviet Union's expanded interference there and in the Mediterranean, where its navy is already strong. We must help these nations, for they are a bridge linking the United States and the Atlantic to the Middle East and Persian Gulf.

In each of these four countries the United States has important military facilities access agreements. Each access agreement is critical for the United States and the four agreements, taken together, provide the United States a critical link across the northern edge of the Mediterranean Sea. These allies look to the United States for assistance to augment their own contributions to Western security. All of these countries are upgrading their military forces and need American assistance and equipment. Thus, the assistance provided to these countries is among the most efficient forms of national defense expenditures and can make a substantial addition to U.S. national security interests and to world peace.

GREECE

Given Greece's important geopolitical location and our mutual security interests, Greece's continued closed relationship with the United States is of vital importance. Therefore, there is $500 million in security assistance for Greece in this bill. Greece has a socialist government and we have had differences with that governmemt over the last 3 years, but we also have a mutual stake in maintaining a close and trustful dialog with that government and in preserving our security relations. Greece did sign a new base agreement with the U.S. in 1983. Greece and the United States remain deeply intertwined nations. Many of America's leading citizens are of Greek lineage. The essence of our political cultures are the same. America's system of government is descended from Greece—the cradle of democracy.

TURKEY

Turkey is also an important country for the United States and its contribution to NATO is critical. Turkey is NATO's major link with the Middle East. It is the only Islamic member of NATO. We need to help Turkey with its economic and military needs in part because we should support Turkey's own impressive efforts to rebuild its country and economy. We should also encourage the ongoing political changes in Turkey, especially the return of a democratically elected government. The United States does have differences with Turkey on the Cyprus issue and on some human rights matters and these issues affect policy, but it is also true that Turkey, an Islamic nation, is a key pro-West country in a turbulent region with common borders with such states as Bulgaria, the Soviet Union, Iran, and Syria. We neglect Turkey at our own peril. This bill contains $716 million in military credits, $175 million in economic aid and $4 million in military training for Turkey.

CYPRUS

The $15 million economic aid program supported by this bill for Cyprus is another key sign of strong U.S. support for this island nation. Continued U.S. assistance supplements efforts to help facilitate a negotiated settlement of the Cyprus dispute. Amendments will likely be offered during consideration of this bill to address the deteriorating situation on Cyprus as a direct result of the Turkish Cypriot Unilateral Declaration of Independence and subsequent events. The frustrations of many Americans over the lack of progress toward a settlement of the Cyprus dispute is understandable, but I hope by colleagues are aware of the continued importance of U.S. economic assistance for Cyprus to help deal with humanitarian, economic development, and educational needs of the Cypriot people.

SPAIN

Spain is another country in Europe which is key to Western defenses. Even now it seeks to integrate its military more effectively into the Western security system. Democratic Spain will receive both economic and military assistance in this legislation. This assistance, which contains $400 million in FMS credits, $12 million in economic aid and $3 million in military training, 16 pivotal if Spain's membership in NATO is to be solidified and we are to build a constituency for NATO in Spain. It will also help Spain's democratic government define a new and clearer role for its military forces.

PORTUGAL

Portugal is also to receive substantial economic and security assistance in this bill—$128 million in security assistance and $80 million in economic aid. The United States renewed its bilateral base agreement with Portugal in December 1983, which gives the United States continued use of Lajes Air Base in the Azores Islands. U.S. assistance will promote Portugal's security, strengthen its democracy, and enhance its contributions to NATO and the defense of Western security as well as help alleviate the financial burdens of Portugal's troubled economy. It is in our interest to help Portugal economically because Portugal is already taking difficult steps to help itself through important austerity programs.

Mr. Chairman, our assistance programs for these four NATO allies buttress vital Western security interests. Without this assistance, American access to key military facilities is compromised and the ability of our allies to strengthen their own defenses is weakened. NATO's southern flank is vital to our interests and we must not let its security be undermined.

MIDDLE EAST

Mr. Chairman, the Middle East will receive over 40 percent of the funds authorized in this bill. These funds are closely related to American efforts to promote and expand the Middle East peace process and to strengthen the moderate forces in the region. With the Middle East peace process stalemated, it is critically important to maintain the security and economic well-being of our friends in the region in the expectation that new opportunities for further progress toward a comprehensive peace will be created and that no party will foreclose those possibilities.

ISRAEL

H.R. 5421 provides for:

An authorization for Israel of $2.5 billion in economic and military assistance to be provided on a grant basis. The United States has a historic commitment to Israel's security and economic well-being and U.S. assistance provides a tangible demonstration of the strength and durability of that commitment. The United States seeks to give Israel the confidence to take the risks necessary to pursue the peace process. It is a continuing principle of U.S. security assistance to enable Israel to maintain a qualitative edge in military technology in the Middle East. This is especially important because of increasing Soviet sales of sophisticated arms to other countries in the region, and especially to Syria. The economic aid for Israel in this bill is particularly important for Israel at this time of economic hardship in that country. U.S. economic aid can supplement Israel's own efforts to reform its economy.

EGYPT

An authorization for Egypt of over $2 billion, including $1.175 billion in military assistance, $750 million in economic assistance, and $225 million in food aid. Egypt remains critical to the success of U.S. regional political and strategic policies and these requests support U.S. policy. The United States and Egypt have a shared strategic interest in the stability of the Middle East and the surrounding region, especially Africa, and a shared strategic commitment to a peaceful solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Egypt has been an active partner in the Middle East peace process, and continued Egyptian support is crucial to its ultimate success. The Mubarak government publicly supports the President's September 1, 1982, peace initiative.

OTHER

Smaller authorizations for economic and military assistance for other countries in the region: Jordan is to receive $117 million; Oman $60 million; Yemen Arab Republic $45.5 million; and Lebanon $36 million. We have important ties to these countries and a stake in what happens to each despite recent problems with Lebanon and Jordan in particular. Our programs with these countries promote broad U.S. policy objectives in the Middle East and, in the case of Oman, are directly related to a military facilities access agreement for U.S. forces; Oman is located near the entrance to the Persian Gulf and abuts the Staits of Hormuz.

REGIONAL PROGRAMS

An authorization of $15 million for special Middle East programs to promote regional cooperative programs involving both Israelis and Arabs, economic development projects in the critical West Bank and Gaza area where significant proportions of the Palestinian people live, and regional program support and development. These programs are small in amounts but touch the lives of many people and promote the cause of peace.

Mr. Chairman, the United States continues to have a stake in what happens in the Middle East. We cannot walk away from the region because of the stalemated peace process or reverses in Lebanon because we have important and interrelated interests there in the stability and well-being of friends, in access to oil, in reducing the tensions of regional conflict and in preventing the Soviets from obtaining an enhanced position in the area. These funds help us in promoting those interests. Without these programs, efforts to energize the peace process will be hampered.

SUMMARY

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to reiterate my support for H.R. 5421. Many Members may feel it is not a good time for any foreign aid bill and that the mood of the American people is against the legislation. It is true, that given our significant domestic needs and priorities, the amount of resources being provided for assistance overseas is declining. But it is also true that we cannot confront the foreign policy challenges we face and counter aggressive policies of our adversaries without the prudent use of economic and military assistance programs in H.R. 5421. This bill also supports key national interests overseas, promotes trade, and represents some 450,000 jobs for Americans.

Mr. Chairman, let me add one final plea. This bill strikes a careful balance between security and economic programs and contains important policy guidelines. Any effort to move precipitously to change this balance or eliminate policy guidelines could well lead many Members to reconsider their support for H.R. 5421.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the adoption of H.R. 5421.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman, who is a distinguished chairman of the Subcommitte on the Middle East and who, year after year, handles some of the most difficult issues that confront our committee, and does that with great skill and resolve.

I want to just conclude with an advisory so all my colleagues who are listening in and all who are here will know what our intentions are.

We will start at noon tomorrow, on Wednesday, and we will stay in session as long as possible. The idea is that we will try to finish the first nine titles tomorrow.

□ 1700

There will be a few amendments here and there. We will do the best we can with them.

If everybody cooperates we will finish nine titles by tomorrow night and hopefully at some decent hour.

Then, if the leadership agrees, we would come in at 10 o'clock on Thursday and take up title X, which is the Central American package.

With 6 hours of debate, slippage of time during debate and notes, you are talking about an elapsed time of about 8 hours.

With another hour or so of voting on the motion to recommit you can see that even if we started at 10 o'clock on Thursday on the final title of this bill we would be very fortunate to finish the bill before 10 o'clock Thursday night.

Now, I would like to do that. We are scheduled to have a session on Friday, if necessary. I would do almost anything to keep from a Friday session. But if we have to, we will.

But I want all of my colleagues who are watching and listening to know what we are trying to do, what we expect to do, and that we will try to meet our responsibility the best we can. We can only do it if you help us. If you decide you do not want to do that, of course it will not work.

I think all of my colleagues recognize what is involved here and that we are trying to do a responsible job and that they will cooperate.

31-059 O-87-43 (Pt. 8)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, as we begin debate today, I want on this occasion to congratulate Chairman FASCELL for his leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor. Mr. FASCELL has followed the admirable tradition of our former chairman, CLEMENT ZABLOCKI, in working with the minority in a spirit of fairness and bipartisanship.

Mr. Chairman, the world continues to be a dangerous place, a place that challenges the idealism and the realism for which America is proud.

In meeting these challenges, this foreign assistance legislation will play a vital role.

Idealistically, Americans realize that, as President Reagan said, "peace and individual betterment are universal purposes. They are at the heart of the American dream."

As Americans, we instinctively reach out to help the victims of flood and famine around the world. We encourage democracy and human rights. We build dams and roads. We teach farmers to grow more food. In short, we help people to help themselves to a better life.

But Americans are known for realism too. Reality tells us that progress and change take time. That we cannot do it alone, but we can and should help, for their sake and our own.

The realities of the world we live in tell us that the economic and military support which this bill provides is critical to the survival of many of our allies and friends around the globe. America's sense of realism also tells us that the survival of friends and allies on this shrinking planet—in the face of Soviet-sponsored aggression and subversion—is essential to the survival of our own society as we know it today. Without our help, many countries would face violent and bloody periods of instability, which ultimately would threaten our own security.

We face many challenges around the world. Instability continues in the Middle East and the bloody war between Iraq and Iran goes on. Two of our allies in the region, Egypt and Israel, desperately continue to need our economic and military support.

The Soviets continue their tragic occupation of Afghanistan and our allies in the region are concerned that they may become the next victims of Soviet expansionism.

The lack of a solution in Cyprus continues to be of great concern to all of us. I hope we can take action here this week that will bring the parties to the Cyprus problem closer to a solution.

Many of the small nations we assist occupy strategic locations around the globe. Obviously, we extend our help for reasons not only of idealism, but for self-interest as well.

America wants to live in peace and freedom. We can best do that by encouraging free, humane, and open societies in a secure and prosperous world. Some may call this overly idealistic. I say that the security of our Nation demands no less. That is reality.

The Bipartisan Commission on Central America recommended that, "our policy must be based on the principles of democratic self-determination, economic and social improvement that fairly benefits all, and cooperation in meeting threats to the security of the region." I applaud the Commission and regret that the Foreign Affairs Committee, as a committee, was unable to resolve the issue of aid to Central America.

So that we might deal responsibly with this issue, I am pleased to join with my colleague, Congressman MURTHA of Pennsylvania, in a bipartisan approach to Central American aid, an approach combining sufficient flexibility to carry out foreign policy, while retaining responsible congressional oversight and conditions.

Mr. Chairman, Americans of the television age have been said to want instant negotiations, instant progress, and instant solutions. Impatience is an admirable American trait. But so is persistence. Persistence was a quality that our ancestors brought to this country as they survived the hardships of building an new life in a new nation.

As we reach out to deal with the difficult problems we face around the world, we need to recall the persistence of our ancestors. We need to persevere. We need to continue to support this program—because it is right to do so—and because it is in our own best self-interests.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, this morning I and other members of the International Trade Subcommittee of the Banking Committee were told in no uncertain terms by Latin American legislators that gigantic debts are threatening the political stability of their countries.

M. V. Pratini de Morales of the Brazilian Congress said:

> The moment has arrived to state clearly that the preservation of democracy in most of the countries of the area may be perilously jeopardized if a negotiated solution is not provided to the long-term problem of the Latin American countries.

Latin American debt already exceeds $400 billion and part of the problem, I am sorry to say, must rest with this Congress as well as with the international banking community that has made these loans.

For the past decade we have been on one huge economic drunk, and even the person paying the bill—us—is unwilling to sober up.

It is time that we take a cold shower, drink some black coffee, and face reality.

U.S. and Latin American economies are inextricably woven together. What affects one affects the other. And this can be seen quite clearly when you look at interest rates.

As our interest rates rise, so do the interest rates that nations such as Argentina, Peru, Mexico, and Brazil must pay for money.

Brazilian Congressman Pratini de Morales said the current recession in Latin America is caused partly by the tremendous amount of money those countries must use just to pay the debt service on their loans from U.S. banks and the banks of other developed nations.

He estimates that 35 percent of the total export revenue of the Latin American countries goes to service their debts.

He told the Foreign Trade Subcommittee that the problems in Latin America have cost the United States a decline of 40 percent in exports to the region and he estimated this has cost the United States some 400,000 jobs.

Representatives from Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Ecuador, Venezuela, Mexico, the Netherlands Antilles, and the Dominican Republic to the Latin American Parliament are in Washington right now. They have issued a statement urging that the payback periods be extended and that their debts be renegotiated.

And they also contend:

> The high interest rates fixed unilaterally by the United States and the protectionist policies which are hampering our development, are unacceptable.

Section 810 of this foreign aid bill is aimed at restoring democracy in Argentina. This section states that the President should take the necessary steps to restructure Argentina's debt and the debts of other democracies in Latin America by allowing a longer period of amortization and lower interest rates.

The President is also urged to restructure these loan obligations to the United States and work toward reducing the financial pressures on these countries.

What we are asked to do is not popular among some groups.

But we must face the reality that we must have a political as well as an economic approach, because I believe this is the greatest threat to world peace today, and it is right here in our own hemisphere.

We must not just take the same old approach we have taken for a decade.

Congress, the international banking community, including the IMF and the World Bank, and the American taxpayer, must be willing to consider a new approach.

We must strike a balance somehow between propping up a bankrupt nation and strangling the economy of a nation that is trying to help itself.

To do less would be to abdicate our responsibility, both to our sister nations in Latin America and to our own vital interests at home.

To do less would be to invite the Communist powers to extend their sphere of influence throughout Latin America.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO).

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I want to start off by commending the new chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL). He has had a difficult road to hoe. We are not at the end of the road yet, and as the gentleman well knows, we have a lot of activity ahead of us. But I want to commend the way that he has handled his very difficult assignment, well in the tradition of his predecessor, Mr. Zablocki.

Mr. Chairman, the House Foreign Affairs Committee worked in relative harmony on this year's foreign aid bill and supplemental authorization request. And, in my opinion, came to responsible decisions on most issues, with the significant exception of Central America.

The bill, as it now stands, with its language on Central America, is one that I do not think most Members on this side of the aisle can support. We are being asked to approve language restricting aid to Latin America that would be counterproductive in the region, most probably unconstitutional in several respects, and which could never be supported by me, most of my Republican colleagues or, I submit, the President of the United States.

Not only does the title on Central America jeopardize this bill, it also dismisses the hard work of many fine Americans who spent 6 months studying the problems of Central America.

The Bipartisan Commission on Central America found serious needs and proposed a comprehensive solution, the Jackson plan, which addressed all elements of the problems in the region.

The Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs tore that proposal apart, ignored many of the basic recommendations and added other provisions which would tie the President's hands and limit his ability to conduct an effective foreign policy.

The Foreign Affairs Committee separated Central America from the rest of the bill during its consideration. This bill, as it now stands, jeopardizes more than the bipartisan spirit of the Jackson plan. It jeopardizes the future of a region vitally important to the national security of this country.

□ 1710

This amendment jeopardizes the future of El Salvador and, I submit, all of Central America. It ignores the tremendous demonstration of democracy made in El Salvador this past weekend in its Presidential elections. I will speak more about this later when we get to the amendment process. But I will say, Mr. Chairman, I was there for the Presidential election on May 6, as I was for the preliminary election on March 25, and there is a tremendous upswelling of democratic feeling and, I think, democratic practices starting to take hold in that country. El Salvador, Honduras, and the other countries in that region are making genuine progress toward acceptable standards of human rights, democracy and freedom. There is a long way to go, but they have come a long way, too.

My problem with title X in the bill is that it ignores that progress and sets standards which cannot be met overnight, no matter how desirable—and it is—that they might be. If this House is serious about achieving the goals that we all seek for Central America, then I hope serious consideration will be given to the Broomfield-Murtha substitute to title X.

So I would urge my colleagues to give very careful consideration to what would be the long-term consequences of rejecting out of hand the Jackson plan's recommendations and instead give their support to the sincere effort represented by Mr. BROOMFIELD and Mr. MURTHA in seeking a workable, responsible compromise.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Does the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) move that the Committee do now rise?

Mr. FASCELL. I so move, Mr. Chairman.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLOMON) on a point of order.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I was just making an inquiry. I have been waiting to speak and to be recognized, and I understood the Committee was about to rise.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection if the gentleman wants to take back some of his time and allow the gentleman to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) withdraws his motion, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD).

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman form New York (Mr. SOLOMON).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLOMON) is recognized for 6 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to praise our committee chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL). He has done an outstanding job. Although I am not disposed to vote for the legislation, the gentleman is certainly to be commended.

Mr. Chairman, on this the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry Truman, it is wise for us to remember the purpose for which our foreign aid program was originally established. When President Truman launched the point 4 program in 1946, he declared the importance of providing military and economic assistance to those countries whose political and economic stability was essential to the strategic interests of the United States.

As America's global interests and commitments have gradually increase, so our foreign aid program has increased, gathering a momentum of its own and moving away from the priorities for which it was originally intended. The bipartisan consensus that shaped our foreign aid program in those early years has also dissipated. What we have now is not an orderly program, integrated into our overall security strategy, but a grab bag of contradictory policy initiatives and agendas, reflecting the whims of various congressional subcommittees.

The problems that prompted President Truman to begin a program of foreign military and economic assistance are now much closer to our own shores than they were in the days when he was President. And no one who anticipates the forthcoming debate on this fiscal year 1985 authorization bill will deny that it is those problems, close to our own borders, in Central America, that will be the focus of this year's debate.

Our aid program in Central America must help our friends economically and militarily, because the threat they face comes both ways. And just as our economic aid is aimed at rooting out the sources of poverty and unrest: Witness, for example, the emphasis on land reform in El Salvador, so our military aid must, likewise, be focused on the source of the problem. That source was identified last year by the Democrats on the Select Committee on Intelligence when they wrote in their committee report on the Boland-Zablocki resolution: The armed insurgency in El Salvador—

Depends for its lifeblood—arms, ammunition, financing, logistics, and command-and-control facilities—upon outside assistance from Nicaragua and Cuba. This Nicaraguan/Cuban contribution to the Salvadoran insurgency is longstanding. It began shortly after the overthrow of Somoza in July 1979. It has provided—by land, sea, and air—the great bulk of the military equipment and support received by the insurgents.

Mr. Chairman the time has come to get serious about Communist insurgency in Central America. Just 2 days ago, the people of El Salvador braved gunfire and every conceivable threat of intimidation to go to the polls and freely elect their own Government. It was the second time in 26 months that they have conducted free elections—and, may I say, that is exactly two more elections that the Sandinistas have held. The people of El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Guatemala, and, yes, Nicaragua, want to be free. And they have not been seduced by the fantasies of "popular revolution" emanating from Managua.

My point is this: There are many members in this House who will not be well disposed toward voting for this foreign aid bill if an understanding is not reached concerning a continuation of support for the Nicaraguan Contras in their efforts to interdict the military supply lines that are feeding the Salvadoran guerrillas. I realize that this bill is not the vehicle for authorizing support for the Contras. But we are seeking assurances and an understanding that Congress is not going to leave the Contras in the lurch, and in effect, making Central America safe for communism.

I need not belabor the point, but we must take the long view. If Nicaragua and its Soviet and Cuban partons continue to act with impunity, destabilizing the rest of Central America, the consequences for each and every one of us—and for all Americans as well—are very serious indeed. We need only ponder the results of the primary election in Texas to realize how the American people are going to react to the tidal wave of people seeking entry, legally or illegally, into our country when Central America goes down the drain.

And even worse, how will they feel when aggressive nuclear missiles aimed at our country are less than 4 minutes away. This foreign aid bill should be geared toward preventing the spread of international communism in Central America and throughout the world. It is not and unless successfully amended to do so, I will have to vote against it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

□ 1720

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, some time in the next day or two, when we are in the wee hours of debating the major bill that is before us that the chairman put forward and the committee has worked so hard on, I am going to offer an amendment expressing the sense of the Congress. We may all be tired and may not want to hear all the debate on it, but I would like to outline it briefly, because the sense of the Congress is not necessarily all the business here. We have a lot of other very significant things to do, but I think this is very important and I hope the Members will consider it in that light.

It will be a sense of the Congress that the supplying of chemical and biological weapons is inhumane and pose grave threats to humanity, and that the United States should increase its investigations of suspected instances of chemical and biological warfare, encourage the development of antidotes for chemical and biological weapons, especially for micotoxins, commonly referred to as yellow rain, urge other nations to investigate suspected instances of chemical and biological warfare, help the U.N. investigators gain access to areas where chemical and biological warfare is or has been suspected, and negotiate with the Soviet Union and other nations to strengthen the existing agreements or make other agreements as necessary regarding chemical and biological warfare.

There has been a growing body of evidence for some time that has been accumulated by the United Nations, by the United States, by France, and by other nations of the world that indicates that chemical and biological weapons have been employed in the current war between Iran and Iraq, and in the past and present conflicts in Southeast Asia and in Afghanistan.

Such evidence also indicates that the Soviet Union employs chemical and biological weapons in Afghanistan and supplies such weapons to its allies in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia. Such activities by the Soviet Union and other nations contravene arms control agreements which have been ratified by such nations in the past, and exposure to chemical and biological weapons often causes slow and agonizing death and few antidotes are available to treat exposure to such weapons.

We cannot stand idly by while more and more reports about the use of these gases and micotoxins are coming in from all over the world. The effects of chemical and biological weapons on people are as bad or worse than the effects of nuclear weapons, and countries are a lot more likely to use them because they can be limited geographically and do not destroy the countryside.

For this reason, there may be a greater threat, actually, to mankind from these weapons than from nuclear weapons. Chemical and biological weapons are not only illegal; they are immoral and more inhumane than most can imagine. Yellow rain, which is a deadly fungus for which there is no known antidote, literally causes the entire body to break down and deteriorate and the victim dies a slow and agonizing death.

I hope that, as I said, in the wee hours when we are discussing the final stages of this great bill that is before us, and I am sure that is where this particular amendment fits in, that we can seriously consider the amendment when it is offered, because I think that a sense of the Congress on this important topic at this time in the matter of chemical and biological warfare debate is essential.

I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I hope the committee and the Members will consider it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) is recognized for such time as he may consume.

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, this week the House has its first opportunity in several years to change the direction of U.S. foreign assistance programs. Not since 1981 have we passed a foreign aid bill.

In that time the administration has altered this Nation's traditional foreign assistance priorities. Increasingly, it funds the weapons of war rather than the tools for peace. In real dollars, development and food aid would increase only 2.3 percent from fiscal year 1981 to fiscal year 1985, if the administration has its way. Military aid would increase 43 percent.

This legislation reverses that trend. It cuts the administration request by $1.6 billion. Most of that comes from reductions in military sales and grant assistance. The bill also emphasizes the committee's concern about getting aid for basic human needs to the poorest members of other societies.

Like many Members in this Chamber, I favor the bill's support for Israel's security and for peace in the Middle East. It provides grants for economic support funds necessary to develop the peacekeeping process and assist Israel's troubled economy.

Foreign assistance is the fundamental vehicle for the United States to promote peace and stability in the world through nonmilitary means. And it is not a tremendous expense. This legislation represents less than 1½ percent of total budget authority.

Conflict in the Third World dominates much of our debate in this Chamber. Much of the unrest results from poverty and a lack of economic opportunity. The most effective way to address these problems is through the kinds of economic and development assistance provided in this legislation.

What we spend in this bill will be far less than what it may cost in the future to support another nation's military when its internal situation has dissolved and the people of that country are polarized by gross economic inequality.

The committee has taken steps to focus U.S. assistance on the poor majority in Third World nations. It recognizes the importance of health, nutrition, and population programs and their crucial interrelationship.

The committee believed that aid must also be directed to encourage grassroots development and initiatives at the local level. By aiding the small businessman, the subsistence farmer, U.S. programs build the strong base for peaceful, democratic development.

We have heard from the President and from many others about the growing Soviet threat in the Third World. The United States can best protect its interests by building strong economic ties to those lesser developed nations. The Soviet Union can only try to project its influence so long as military arms are needed. Weapons do not build irrigation systems, they do not provide scholarships for higher education, they do not promote trade.

A prudent America can help build peace and stability at the foundations of other societies I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5421.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a couple of things, first to my Republican colleagues, about foreign aid. Foreign aid has never been one of the most popular programs among committed Republicans, and I think that has been a mistake.

I think the fact that we are not only the leader of the free world, but we are the most powerful country in the world imposes responsibilities, and our responsibilities do not cease at the borders of our country. There are other countries in the world that look to us for not only example in the operation of democracy, but for support, for aid.

It is important to us that we have other countries that look to us because we certainly look to them. A glance at a list of resources that we do not have, that are not indigenous to this country but are only available from countries overseas, indicates in our self-interest that we had best have allies and countries with whom we can trade. Not only that, but we need overseas markets, and if the rest of the world is in chaos, we cannot immunize ourselves from that chaos.

So an enlightened program of economic assistance to countries overseas is indispensable to an enlightened foreign policy. So looking at this bill, there are many parts of it that I do not like. There are many parts of it that are unacceptable, really, but in a package of foreign aid that includes economic assistance as well as military assistance, there are always compromises and one has to take the parts that one does not like to get the parts that one does like. The perfect is the enemy of the good, and if we wait for a perfect piece of legislation, we will never get any at all.

That said, I would like to address a few remarks to my Democratic colleagues, and that is that it seems to me there is an emphasis on the Democratic side on the economic aid, with a downgrading or a failure to appreciate the need for appropriate military aid.

I can think of no better example than El Salvador, where economic aid, of course, is indispensable to bringing that country up to par, to economic growth, to alleviating the 30 percent unemployed, to alleviating the crushing poverty, to give those people hope. If anybody deserves hope on this globe, it is the people of El Salvador, who have had three elections in 2 years. What a showcase of democracy. How much we can learn from people to whom the right to vote, the privilege to vote, is such an honor that they endure physical harm, even jeopardize their lives, wait in the broiling sun hours just to get to cast their vote.

But I suggest to my Democratic friends that we cannot isolate economic aid from military aid, because the aim of the Leninist gestapo of the left, and you can call them anything you want, you can throw after shave lotion on them if you want to, but they are murderous guerrillas who are the enemies of democracy and whose sworn aim and goal is to destroy and disrupt democracy. So they have to be neutralized. They destroy. They have destroyed over $800 million worth of infrastructure and worth of the economy of El Salvador, far more than we have given El Salvador in aid.

So to protect our investment in economic aid, there must be appropriate military aid. The time is now. Examine your consciences and say, "Why do we demand a standard of perfection for El Salvador that we do not demand of any other country in the world?"

It is not right. If fairness is the hallmark of this year's campaign for both sides, I suggest it is not being fair to the entire area much less El Salvador, to demand a standard of achievement or of attainment as long as they are trying, as long as they are making the best effort possible. That effort should be recognized, and not rewarded, but supported by economic aid and military aid so that the military can protect the investment in economic aid.

I would suggest to my colleagues that the military of El Salvador has earned great plaudits by protecting the election, by seeing to it that 1,400,000 people could come out and vote in the election that just passed this Sunday.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA) is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CORRADA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984 is a major piece of legislation and it deserves our approval. I am particularly interested in title VIII which deals with Latin America and the Caribbean.

I believe that the United States has a responsibility and a moral obligation to support and encourage the democratic process in the region. We should be particularly supportive of countries such as the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, and others which traditionally have been alined with the United States. At a time when those countries are facing serious economic troubles at home, we should stand ready to assist them with economic support funds (ESF) as a means of preventing economic instability that could trigger political unrest.

One of the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission was the increase of scholarships for students from the Caribbean and Latin America to study in the United States. I fully endorse that recommendation and think it is an excellent way to provide the educational preparation that will improve each country's ability to enhance its economic development. At the same time, we would be establishing friendship and ties with our neighbors to the south which will increase our mutual understanding and strengthen our commonality of purpose.

In this regard, I am very pleased by the language in subsection (f) of section 805, to encourage the use of educational institutions in Puerto Rico as a way of helping participants in the program to acquire English language skills. As the only Spanish-speaking U.S. presence in the region, Puerto Rico is in an excellent position to serve as a bridge between the United States and the Caribbean and Central American countries. We share both language and culture and this enables us to be more effective in meeting the educational needs of students participating in the scholarship program.

In addition, subsection (i) requires a report from the President on the role that educational and technical institutions in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands could play in the development of the Caribbean and Central American region. The educational institutions in Puerto Rico have already begun to work to determine the areas in which they can be most effective. Dr. Ismael Almodóvar, president of the University of Puerto Rico, has met with officials of the U.S. Department of Education and they are preparing a capability statement for educational programs at the university. In Puerto Rico, we already have a tradition of helping our neighbors in the Caribbean and of educating many students from those countries. I look forward to an active role by public and private educational institutions in Puerto Rico on this very worthwhile effort.

Title VII of the bill appropriates $125.5 million for the Peace Corps and I am encouraged by our continued commitment to the Peace Corps volunteers as goodwill ambassadors for the United States throughout the world. The establishment of a policy designed to increase by 10,000 the number of volunteers by the end of fiscal year 1988 is a welcomed sign in the direction of expanding the role of the Peace Corps. I am hopeful that in recruiting volunteers the Peace Corps will take advantage of the extensive pool of talent available in Puerto Rico. The excellent work done by the Peace Corps is to be emulated and encouraged.

I urge my colleagues to approve this bill.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. FEIGHAN).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. FEIGHAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL, for the skill he has demonstrated in bringing this bill to the floor. He has found avenues for consensus and cooperation where lesser legislators would only see confusion. Without his hard work and determined leadership, we would not be debating this bill today.

And that would be a mistake. President Reagan has called for a bipartisan foreign policy, and this bill offers the perfect place to start. This legislation will serve U.S. interests by helping our friends and allies around the world defend themselves and develop their economies. It is not a handout, $7 out of every $10 authorized for foreign aid will be spent for goods and services made in the United States. This bill is a downpayment on a more prosperous future; it merits speedy passage.

As we know, there is no consensus for passage yet. Objections will be raised to the restrictions and conditions the committee has placed on aid to specific countries—especially the funds earmarked for El Salvador and the other nations of Central America. In other cases, Members will no doubt move to place even tighter restrictions on our assistance. But I hope that in the end most of us can agree that this bill presents constructive proposals to the complex problems that divide our world. It is a necessary and viable vehicle to bolster U.S. interests across the globe.

In the Middle East, our aid is designed to enhance the prospects for peace created by the Camp David accords. Israel will receive $2.5 billion in economic and military assistance. This assistance is tangible evidence of our historical support for the State of Israel—our closest friend and the most dependable democracy in the region—and it supports U.S. strategic interests in the Middle East.

At the same time, the $2 billion provided to Egypt will help that country fend off pressures from parties opposed to the peace process. And it demonstrates our determination to stand by any Arab nation willing to step forward and negotiate peace with Israel. Finally, funds under the peacekeeping section of the bill will directly support the multinational force that oversees the implementation of the Egypt-Israel Peace Treaty.

In the world's poorer countries, over $1 billion in U.S. development assistance will pay for programs to promote agriculture, rural development, private enterprise and sound nutrition. Almost half of those funds will go to the poorest of the poor—the 20 percent of the world's population whose daily life is a struggle for survival, and over $300 million is dedicated to defusing the slowly ticking time bomb of population growth. This program is especially important. By the year 2000, 2 billion more people will inhabit the globe. Every acre of usable farmland will have to feed twice as many people as it did in 1975. Skimping on population assistance now can only lead to far greater financial and human costs in the future.

Finally, this bill begins to balance the economic and military portions of our overall foreign aid budget. Increases for international narcotics control, UNICEF, the U.N. development program, the children's survival fund, and the Peace Corps will offer real help to people who have known only hardship.

But we still have a long way to go. In the last 20 years, military spending has outstripped development aid by a 16 to 1 count. Under this administration, the inequity has only deepened. Since 1980, military aid has increased 100 percent. Development assistance has lagged far behind with a 6-percent increase. As a result, most of the world is dangerous and destitute—a place where poverty and injustice breeds hatred and buries hope. In the end, some stark facts speak for themselves: 450 million people suffer from hunger and malnutrition; 600 million people have no jobs or are less than fully employed; 2 billion people—half of the world—cannot find clean water to drink; 11 million babies die before their first birthday; and 8 million refugees—the inevitable byproducts of 14 ongoing wars—have been forced to flee their homes in order to save their lives.

In the 5 minutes it has taken me to give this speech, 150 children have died for want of food or a simple vaccination. At the same time, $7.5 million has been spent for military purposes. That is a crime. This foreign aid bill, through far from perfect takes a first step toward redressing that injustice. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DYMALLY).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. DYMALLY) is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee for giving me this opportunity to speak in support of this bill.

I suspect that the easiest no vote one could cast in an election year is a no vote against a foreign aid bill, so it takes some courage, some deliberation, and some careful thinking to vote on a package such as this.

This bill is a compromise, a moderate compromise, in my judgment, that brings a measure of aid to a number of countries in need of aid. I cite one particular area, and that is the Caribbean. Under the Kissinger recommendations most of the funds were earmarked for Central America. In this piece of legislation the funds are spread not only through Central America but in the Caribbean, that portion that we historically know as the English-speaking islands.

For Belize, the so-called "Pot of Gold" for Central America, Belize has been included in the "Pot of Gold."

So I think this is a good bill. I intend to cast an aye vote for the bill. The controversial part of the bill will be debated, and each Member will have an opportunity about three times to pass judgment on that portion which is controversial, that is, El Salvador.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a good bill. It deserves the support of every Member of Congress. I ask for an "aye" vote when it comes up.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS).

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEISS) is recognized for 4 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee for yielding this time to me and to commend him for bringing this foreign affairs assistance bill before the House.

I particularly want to commend him for arranging to have a full debate on U.S. policy in Central America. If recent history proves anything, it is that the United States gets itself into trouble internationally when the executive branch is allowed to act in a unitary manner and on a solitary basis without the involvement and approval of Congress.

So as we begin the debate on the future course of U.S. policy in Central America, we know we will be debating not just aid levels for the region, we will be debating whether this administration's policy of sending more troops and more military aid can bring peace, and I believe that we will determine whether the United States will be drawn into a prolonged war in Central America with a great possibility, or even likelihood, of direct American military involvement in that conflict.

□ 1740

Since coming to office, this administration has sent massive amounts of military aid to El Salvador; yet the death tallies and the death squads continue. Despite massive U.S. aid, the Salvadoran Government has yet to bring to justice the murderers not only of its own people, but of eight American citizens.

Now, U.S. advisers accompany Salvadoran pilots on bombing missions. U.S. manned OV-1 Mohawks fly combat missions over combat zones. U.S. naval vessels accompany Honduran and Salvadoran and perhaps Contra naval vessels in surveillance and attack missions against Nicaraguan shipping.

In Honduras, this administration has built a sophisticated military infrastructure complete with runways and hospitals, all equipped for use by U.S. forces in the event of an all-out war in Central America.

Mr. Chairman, we may at this particular moment be at the last best chance for using American persuasion, power and leverage to bring the contending sides to a negotiated settlement in El Salvador and in the rest of Central America.

In particular in El Salvador, it is quite clear that the guerrillas and the Government's military forces are at somewhat of a stalemate. Neither side knows what America's future military involvement will be there and so it seems to me that right now we have the basis for trying to bring about a negotiated settlement. If we wait, either one side or the other will feel that the better part of wisdom for them is to continue the war.

It is I think absolutely clear that the American people have demonstrated in poll after poll that they do not want American military involvement in Central America and this administration proceeds at its won risk, and of course at America's risk, if it continues to take the United States in that direction.

The nations in the region have demonstrated that they want our help toward a negotiated resolution. The Contadora process is something that we ought to be supporting full force rather than undercutting.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Let me just say as I conclude here that I appreciate the comments of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in this general debate as we conclude it today. The discussion has been very sensible and at a very fine level.

I would hope that tomorrow as we enter the amending process where obvious differences of opinion will flourish and come to the floor, that we can continue the same kind of intellectual, intelligent, balanced debate that we have had here today. After all, it is not just for our colleagues. The American people themselves are entitled to that. I believe it will help the entire process. With that kind of help from my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, we might have a chance of doing the first nine titles of this bill sometime tomorrow before 2 o'clock in the morning and then get to title X on Thursday morning and finish that.

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5119, the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984. While supporting this legislation, I share a number of the "Additional Views" presented in the committee report by my distinguished colleague, Congressman GEORGE W. CROCKETT, JR. This bill is very complex and reflects a multitude of diverse and conflicting views of the world, and as a result contains a hodgepodge of programs and policies. It does not present us with a set of coherent policies based upon a theoretical framework that would hold it together. In some sections, H.R. 5119 seeks to channel our foreign relations in a manner that emphasizes assertive diplomacy and the politics of reconciliation. In other areas, such as the Middle East, this legislation restricts diplomacy and takes an overtly one-sided view, making it more difficult for the United States to be a credible force for moderation and reconciliation.

Congressman CROCKETT has also raised the issue of an overemphasis on military assistance as opposed to economic assistance. The balance in this legislation is clearly unsatisfactory given the problems in the world which are primarily political, economic, and social in nature and not resolvable through military assistance. Given the need in the world, particularly in the Caribbean, Africa, Central America, and Asia for food, clothing, and housing, this bill which provides $4 billion in military aid, and only $5.6 billion in economic assistance, and $960.9 million in other types of assistance, presents at best a workable legislative compromise. It also presents an unfulfilled moral agenda given the imbalances between military and economic assistance and between regions of the world in terms of need and human suffering.

However, this legislation has a number of very positive features, particularly as it seeks to address human rights and economic development in many areas of the world. Because of these features and because I believe it is in our national interest to pass a foreign assistance bill which provides at least some policy framework for our assistance programs, I have decided to support H.R. 5119. I want to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for his leadership and for his acumen in structuring H.R. 5119, which represents, "the art of the possible."

As chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus Task Force on Haitian Refugees, I am especially appreciative of section 803 contained in title VIII, which concerns itself with, "Promoting the development of the Haitian people and providing for orderly emigration from Haiti." In this section, the Committee on Foreign Affairs expresses its concern for the promotion and protection of human rights in Haiti by conditioning assistance on the certification by the President that the Government of Haiti "is making a concerted and significant effort to improve the human rights situation in Haiti by implementing the political reforms which are essential to the development of democracy in Haiti, including the establishment of political parties, free elections, and freedom of the press." Section 803 also states that—

If the President cannot make such a determination, fiscal year 1985 economic and military training assistance to the Government of Haiti cannot be obligated; however, under section 123(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act economic assistance can continue to be provided through PVO's, and Public Law 480 food assistance programs can continue.

I very much appreciated the committee's cooperation in structuring this section which reflects a shared concern with equitable, bottom up development, and human rights. Section 803 provides a narrative on recent developments in the human rights area which are not reflective of forward movement in this area. More recent events reflect some indication of a change in a more positive direction, one that I hope will continue and enable our relations with the Government of Haiti to improve, particularly in the vital arenas of trade and aid.

Sections 804, 805, and 806 also contain provisions which will be helpful to our relations with the Caribbean. Section 804 expands economic support funds for the eastern Caribbean by earmarking $44 million for the countries of this neglected region. This is $25 million more than proposed by the administration. This is vitally necessary if these nations are to be able to improve their infrastructure and to take advantage of the trade provisions of the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

I also want to congratulate the committee for its recognition that regional integration is crucial to the development of the Caribbean. Its strong recommendation to the administration to work with representatives of the Caribbean Development Bank, the Caribbean Common Market, and the Carribean Free Trade Association in order to enhance the development and implementation of a plan for regional integration and development is well taken. Section 805 which would establish a program of scholarships for economically disadvantaged students from Latin America and the Caribbean is very much needed and is definitely in our national interest.

Section 806, which seeks to maintain the bipartisan support and independence of the Inter-American Foundation, is very much in order given recent developments which appear to have involved an attempt to politicize and impose an ideological straightjacket on this respected and valuable institution. Having a familiarity with the work of the Inter-American Foundation in Haiti where it functions in a most productive and useful manner, providing an opportunity for the poor to identify their needs and to work to meet these needs, I am most pleased that subsection (a) of section 806 reaffirms and clarifies this most important development ethic.

With reference to Africa, the continent with the greatest need for development and economic assistance, the only new initiative is contained in title IV, entitled "Economic Policy Initiative for Africa." This initiative, which proposes $75 million in fiscal year 1985 to promote policy reforms for the purpose of promoting policy reforms and economic growth, raises a number of concerns quantitative and qualitative. Seventy-five million dollars to address the poverty, hunger, illiteracy, and disease is woefully inadequate when measured against the need of sub-Saharan Africa and the dollar amounts provided to other regions of the world. I am encouraged that the committee has raised and addressed an additional concern that the initiative be targeted not only to promote economic growth but also to encourage equitable distribution of resources in order to meet the basic human needs of the poor in sub-Saharan Africa. There has also been concern that without careful attention this additional economic assistance could be used to impose East-West criteria in an area of the world which cries out for development and humanitarian aid. For example, in our relations with Zimbabwe the administration has demonstrated a penchant of utilizing short-term political criteria in its decisonmaking on the allocation of economic assistance. I am pleased that the committee has added a provision requiring prior congressional consultation regarding potential recipients. In short, while I welcome increased attention to the pressing economic situation of sub-Saharan Africa, the low level of assistance provided and the opportunity for ideological bullying is troubling and not unlike the reservations a number of Members had in the debate over the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

As stated in my opening remarks, with reference to the Middle East, I share Congressman GEORGE CROCKETT'S objections to a number of the provisions that deal with this troubled region. Section 909, which codifies a U.S. policy against any and all contacts designed to moderate the position of the Palestine Liberation Organization toward a diplomatic solution to the terrible conflict in the Middle East based on mutual recognition and justice for all the peoples of the region, is in my judgment an unwarranted restriction on our Nation's ability to play a moderating and constructive role. Section 911 presents a distorted and one-sided picture of Egyptian-Israeli relations, and is gratuitously provocative. It puts the onus on progress in fulfilling the Camp David accords solely on the Egyptians. It states that "U.S. assistance to Egypt is provided in the expectation that Egypt will support and fulfill the provisions of the Camp David accords and the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty." This ignores the responsibility, both moral and political, that both parties have in the peace process. I share Congressman CROCKETT'S view that the Israeli Government as well as the Arab Republic of Egypt "has the same obligation to demonstrate its good faith in a generalized Middle East peace settlement * * *." Support for Congressman CROCKETT'S amendment, that would seek to clarify that U.S. assistance to Israel and Egypt is provided with the expectation that both countries will support the provisions of the Camp David accords and the Egyptian-Israeli Peace Treaty, is imperative if we are to be fair and effective in our diplomatic efforts to build on the Camp David accords.

I also urge my colleagues to support the very reasonable amendment that will be offered by our colleague Congressman GERRY E. STUDDS. This amendment would prohibit any U.S. military aid to El Salvador unless the Congress, by passage of a joint resolution, approves a Presidential certification that the Salvadoran Government has met the following conditions: removal of those responsible for or associated with the death squads from military, security, and police forces, and establishment of effective control over those forces responsible for death squad activities. The amendment would require compliance with the Geneva Convention and negotiation among all parties to the conflict, unless the guerrillas refuse to participate. The amendment also requires the release of political prisoners, progress toward an effective judicial system and a free press, and progress on land reform. Unless we insist on the removal of those within the security apparatus, who are wedded to murderous violence, there is little hope of genuine economic and political reform in El Salvador.

In conclusion and on balance, this legislation imposes a necessary, if imperfect, framework for the carrying out of our foreign assistance program and clarifies congressional priorities and areas of concern. Our foreign policy needs such a framework and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5119.●

● Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, there are a vast number of issues in this bill, not only because it is a bill that deals with global problems, and not only because it authorizes a vast sum of money, but because this bill represents foreign policy. When we enact this bill, we are either approving or disapproving an enormous range of foreign policy decisions. But because the scope of debate is limited, and because no one of us can equal the resources of the foreign policy establishment, we can only focus on a few items. I want to address myself to Central America.

If we accept the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROOMFIELD), we will in effect be embracing the policy of the administration in Central America. In its essence, this is the same policy that has been followed in that area for the past 70 years or so, and which led directly to the problems that we see today. This is a policy that embraced stability over justice, a policy that favored exploitation over legitimate enterprise, a policy that encouraged repression over reform, a policy that stood against, rather than with, the needs of the poor, the landless, the helpless. The consequence is that we are not now seen as a government that stands for hope and justice, a government that stands with the people against their oppressors. The consequence is that the region is left with little or no hope for reform without resort to violence—and so there is revolution and rebellion.

Oh, we are told that the El Salvador election makes it all better. But one election does not a government make, any more than a single swallow brings about spring. The election of Mr. Duarte might mean a great deal, or it might mean nothing. He has, after all, been elected twice before, and frustrated twice before. The question is not whether he can be elected, but whether he will be permitted to govern—and if he is, whether he can forge a government that his people can see as legitimate, that they can trust, that they can have some hope in. And of course, all that remains to be demonstrated. As I have said, he has been twice elected and twice not permitted to govern before—not a very encouraging history.

What we need, then, is a bill that recognizes the dismal past and that insists that the Government of El Salvador earn the aid that we might authorize. The bill offered by the committee imposes some minimal conditions to encourage a government of reform and legitimacy—but the administration substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan is sadly lacking in those conditions.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) would strengthen the conditions recommended by the committee—so I think we can see that the committee bill is moderate and does not go quite as far as some would wish, while it does beyond anything that the administration wants.

The issue is how do we forge a policy that stands for what this country stands for. This country stands for decency. Does this bill set conditions that would encourage the growth of a decent government in El Salvador? Does it discourage actions that have been undermining legitimate government in Honduras? Does it try to do anything about outrages in Guatemala? Does this bill reward governments that work toward the kinds of things that we stand for? Things like elections that have meaning; things like land reform, like reasonable opportunity, like elementary justice, like basic schooling, like roads and some kind of help for economic advancement? For we cannot forever prop up the corrupt, the unjust and the ineffective.

If we cannot stand for a bill that helps governments that earn and deserve the support of their people, we are fooling ourselves. The Government of Vietnam did not earn the support of its people, and it failed—and no one can say today that the people of Vietnam live in a happy state. But we could not save it even with unlimited treasure and unlimited blood, because it would not be saved. Nor can we save any other government from itself. This bill must impose reasonable conditions for aid, because it must embrace a policy that will work. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan does not represent that kind of policy and it ought to be rejected.

If the Government of El Salvador has been transformed by an election. I will be mightily surprised. I suggest that it takes more than one election to make a government—it takes a government that works. An election victory means only one thing: a license to try and do a given job. The task does not end with an election success—it only begins at that point. The Government of El Salvador has yet to do its job. It has only gained a license to try. Until it tries, and unless we can be satisfied that this is a government worthy of our support, worthy of the confidence of its own people, there is no way that we could say that aid would be of any benefit.●

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, today we have before the House a very important bill, the foreign assistance reauthorization for fiscal year 1985. This bill provides a 1-year authorization for various U.S. foreign assistance programs including, of special interest to me, the international family planning program within the Agency for International Development (AID).

H.R. 5119 includes $320 million in foreign assistance for international voluntary family planning efforts; $15 million of that amount is for the very important region of Central America, as recommended by the Kissinger Commission report on the region.

There is some controversy surrounding this program, and I wanted to take this opportunity to discuss why, in my view, these voluntary family planning programs are so crucial and may be the most important of all our foreign assistance activities.

U.S. population growth has stabilized. The United States is not facing social and political problems as a result of population growth. The population problem in this country is due to immigration rather than population growth—a fact that we will soon grapple with when the House considers the immigration bill later this spring.

Unfortunately, most countries of the world, and especially the developing nations, are in a very different and much more difficult position. The world will grow by 84 million people this year. Growth rates are high because death rates have declined faster than birth rates. Some success has been achieved in international voluntary family planning efforts because world growth has declined slightly over the past decade from 2 percent to 1.8 percent. However, this is still not enough. One indication—it took a hundred years for the world's population to increase from 1 billion in 1830 to 2 billion in 1930. The world now increases by 1 billion people in less than 15 years.

What does this mean in real terms? Ninety percent of the world's growth is in the less developed countries. These are the very same countries that are experiencing the most difficulty in providing the essentials of food, water, clothing, and shelter to their citizens. Unemployment is as high as 40 percent in many developed nations and a significant number of children do not have access to education. In addition, the developing nations have been unable to increase food output at the same pace as the population is growing.

World leaders in the developing nations have taken note of this situation and have instituted programs in their countries to provide voluntary family planning services to their citizens. Contrary to what opponents of the U.S. international voluntary family planning program may argue, the United States does not force family planning services on any nation. Rather, for AID to provide assistance, a request must be made for those services by the host government.

And how are these world leaders concerned? I will give you some examples. On April 28, 1983, Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, the President of Mexico, spoke to the Mexican National Population Council. He said some very significant things worth repeating:

> Policies for quantitative population control are justified insofar as they translate into qualitative improvements for people of all ages, not only the human beings now being born but for those already living. . . . It is important to point out that in population policy, as in planning in general, consensus has a profound and far-reaching impact on national life. It has been rightly said that population is our most precious heritage. The people are the protagonists of our history and the subject of our destiny. . . . In our constitution, man is the object of our democracy. That is why, in the recent popular referendum, great emphasis is placed on population policy as a social right which permits greater individual freedom, especially for couples. . . . A far reaching population policy would add dignity, strength and clarity to our institutions.

Also of interest are additional comments by Indira Gandhi, the Prime Minister of India, at the United Nations Population Award ceremony:

Long before our independence we realized that povery could not be effectively combated unless the size of the family was limited to enable each child to have a better share of resources and opportunities. . . . The Government can act only with the consent and cooperation of the people. Our family planning program is entirely voluntary and we recognize the importance of involving voluntary organizations in its implementation.

It is said that prosperity is a good contraceptive. But the effects of development are submerged unless we bring about a low birth rate. Family planning is an input for development, an indispensable exercise in human capital formation. Education, better capacity for producing and earning a higher rise in per capita income are possible only when population is curbed. * * * We are pursuing our objective with undeviating steadfastness. But we have not and shall not use coercion.

Child bearing should be a joy, not a burden, and since it is the mother who bears and rears the child, we are concerned not only with her health but with her will. Family planning is proof of our love for our children and a test of our claim to be good mothers, good fathers, and a good society.

Both of these statements are indications of the interest and commitment of the developing world to voluntary family planning efforts.

There have been many allegations about how voluntary family planning services are delivered in other parts of the world and the U.S. role in coercion and abortion. The United States has long played an important role as a leader in the effort to provide safe and effective voluntary family planning services to all individuals. Never has this effort included the promotion of coercion or abortion. All AID funded projects have been and are subjected to compliance procedures. Not one penny of U.S. AID funds goes to finance abortions, abortion related activities or coercive family planning practices.

For the United States to reverse our commitment in this vital area, as we are approaching the United Nations World Population Conference in Mexico City this August, would be a serious mistake. Accordingly, I would urge all of the Members of this body to reject the Smith amendment and retain the commitment to international family planning efforts.●

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WEISS) having assumed the chair, Mr. AUCOIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5119) to authorize international development and security assistance programs and Peace Corps programs for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROVIDING CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR ROBBERY OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharge from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 422) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide a criminal penalty for robbery of a controlled substance, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HYDE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for an explanation.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I might say that I have an amendment at the desk which would, indeed, incorporate the compromises that have been effected between the other body and we in the House in consideration of the Controlled Substances Registrant Act which passed the House on April 2 of this year.

Basically, the parties in the other body and those in the House dealing with this legislation have agreed upon the House bill with I think four relatively minor changes.

First, we are adding a sentence enhancement, if the offense is committed with a dangerous weapon or device. This would carry a maximum sentence of 25 years imprisonment and a fine of up to $35,000.

Second, we have changed the level of bodily injury required to trigger one of the jurisdictional elements of the offense.

We have reduced the injuries from serious bodily injury to significant bodily injury.

We have also required that the Attorney General report to Congress for 3 years on his enforcement of this act.

Fourth, we have changed the term "registrant" which is not strictly defined in the statute to a person registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. 822.

It is a good bill. We think it has a good threshold. As the gentleman from Illinois well knows, who has been one of the leaders in attempting to pass pharmacy robbery I know for at least the past two Congresses, I think that we have addressed the problem. We have taken into account I think the concerns of the State prosecutors who feel that we are expending unreasonably Federal jurisdiction. This recognizes that the State authorities still are the primary focus of the street crime, including robberies of all kinds, but there is a definite Federal interest, a Federal need to involve itself in the prosecution of pharmacy robberies and burglaries and we think it is a well balanced, reasonable piece of legislation.

Mr. HYDE. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this amendment which the gentleman from New Jersey is going to offer is the result of a compromise based on S. 422 and H.R. 5222, both of which have passed the respective bodies of the Congress. I am informed that DEA statistics indicate that 342 armed robberies of controlled substances from pharmacies occurred during the first 3 months of 1983 alone. There is a tremendous profit potential in pharmacy crime.

This amendment that will be offered, I am informed, to S. 422 allows Federal law enforcement involvement where DEA and FBI agents can make a contribution to the case.

I do want to say that this legislation is based in large part on the hard work of Chairman HUGHES and Congressman HAROLD SAWYER, minority member of the subcommittee, and Senator JEPSEN in support of pharmacy crime legislation and I commend their efforts in moving this legislation in the House.

Last, may I say that pharmacy crime legislation in this Congress would not be possible without the work of the National Association of Chain Drug Stores and the National Wholesale Druggists Association.

I want to commend the chairman for expediting this very important legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. I just want to echo the sentiments of the gentleman. I think the industry has been extremely supportive. They have been very helpful in attempting to craft legislation that maintains the balance that both the gentleman from Illinois and I seek and the gentleman is very modest. The gentleman himself really has been a leader in this body in endeavoring to pass pharmacy, robbery, and burglary legislation and I commend him for those efforts.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 422

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) chapter 103 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 2118. Robbery of persons registered under the Controlled Substances Act

"(a) Whoever takes or attempts to take from the person or presence of another, any material, compound, or prescription containing any quantity of a controlled substance belonging to or in the care, custody, or control, management or possession of a pharmacy or a person registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 822) by force or violence, or by intimidation, shall be imprisoned for not more than twenty years, or fined not more than $25,000, or both.

"(b) Whoever enters or attempts to enter the business premises or property of a pharmacy or a person registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 822) with the intent to steal any quantity of a controlled substance shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.

"(c) Whoever, in committing any offense under subsection (a) or (b), assaults any person, or puts in jeopardy the life of any person by the use of a dangerous weapon or device, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned for not more than twenty-five years.

"(d) Whoever in committing any offense under section (a) or (b), kills any person, shall be subject to imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

"(e) If two or more persons conspire to violate this section and one or more of such persons do any overt act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, which may not exceed the maximum punishment prescribed for the offense, the commission of which was the object of the conspiracy.

"(f) For the purposes of this section, the term 'controlled substance' has the meaning set forth in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802).

"(g) For the purposes of subsection (b), the term 'business premises or property' includes storage facilities, vehicles, aircraft, trucks, or other means of transport or delivery.

"(h) Violations of this section may be prosecuted only upon approval by the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or a designated Assistant Attorney General, unless assistance is requested by a State or local law enforcement official.".

SEC. 2. The table of sections for chapter 103 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"2118. Robbery of persons registered under the Controlled Substances Act.".

SEC. 3. For each of the first three years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States, shall submit an annual report to the Congress with respect to its enforcement activities relating to the offense described in the amendment made by the first section of this Act.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. HUGHES

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. HUGHES: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Controlled Substance Registrant Protection Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. Chapter 103 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"2118. Robberies and burglaries involving controlled substances

"(a) Whoever takes or attempts to take from the person or presence of another by force or violence or by intimidation any material or compound containing any quantity of a controlled substance belonging to or in the care, custody, control, or possession of a person registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 822) shall, except as provided in subsection (c), be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both, if (1) the replacement cost of the material or compound to the registrant was not less than $500, (2) the person who engaged in such taking or attempted such taking traveled in interstate or foreign commerce or used any facility in interstate or foreign commerce to facilitate such taking or attempt, or (3) another person was killed or suffered significant bodily injury as a result of such taking or attempt.

"(b) Whoever, without authority, enters or attempts to enter, or remains in, the business premises or property of a person registered with the Drug Enforcement Administration under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 822) with the intent to steal any material or compound containing any quantity of a controlled substance shall, except as provided in subsection (c), be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both, if (1) the replacement cost of the controlled substance to the registrant was not less than $500, (2) the person who engaged in such entry or attempted such entry or who remained in such premises or property traveled in interstate or foreign commerce or used any facility in interstate or foreign commerce to facilitate such entry or attempt or to facilitate remaining in such premises or property, or (3) another person was killed or suffered significant bodily injury as a result of such entry or attempt.

"(1) the term 'controlled substance' has the meaning prescribed for that term by section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act.

"(2) the term 'business premises or property' includes conveyances and storage facilities.

"(3) the term 'significant bodily injury' means bodily injury which involves a risk of death, significant physical pain, protracted and obvious disfigurement, or a protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental or sensory faculty.".

SEC. 3. The table of sections for chapter 103 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"2118. Robberies and burglaries involving controlled substances.".

SEC. 4. For each of the first three years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall submit an annual report to the Congress with respect to the enforcement activities of the Attorney General relating to the offenses created by the amendment made by section 2 of this Act.

Mr. HUGHES (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO AMENDMENT ENACTED BY LEGISLATURE OF HAWAII

(Mr. AKAKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I will introduce a bill today which seeks to require the consent of Congress to an amendment enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii.

In 1920, the Congress of the United States passed the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. This act was enacted to "rehabilitate" Native Hawaiians through a government-sponsored homesteading program. Native Hawaiians, descendants of not less than one-half part blood of inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands prior to 1778, were able to recapture possession and control of the public lands of the Territory of Hawaii as homesteads, a total of approximately 200,000 acres. Qualifying Native Hawaiians were thus able to lease a tract of Hawaiian home lands at the nominal cost of $1 a year to use as a means to achieve social and economic well-being.

The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act also required that successorship of a tract be designated to any relative of the lessee, provided that he or she qualified as a Native Hawaiian as defined in the act.

In 1959, the Hawaii Admission Act provided that ownership of the Hawaiian home lands be transferred from the United States to the State of Hawaii. These lands were to be held by the State in trust for Native Hawaiians and administered in accordance with the act. The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act was adopted as a part of the constitution of the State of Hawaii, and the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands was created to administer the Hawaiian home lands under the commission.

Mr. Speaker, the bill which I am introducing today is presented to the Congress in accordance with section 4, subsection (2) of the Admission Act. This bill seeks the required consent of Congress to an amendment enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act.

The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920 was adopted as a provision of the constitution of the State of Hawaii as a compact with the United States relating to the management and disposition of the Hawaiian home lands.

Under the provisions of the Admission Act, "An Act to Provide for the Admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union" (March 18, 1959), Congress transferred the management and disposition of the Hawaiian home lands to the State of Hawaii.

Subsection (2) of section 4 of the Admission Act states "that any amendment to increase the benefits to lessees of Hawaiian home lands may be made in the constitution, or in the manner required for State legislation, but the qualifications of lessees shall not be changed except with the consent of the United States."

On June 18, 1982, act 272 was signed by Governor Ariyoshi. Act 272, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1982, seeks to amend section 209, in relation to successors to lessees, of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. Under section 209, upon the death of the lessee, his or her interest in the tract or tracts and the improvements thereon, shall vest in the relatives of the decedent provided that such persons qualify to be a lessee of Hawaiian home lands. Persons are qualified to be a lessee of Hawaiian home lands if they are Native Hawaiian. The term Native Hawaiian means any descendant of not less than one-half part of the blood of the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands previous to 1778.

Act 272, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1982, seeks to amend section 209 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act to allow for successorship of lessee's interest in the tract to the following relatives to the lessee:

(1) husband [and], wife, or children, who are at least one-quarter Hawaiian, or

(2) Native Hawaiian, widows or widowers of the children, grandchildren, brothers and sisters, widows or widowers of the brothers and sisters, or nieces and nephews.

During the month of April, I was fortunate to have had the opportunity to participate in hearings in Hawaii on the Report of the Native Hawaiians Study Commission. Throughout the course of the week-long hearings, witnesses testified regarding a change in the blood quantum, the definition of the amount of blood required to qualify as a Native Hawaiian, as used in the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920. Advocates for a change in the blood quantum claimed that the quantum currently serves as a divisive mechanism in Hawaiian families. Opponents felt that the change would deny those beneficiaries currently waiting for Hawaiian home lands tracts expeditious and fair treatment.

However, I must indicate for the RECORD that although some consideration has been given to a broader change in the definition of the term Native Hawaiian, the bill which I am proposing today amends the section only as to successorship to allow those descendants of Native Hawaiian lessees to be designated interest in the tract or tracts upon death of said lessees if they have 25 percent Hawaiian blood. In introducing this legislation, I am simply requesting that Congress consent to the amendment of the Hawaii State Legislature to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920.

In order to explain simply the intent of this amendment, I would like to explain the circumstances leading to its creation. The Department of Hawaiian Home Lands, the body which acts as trustee for beneficiaries of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, found that current lessees face a grave problem. Under the terms of the Admission Act, if the lessee is a Native Hawaiian—at least 50 percent Hawaiian—and that lessee is the only person in his immediate family who is a Native Hawaiian, then his spouse and children will be able to live on, use, and occupy Hawaiian homelands only as long as said lessee is alive. When said lessee dies, his spouse and children will not be able to continue to live on, use, or occupy Hawaiian homelands.

I would like to submit for the RECORD an article from the Garden Island of April 16, 1984, which illustrates the problems of Native Hawaiians' successors today. You will see from the article that the present law has a divisive effect on Hawaiian families. The implementation of Act 272, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1982, will have an obvious positive impact on the plight of Native Hawaiians. The article follows:

[From the Garden Island, Monday, Apr. 16, 1984]

A FAMILY SPLIT ILLUSTRATES PLIGHT OF HAWAIIANS

(By William LeGro)

An Anahola family dispute over a Hawaiian Homes lease is the latest incident displaying the problems facing the program and the people it's supposed to be serving.

While the immediate issue is whether one member of the family is entitled to the lease, underlying the fight is the desperation many Hawaiians feel about their chances of ever getting a piece of the 200,000 acres the Department of Hawaiian Homes Lands owns.

In Anahola, the story goes like this (names are being withheld to protect the family's privacy):

Mr. K had a lease on an Anahola houselot, and built his house there, raised his family, and died. On an official notarized form, signed by Mr. K and then—Hawaiian Homes Commission Chairman Billie Beamer, dated Oct. 15, 1975, Mr. K stated the terms of successorship under the law had been "fully explained to me. I do not wish to consider any relatives."

Mr. K didn't want any of his relatives to succeed to his lease. Instead, he wanted the DHHL to appraise his house and pay his widow for it. Not having enough Hawaiian ancestry, neither she nor the couple's children could succeed to the lease. The children told The Garden Island their father didn't want to split the family by choosing one of the many cousins to succeed him. Instead, he wanted the lease to go back on the list of available properties and be awarded to the next qualified person on the waiting list, which now has more than 7,000 people on it.

In a letter dated Oct. 25, 1978, then-Chairman Merwyn Jones expressed condolences to the now-widowed Mrs. K. Jones said the lease would be terminated in accordance with her husband's wishes, the net proceeds of the improvements (mainly the house) would be sent to her, and the property "would then resume its status on unleased Hawaiian Home Lands, and the Department will lease this homestead to the next applicant on the list."

In that letter Jones also noted the family had expressed interest in renouncing Mr. K.'s will and having a qualified relative succeed to the lease. Although the department had earlier approved the will, Jones said the DHHL, would consider renouncement of the will and allowing a relative to succeed.

But it would be a long and time-consuming process Jones said. And until a successor was found, Mr. K.'s wife and children—ineligible to succeed—could continue to live in the house.

And so they did. They're still there, but have been told they will soon have to move to let a cousin who has been awarded the lease move in.

But everything had changed in the intervening years, the children say. They changed their minds about renouncing their father's will—strains had already developed as the search for a successor had begun. They say a cousin qualified by ancestry to succeed had first promised she would share their family home with them when she succeeded to the lease—and had then backed out of the promise.

Seeing the battle developing, the children say they went to see DHHL Kauai's representative Juliet Aiu to call off the renouncement of the will and the search for a successor. They say they realize their father's wishes had solid foundation in reality.

The children say Mrs. Aiu called Honolulu for them and had the daughter speak to a DHHL official, who said he would see what he could do about stopping the successor search. He said he would send them a letter, the children say, but no letter arrived.

And the search went on. DHHL Ombudsman Ken Toguchi told The Garden Island the department placed four legal ads for a relative-successor, and the cousin who eventually got the lease was the only one to answer.

Toguchi said Mr. K's will make the property revert back to the control of the DHHL, which went looking for a successor. The decision, he said, was the Commission's to make, and the Commission decided to let the cousin succeed.

Toguchi said the department should have the check ready for Mrs. K this week (actually, the money will be loaned to the cousin, who will pay Mrs. K). If Mrs. K accepts the money, he said, "It's all over."

The children vow they won't leave their family home until the Hawaiian Homes Commission revokes the successorship and awards the property to the next applicant on the waiting list, as their father wanted and as the department previously said it would do.

They say their cousin's father—their own father's brother—is the one who got the successorship for his daughter. They claim there are seven people who will sign affidavits saying the uncle boasted he got the award for her by knowing the right people in the right places in government.

When the cousin was contacted by The Garden Island to get her side of the story, her father came on the line and said that "There was no will," that the award was made "by the books" and was "all legal."

The children say they won't leave their home under these circumstances. They are prepared to face the police and the courts. With the money coming from the DHHL very soon, the showdown may be just around the corner.

More than 7,000 Hawaiians have waited up to 30 years for a lease, and those are the ones who qualify under the 50 percent or more Hawaiian ancestry rule. Mr. K's children—and there are more than 100,000 such part-Hawaiian people without the minimum 50 percent Hawaiian ancestry—are the targets of a Congressional bill to open up the lands to those of less than one-half Hawaiian blood. That change is probably far down the road.

The federal government is investigating the operations of the Hawaiian Homes program following a lawsuit by native Hawaiian groups. The department has been criticized for not getting proper compensation for its commercial leases and for "losing" thousands of acres of land through faulty record-keeping.

The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act has been in effect more than 60 years, and governs more than 200,000 acres of land expressly for the benefit of Hawaiians. Yet in Anahola land is so precious a family is split over a few thousand square feet. This is not the first article The Garden Island has carried about bitter divisions among Hawaiians over Hawaiian Homes, and it's likely not to be the last.

To remedy this problem, this bill reduces the Hawaiian blood requirements for a spouse or offspring of a Hawaiian homestead lessee to qualify as a successor to a homestead lease.

In addition to lowering the blood quantum to 25 percent, the bill will eliminate the requirement of the lessee to designate a successor at the time the homestead award is granted. The bill will also allow the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands to select a successor to a lease in the event the lessee fails to designate a successor upon his death.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that you understand the importance of this issue to the people of my State. It is recognized that self-determination is a desirable goal of Hawaiians; the goal of self-determination would be furthered by passage of this bill. Let us now work to fulfill our responsibility in offering our consent to Act 272, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1982, to relieve current lessees, and their families, of their frustrations and despair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to precede the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) in special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO A GREAT AMERICAN—EDWIN B. FORSYTHE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker it is with a great sense of sorrow that we come together today for this special order to eulogize a dear friend and a distinguished public servant, our late colleague, ED FORSYTHE.

ED's passing is a tremendous loss to this body and to the people of New Jersey, particularly his constituents in the 13th district whom he served with great dedication. We will miss him not only as a colleague and friend but also his independent spirit, as much as we will miss the trademark bowtie that became such a familiar fixture in this Chamber.

Since he came to Congress in 1971, ED became known as a "workhorse"—and the phrase most often used to describe him was "quiet but effective." ED never sought the limelight, but was instead content to work hard for his constituents and for his beliefs behind the scenes.

He played a crucial role in fashioning a number of legislative compromises. In his role as ranking minority member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, ED had the difficult task of balancing the interests of environmental protection with those of resources development. As a leader in the fight to preserve the Endangered Species Act, ED was instrumental in fending off numerous attempts to weaken that law. His commitment to national wildlife refuges was demonstrated by his authorship of the Non-Game Fish and Wildlife Act, and his important role in the success of the National Environmental Protection Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

ED began his government career in 1948 as secretary of the Moorestown Board of Adjustment. He was elected to the township committee in 1953 and served as mayor from 1957 until 1962, when he became chairman of the township planning board, a post he held through 1963.

From 1963 until his election to Congress in 1971, ED served in the New Jersey State Senate, moving up the ranks as assistant majority leader, minority leader, senate president and then served as Acting Governor in 1968. While serving in the senate, ED was responsible for legislation to create a statewide grand jury which gave New Jersey law enforcement officials the necessary tools to pursue and prosecute organized crime and corruption.

ED was a fiercely independent legislator, who put his principles above politics. His Quaker background gave him a strong commitment for world peace and this was apparent when dealing with military appropriations and foreign policy. His strongly held moral beliefs in this area earned him widespread respect from his colleagues.

In the years that ED and I served together, he could always be counted on to put partisan considerations aside whenever it came to the best interests of the people of New Jersey. On many an occasion, ED was the one who would pull us all together as a delegation, in a spirit of bipartisan cooperation, to work on matters affecting our State.

At this time, I want to take a moment to commend the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BREAUX), who has introduced a joint resolution that will rename the Barnegat and Brigantine Wildlife Refuges in New Jersey for ED FORSYTHE. As a cosponsor of this legislation, I am pleased that we passed this legislation to commemorate ED's work in this area, and I can think of no better way to pay tribute to his dedication to preserving the wildlife of our Nation.

I extend my deepest sympathies to ED's wife Mary, his daughter Susan, and the rest of his family. We will miss ED FORSYTHE a great deal.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODINO. I yield to the gentleman form New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the dean of the New Jersey delegation, and I commend him for taking out this particular special order.

Mr. Speaker, just 2 months ago, when ED FORSYTHE announced that he would not seek another term in office, I knew I was losing a close and valued colleague in the House. Now I have lost a good friend as well. ED's unfortunate death last month has taken from us a great legislator and a fine individual.

ED FORSYTHE was always a special friend and trusted advisor to me. When I first came to the Congress, ED went out of his way to work with me on a number of issues, sharing with me his valuable years of experience in Congress. Though we served on opposite sides of the aisle, I can honestly say that partisanship never stood in the way of our mutual efforts, detract from the work that needed to be done, or affect our close relationship.

Throughout the years, I had the privilege of working closely with ED on many issues affecting our adjoining districts in southern New Jersey. I also served with him on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, where we joined forces on a number of proposals aimed at protecting our New Jersey shore. In the fields of environmental protection and conservation, ED clearly left his greatest marks as a leader.

ED's rarest quality, which I deeply admired, was his conviction to follow his conscience. ED legislated with honesty and integrity. By doing so, he always stood out as an example of what is right about our Government, and what public service truly means.

Over the years, ED worked diligently and steadily, maintaining the highest standards in his efforts. He was a conscientious and thorough lawmaker who concentrated on substance, rather than style. He never sought the limelight.

ED FORSYTHE was active in public service from 1948 until this year, starting out on his local governing body and continuing his involvenment up through his election to the 91st Congress, and his reelection to each Congress since. But even after years of service in Washington, ED maintained close contact with his constituency at home. His work and his family were his life—a life that has been full, meaningful and productive.

I know I am not alone when I say that ED will be greatly missed, for we have been enriched by his presence among us.

But he had, even after years of service in Washington, maintained close contact with his constituency at home. His work and his family were his life, a life that has been full, meaningful and productive. I know that I am not alone when I way that ED will be sadly missed for we have all been enriched by his presence here in the Congress.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today to pay tribute to our good friend and colleague, the late Congressman ED FORSYTHE. Our Nation and State of New Jersey sustained a great loss with the passing of the distinguished and dedicated gentleman. He was a man of integrity—a man of principle.

He represented the best that this Nation has to offer. He served quietly but tirelessly and effectively for the people of his district. There was not an ounce of pomposity or pretention in ED FORSYTHE. He was a warm, down-to-earth man, very much at home with the people of his Pine Barrens district.

In these few short weeks since his passing, we have become painfully aware of the tremendous work he shouldered every day. We also are aware of the emptiness and void left by his passing, as we endeavor to continue without his guidance, without his patience, and without his foresight. As senior Republican in the New Jersey delegation, he provided the anchor for us in the political storms.

ED FORSYTHE spent most of his adult life working for the public good. He entered public service in 1948 to work in the government of his hometown of Morrestown. By 1963, ED found himself in the New Jersey State Senate and, by 1968, president of that distinguished body. In 1968, he served a brief tenure as Acting Governor of the State of New Jersey.

ED FORSYTHE came to Washington in 1970. Here he distinguished himself as a friend of the environment and a foe of Government waste and excess.

His legislative accomplishments are many. He held the post of ranking minority member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. ED FORSYTHE was a major legislative leader in fashioning the Fisheries Conservation and Management Act. This 1976 legislation came from the Fish and Wildlife Subcommittee, on which he was the ranking minority member at the time. This crucial bill recognized the need for rational and prudent management of fish resources. The act resulted in the creation of regional commissions which manage the taking of fish and promote the development of fish. Successful passage of this landmark legislation was but one example of his expertise and parliamentary skill.

He was also a leader on many other important bills, including many changes we have seen with the respect to the Coastal Zone Management Act; natural wildlife refuge bills; and Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act, the so-called ocean dumping bill.

The National Wildlife Federation recognized his considerable legislative accomplishments in 1980 by naming ED FORSYTHE its Legislator of the Year.

Long before I met ED FORSYTHE, his reputation was well-known to me. Having been elected in 1980, many people preferred advice that proved useful. Among the best bits of advice I received was from those who had known ED FORSYTHE and his distinguished leadership in the New Jersey Senate. Their advice was simple, "when you get to Washington, you will find it necessary to know whose word you can trust and whose advice is sound and not self-serving. ED FORSYTHE is one whose word is good. You can trust him."

That proved to be one of the best political and professional counsels a freshman legislator could have received.

There will be simply no way to replace ED FORSYTHE. His breadth of experience and willingness to serve so completely are indeed rare.

ED FORSYTHE was a man of high principle. When he spoke, this Congress listened. His voice is now quiet but he will be long remembered.

● Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in joining Representative RODINO in this special order in memory of our late colleague, EDWIN B. FORSYTHE.

Congressman FORSYTHE was a man dedicated to many great causes and was respected by all who know him. He served as ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

Congressman FORSYTHE was a legislator for 13 years and became a strong and effective voice for natural resource legislation, and legislation protecting our wildlife refuges.

EDWIN was a humanitarian. A sensitive, caring person who made valuable contributions toward making this world a better place to live.

Let history recall Congressman EDWIN B. FORSYTHE for the great American and legislator that he was.●

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, ED FORSYTHE was a decent, honorable man.

The House has lost a conscientious, thoughtful, hardworking Member.

I had the pleasure of serving with ED for nearly 10 years on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. He made enormous contributions to the protection of our natural resources—bringing to the legislative deliberations of the committee the spirit of bipartisanship so important to conservation initiatives.

ED demonstrated the cooperative spirit essential to the functioning of this House as a legislative body. He represented his constituents and the principles of his party without acrimony and without unnecessary divisiveness and confrontation.

Rather, in a firm, honest direct manner, he acted in accordance with those principles which he held deeply.

I shall miss ED in the House and, particularly in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

I feel very sorry that ED will not enjoy the years of a fulfilled retirement which he has earned.●

● Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my House colleagues today in paying tribute to a man who was more than a neighbor or fellow Member of this body. EDWIN FORSYTHE was a friend.

Because his office was but a few doors down the hall from mine in the Rayburn Building, we oftentimes crossed paths or walked to the House floor for votes or debate together. It was on those occasions, perhaps more than at any other time, that I fully appreciated the depth of his knowledge about this House and the legislation we consider here daily. I admired his even, balanced approach to the most difficult of issues and I sought his input on issues that affected his congressional district in New Jersey and mine in Ohio. He impressed me with his concern for his constituents and with his understanding of issues that were complex and detailed.

The House will miss ED greatly, just as the people of his congressional district will miss his dedication to their needs and concerns. If we continue to adhere to the principles ED upheld and remain true to the example he set in this Chamber, then it will be that he is gone, but certainly not forgotten. I considered him a good friend and I extend to his fine family my deepest sympathy at this time of their loss.●

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, we have all lost a trusted colleague and friend. When one mentions ED FORSYTHE, the words trust, respect, and integrity come to mind; a patriot who served his State and Nation with dignity.

Sincerity proved to be ED's greatest asset during his more than 30 years of public service. He maintained a low profile in office, yet worked intently on the issues of concern to his constituency.

The people of New Jersey's 13th District expressed a deep concern for their environment—Congressman FORSYTHE represented their interests as ranking minority member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. He was an effective advocate for wetlands preservation, a prime sponsor of the 1976 law that created a 200-mile fishing limit, and a strong supporter of the Endangered Species Act. He worked for what he believed in and got results.

As a leader of the New Jersey Delegation, ED could always be counted on as a team player, choosing always to share rather than monopolize, give rather than take. He brought a sense of decency and integrity to public office at a difficult time.

A man of wisdom, a private man, a man who touched the lives of so many—Congress and the nation will sadly miss this fine American.●

● Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey for allowing me to participate in this special order to honor a colleague all of us greatly admired.

Mr. Speaker, when I came to Congress in 1977, my first assignments were the Public Works and Transportation and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees. I was most privileged and fortunate to have ED FORSYTHE as one of my first ranking minority leaders.

The qualities I admired most in ED were his dedication to the nonglamourous, but important, committee work, his attention to individual Members' concerns, and the fairness and decency he displayed in addressing those concerns.

As many have said today, ED's decency, fairness, and hard work characterized his 35 years of public service. These qualities were exemplified when ED began his public career tackling the burdensome but important job of secretary of the Moorestown Board of Adjustment. ED's emphasis on getting the job done quitely and effectively continued through his service as a township committeeman, mayor, State senator, and U.S. Congressman.

ED's efforts did not go unnoticed by his colleagues. At every level of government service he achieved a leadership position among his peers. I believe this recognition by his peers is a lasting tribute to ED.

ED's leadership and work in Congress will always leave a profound and positive impact on our Nation and particularly Louisiana, where our natural resources are the key to the State's welfare.

ED played a critical role in the passage and shaping of vital natural resource legislation. These landmarks acts included the Fishery Conservation and Management Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and the Endangered Species Act.

Most importantly, ED was instrumental in forging the landmark 1978 Outer Continental Shelf Land Act amendments. Since its passage ED worked diligently to assure that the OCS Act was properly implemented. He always realized the importance of the OCS program to the Nation and our energy security needs.

It was a real pleasure to serve with ED on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee as well as the Select Committee on the Outer Continental Shelf.

We will miss ED greatly.●

● Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, with the passing of the Honorable ED FORSYTHE, the State of New Jersey has lost one of its ablest public servants, America has lost an outstanding legislator, and I have lost a good friend.

ED's experiences prior to serving in Congress prepared him well: his 8 years in the New Jersey State senate enabled him to serve as assistant majority leader, minority leader, and senate president. In 1968, he also served as Acting Governor of New Jersey.

ED's 14 years in the House of Representatives were characterized by significant accomplishments. As senior Republican in New Jersey's congressional delegation, ED distinguished himself as a principled, hard-working leader, whose battle with cancer in no way diminished his vigorous pursuit of the goals he had for his constituents and for the country at large.

ED's family deserves our deepest sympathy. They may take comfort, however, in the fact that ED's contributions to our Nation long will be remembered.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, today I join the distinguished dean of the New Jersey delegation in honoring the memory of EDWIN B. FORSYTHE with whom we served for many years. ED was an exceptional legislator and a fine human being. He did not shout to make his point heard because he did not need to. When he spoke on the issue that concerned him most—the preservation of our environment—he spoke from the heart and with conviction. He cared about his constituency and his State. Before, and up until his death, he actively sought to eliminate ocean pollution—a problem that has threatened New Jersey's beaches and plagued its citizens for far too long.

As a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and, in the last 3 years, its ranking minority member, he was instrumental in the passage of important environmental legislation such as the Endangered Species Act, the National Environmental Protection Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

ED FORSYTHE was a man of conviction. Even though he disagreed with his own party at times, he did not compromise his beliefs, but always voted his conscience. As a Quaker, he was a man of peace. His votes on defense issues demonstrated this. We shall all remember EDWIN B. FORSYTHE for the man he was and the beliefs for which he stood.●

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, on March 29, of this year we lost a good friend and colleague in ED FORSYTHE of New Jersey. ED served in the House of Representatives for 13 years and established a reputation as an effective legislator and real leader in this institution. He was a kind and decent human being and we all miss him very much.

ED began his outstanding record of public service in 1948 as secretary of the Morristown, NJ, Board of Adjustments. Following these humble beginnings ED served as mayor of Morristown and then went on to be elected to the State senate. He rose quickly in the leadership ranks in the senate, holding positions of assistant minority leader, minority leader, senate president, and president pro tempore.

ED was first elected to Congress in 1970 to fill the unexpired term of the Honorable William Cahill in the 91st Congress and was then reelected to his first full 2 year term in 1972.

In his career in Congress, ED served with distinction on the Standards of Official Conduct Committee, the Science and Technology Committee, and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, where he most recently held the position of ranking minority member. For the past 3 years, Mr. Speaker, I have had the distinct pleasure of serving with ED on the Merchant Marine Committee where I admired and respected his valuable leadership. ED was an outstanding legislator who was able to forge consensus and compromise on nearly every issue in which he was involved. Through his work on the Merchant Marine Committee, ED developed a reputation as a protector and defender of our Nation's fish and wildlife resources. He played a critical role in the passage of the Fishery Conservation and Management Act, the Endangered Species Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Additionally, he was the prime author of the Nongame Act which has increased the attention given to the many wildlife in this country that are not hunted.

In addition to wildlife issues, ED was a leading spokesman for the development of our Nation's energy sources. As a member of the ad hoc Select Committee on the Outer Continental Shelf, which developed the 1978 amendments to the OCS Lands Act, ED was an early proponent of accelerating the development of our offshore resources in a timely and safe manner. His commitment to developing energy resources domestically was coupled with his strong devotion to environmental safeguards. He was a champion of environmental concerns and worked to maintain a delicate balance between the protection of our Nation's environment and the orderly development of our natural resources.

I, for one, Mr. Speaker, will sorely miss ED FORSYTHE and I am proud to have had the opportunity to serve with him in Congress. His tremendous contribution to the legislative process will long be remembered in this august body. In the truest sense of the term he was a gentleman and a scholar and we are all better off for having had the privelege to know him.●

● Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, Adlai Stevenson said:

What do we mean by patriotism in the context of our times? * * * A patriotism that puts country ahead of self; a patriotism which is not short frenzied outbursts of emotion, but the tranquil and steady dedication of a lifetime. There are words that are easy to utter, but this is a mighty assignment. For it is often easier to fight for principles than to live up to them.

EDWIN FORSYTHE both fought for and lived up to the principles he espoused.

ED transcended both politics and party. He was not afraid to go up against the mainstream. A careful and thoughtful legislator ED FORSYTHE built a strong environmental record which was at the same time sympathetic to the inevitably accompanying issue of development.

With his passing we are losing not only a friend, but an able and knowledgeable Member of Congress. He will be sorely missed in this body, as well as in the 13th District of New Jersey which loses an experienced and dedicated Representative.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his wife Mary and their child.●

● Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, a deep sadness came over this Chamber on the 29th of March, when it was announced that our esteemed colleague from the 13th District of New Jersey, ED FORSYTHE, had died. This sadness will fade, but slowly, for ED, although a quiet man, was an effective and hard working part of this body for almost 14 years. Many suspension days will pass before we will realize that we cannot look for ED's counsel on the many bills that come from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee where he was for so long the able ranking Republican member.

ED's passing is a loss not only to this Chamber, to his wife Mary, whom he affectionately called "Mickey," and to his daughter, Susan. The people of New Jersey have lost a faithful public servant, his staff has lost a good boss, I have lost a good office neighbor, and all of us have lost a friend.

I am proud to have worked with ED for several years on the Education and Labor Committee and to have served in the House with him. I hope the tributes paid to him today will somehow comfort his wife, his family, and his fine staff.●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to give tribute to our late colleague and very dear friend, EDWIN B. FORSYTHE.

ED was a man committed to public service in the New Jersey Senate and this House. He served as a State senator from 1963 to 1969, rising to become president of the New Jersey Senate, and acting Governor in 1968. His dedication to his party was respected by all who knew him, and ED was elected to the Republican National Convention in 1968 and 1976. Let there be no doubt about it, ED FORSYTHE made his mark on the representative bodies of his home State and here in Washington.

We have indeed lost a good and resourceful leader, a man dedicated to public service and commitment. I shall remember him as a fine colleague who very much deserves to be honored today.●

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to have this opportunity to pay tribute to our late friend and colleague, ED FORSYTHE, and to say how much I will miss working with him here in the Congress.

As a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I came to know ED well in his capacity as ranking minority member. He was an able legislator, a sound leader, and a true gentleman. His presence will surely be sorely missed.

ED was respected and recognized for his conservation efforts, and for his balanced thinking in the realm of environmental affairs—the awards and tributes he has received through the years attest to that. His tenure in the House was marked by consistency, thoughtfulness, and a sound sense of the need to represent the people. He will be missed by his constituents, his colleagues, and the political community at large.

I would like to take this opportunity to extend my deepest condolences to ED FORSYTHE's family, and to reiterate to them that he has left a very deep and positive mark.●

● Mr. LOEFFLER. Mr. Speaker, ED FORSYTHE devoted over 20 years of outstanding public service to the people of New Jersey and to our Nation—first as a member of the New Jersey senate where he served as assistant majority leader, minority leader, senate president, and acting Governor—then as a Member of this body, where he served with great distinction as ranking Republican on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and on the Science and Technology Committee.

I had the opportunity to work closely with ED on the Republican Committee on Committees, where I was impressed by his dedication and sense of fairness.

ED FORSYTHE devoted his 13 years of service in the House to bettering the lives of all Americans. He worked diligently to fashion legislation in the area of fisheries development and wildlife management. He also contributed his special expertise on issues relating to maritime policy, our Nation's Coast Guard, and the Panama Canal, and for this we are all most appreciative and grateful.

Finally, ED stood firmly by his principles that hard-working Americans should not be overburdened by Government regulation and taxes and that our free enterprise system is the greatest hope for the development of human potential.

My wife Kathy joins me in remembering ED today and in extending our condolences to ED's wife, Mary, and daughter Susan.●

● Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it was with a great deal of sadness that we learned of the death of our colleague and friend from the State of New Jersey, ED FORSYTHE.

Congressman FORSYTHE had a long and distinguished career in New Jersey politics—locally, in the State senate and, finally, in the House of Representatives. He served the people of New Jersey the only way he knew how—honestly and with great dedication.

For those of us in the New Jersey delegation, we were privileged to work closely with ED on a great many issues. We benefited from his vast knowledge and expertise on a daily basis.

It is well known that ED FORSYTHE was a major influence on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the prime mover of the legislation to set a 200-mile fishing limit. But, he was much more than that.

ED FORSYTHE was a decent and honorable man, strong in his convictions, dedicated to his family and friends. He often shunned the attention offered to Congressmen, preferring to live a humble and quiet life.

With ED FORSYTHE's passing, all of us are a little poorer, for we have lost a good friend and conscientious colleague. But having known and worked with ED over the years, all of us can be grateful that we are richer for the experience.●

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of a dear and respected colleague, ED FORSYTHE. I share the sadness of his family and friends in his recent passing. ED will be long remembered as one of the most honorable and respected Members of Congress.

Since he was first elected in 1970, ED was a quiet, stable, reasonable voice in committee and in debate on the floor. Of his many legislative accomplishments, I know ED was probably most proud of his strong support for the Endangered Species Act and other environmental preservation issues. A deeply religious man of the Quaker faith, ED was committed to expressing that denomination's beliefs in nonviolence and passivism. Each year when the defense appropriations bill would come to a vote, ED would offer the motion to recommit the bill to committee. Although I rarely supported his motion, I admired his integrity and strength of conviction expressed in this way.

ED served well the citizens of New Jersey, even before he was elected to the House. The senior Republican on the New Jersey delegation, ED also served his State in the State senate and as acting Governor. The State can well be proud of his fine service on its behalf.

In closing, I would like to extend my personal sympathy to ED's family and friends. He was a man of distinction, and one I am grateful and proud to have known.●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives and the Nation recently lost a very valuable public servant, ED FORSYTHE. During two Congresses in the early 1970's, I had the privilege of serving with ED on the Education and Labor Committee and particularly on its subcommittee dealing with elementary, secondary, and vocational education. I developed the greatest respect for ED's contributions as a legislator during our service together on the committee and our more than 13 years of service together in the House. He was always a voice for reason, moderation, and commonsense.

Beyond his contributions as a legislator, ED was one of the most thoughtful and conscientious Members with whom it has been my privilege to serve in the House.

I would like to extend my personal condolences to ED's widow, his family, and his many friends. His wise counsel will be missed by all of us.●

● Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a personal tribute to my friend and colleague, ED FORSYTHE.

ED was a seasoned legislator by the time I came to serve in the House of Representatives, having chosen a career in public service more than 35 years ago, and I was to learn a great deal from observing him in my first term as a U.S. Congressman. He came from the Pennsylvania Fifth District town of Westtown and graduated from public school there. It was common ground that created between us a relationship that transcended our common professions of small businessmen and legislators.

ED did not speak harshly or loudly; he did not strong-arm or pressure his peers. What he did do was work painstakingly and constantly, choosing a low-key, low-profile approach to produce results for the benefit of the people of the 13th Congressional District of New Jersey and for the country he loved.

He lived his life, publicly, and privately, day in and day out, in a way that he could be satisfied with his efforts and that his family, friends, and constituents could point to with pride. His style was that of a soft-spoken, fair, and discerning man. Never more apparent than in the last 5 years, but certainly throughout his career as well, ED was a man of spirit and courage. His resolve to do what he thought was right never dimmed.

My memory of ED's quiet effectiveness and his faith in his fellow man and his God will always be inspirational to me. I feel fortunate in having known him as a friend and colleague.

His wife, Mickey, and his daughter, Susan, have my deepest sympathies.●

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, along with my colleagues I am saddened at the recent death of our dear friend and colleague, ED FORSYTHE. His passing on March 29 leaves a great void in this Chamber. Certainly I have lost an irreplaceable colleague.

ED FORSYTHE was an outstanding Member—one who worked hard for his district and for the State of New Jersey. Because of his committee responsibility as ranking minority member on the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee he was also a national figure.

Among his major achievements were the creation of the 1976, 200-mile fishing limit off the U.S. coast, the passage of the Endangered Species Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act and the National Environmental Protection Act. All are pieces of legislation which could not have been realized without his superb guidance.

ED FORSYTHE possessed those qualities essential for leadership—sound judgment, patience, perseverance and unyielding adherence to the principles and policies advocated by his party for the welfare of our Nation. His character, achievements, and faithful service will be an inspiration to generations yet to come.

We have lost a true friend and this country has lost a great statesman. I extend my condolences to his family and friends, and my deep appreciation for all the work he did for all of us.●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with much sadness in my heart that I rise today to join my colleagues in this much deserved tribute to our good friend ED FORSYTHE.

ED FORSYTHE was a man who devoted his life to caring for others. This gentle man never learned to say "no" when it came to meeting the needs of the people he served during his long distinguished career in public office.

Mr. Speaker, ED was a man who did it all. Like myself he began his political career on the local level, serving on the Moorestown Township Committee and later as mayor of his beloved home community. ED later moved on to the New Jersey State Senate, where he served honorably for 7 years, holding the posts of both minority leader and senate president before being elected to Congress in 1970 to fill the expired term of Bill Cahill, who had been elected Governor.

During the nearly 14 years that ED FORSYTHE served in the House, he became known as one of its most effective Members. His success story here was not based on flamboyant showmanship, but rather on a low-key gentle approach that rapidly won over many Members to his points of view.

As the ranking minority member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, ED FORSYTHE became instrumental in the development of legislation that will determine the direction of our Nation's environmental policies in the years ahead. He was the prime sponsor of the landmark 200-mile-limit offshore fishing law that was enacted in 1976, and played a key role in the formulation of such critical legislation as the National Environmental Protection Act, the Non-Game Fish and Wildlife Act, the Alaskan Land Act, the Endangered Species Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Even though he became an acknowledged national and international leader in the field of environmental protection, ED FORSYTHE's heart was never too far from his home State of New Jersey, which he dearly loved. When the controversial pinelands preservation plan was being considered by Congress, ED dove head first into the battle. And while his plan to preserve those wetlands was not greeted with unanimous approval by all members of the New Jersey congressional delegation, his genuine concern for our State most certainly was.

And just prior to his most untimely death, ED FORSYTHE was deeply involved in many important legislative areas including the fish and wildlife conservation fund and the efforts to phase out the dumping of sewage sludge into our oceans.

ED FORSYTHE is a man we will deeply miss in the months and years ahead as we here attempt to deal with the environmental problems facing our Nation. To acknowledge his accomplishments, I am proud to have sponsored legislation which designated the Brigantine and Barnegat units of the national wildlife refuge system as the Edwin B. Forsythe National Wildlife Refuge.

My prayers go out to ED's wife Mary, his daughter Susan and other members of the Forsythe family at this time of great sadness. But they can rest assured that the legacy that ED FORSYTHE left behind will serve as an example for us all to follow. I was most proud to have called him my friend.●

● Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I join my colleagues today to express my sorrow over the death of my friend and longtime colleague EDWIN FORSYTHE. ED was a Burlington County resident who had represented his south Jersey district in Congress for 14 years until his death in March.

I first met ED FORSYTHE in 1967 when I was elected to the New Jersey State Senate. ED subsequently became president of the Senate and served with distinction. We were both later elected to the House of Representatives, and had served together in Washington since 1973. All of us who knew ED would agree that he truly was a dedicated and outstanding public servant who worked hard and did an effective job in representing the interests of his constituents.

He was the ranking Republican on the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and as such had a hand in drafting legislation of great importance to the country, especially to New Jersey and the other coastal States. His activities in this area resulted in his receiving numerous awards and public recognition for his leadership in the conservation of our coastal resources. When we look at his record of accomplishments, it is obvious that ED FORSYTHE had an opportunity to contribute creatively and constructively to the welfare of this Nation, and I can say without hestitation that he was equal to the task.

Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks by citing an editorial from the Newark, N.J., Star-Ledger which said in tribute to Mr. FORSYTHE:

His district, his state and his country have lost an effective legislator with attributes that are, unfortunately, rare. To say that he will be missed may seem trite and inadequate—but it is nonetheless true.●

● Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the recent death of our colleague, Representative EDWIN B. FORSYTHE of New Jersey, is an occasion of great sadness for those of us who knew and served with him in the House.

I made the acquaintance of Mr. FORSYTHE when he first came to Congress in 1971 and was assigned to membership on the Committee on Education and Labor. He was a kind and gentle man, a reasonable man and searched diligently for the legislative answers as to what was best for the country. I was truly sorry when he transferred from the Education and Labor Committee to another assignment.

His 13th New Jersey District has lost an outstanding public servant and the colleagues in this House have lost a friend.●

● Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that I rise to pay tribute to a close friend and a very capable and committed colleague, ED FORSYTHE.

Yet my sadness today is tempered by a deep pride in having known and served with this dedicated and outstanding individual. ED worked very hard on behalf of the citizens of New Jersey's 13th Congressional District, and he worked very hard on behalf of the citizens of the United States.

As ranking minority member of the important Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee ED worked on a number of issues affecting our merchant marine fleet, our foreign policy and our environment.

ED was never afraid to make the tough decision, and to stand firm for legislative priorities he set and which were obviously supported by the citizens of his district and many others across the country. ED's deep love for an commitment to our Nation's environment and natural resources were often reflected in his voting, both in committee and on the floor of the House.

I have a tremendous amount of respect for ED's work in Congress. He was an outstanding legislator. But he was far more than that. For me, ED was a close personal friend. I will miss our conversations and his trademarked crew cut and bow tie. This House will miss his leadership and ability.

To ED's wife and family I extend my sympathies. You can be very proud of ED; his work, dedication and personality have left their indelible mark on this House and on the hearts of many of us who serve here.●

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of our late colleague, EDWIN B. FORSYTHE. News of his death was not softened by the knowledge that ED's passing came finally, with mercy, after a long and tiring illness. He will be missed here in the Congress he served well for so long.

Over his 14-year career in Congress, ED distinguished himself as a man of integrity and personal strength. He did not easily wear the cloak of assumptions which frequently accompany affiliation with one or the other parties in this body. The votes he cast—"conservative" on economic issues; "liberal" or matters affecting foreign affairs—reflect the basic responsibility ED felt to develop his own views, and to fairly represent those who entrusted him with their vote. That the people of New Jersey returned ED FORSYTHE to seven successive Congresses testifies to the respect and admiration he won in fulfillment of that responsibility.

ED won that admiration and respect here in Congress as well. As ranking member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and Fish and Wildlife Subcommittee, ED was a vital force in the development of landmark legislation approved in this body. It is fair to say that without his reasoned, responsible and tempered influence, some of this legislation would not have been so finely drafted or so responsive as it is in statute today. Through his work with the subcommittee, ED played a pivotal role in the development of the Endangered Species Act and subsequent reauthorization, the Marine Mammal Protection Act, the Coastal Zone Management Act, and—in this Congress—the Wetlands Loan Act extension. ED has earned well his reputation and our respect for his sensitive, reasoned approach to conservation and wildlife preservation.

Clearly, ED's achievements through years of conscientious work here in Congress deserve our praise today. His unbroken series of reelection and the numerous national and local awards recognizing his achievements evidence the respect outside of Congress in the communities and constituencies he represented. But I think the most fitting tribute to ED's work and life lies not in our words today, and not in the honors he has so well earned, but in the impact he made upon this institution and the laws he helped form. The legislation he helped fashion stands by itself in tribute to ED's work and life here with us.

I regret his passage, and join my colleagues in paying him tribute he so richly deserves.●

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Nation suffered a great loss when our late colleague, EDWIN B. FORSYTHE, passed away on March 29. My wife, Lee, joins in extending our condolences to his wife, Mary, and their daughter, Susan.

During his 14 years in the Congress, ED FORSYTHE was a tireless worker for the protection of our environment, while at the same time, realizing that our Nation also needed economic development. He sought to balance these competing interests in a way that ultimately benefited the Nation as a whole.

ED was not a flamboyant legislator, but he was a very effective one. He was a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and during his tenure I had the pleasure of working with him to enact into law some of the most important environmental protective legislation ever passed by the Congress. I refer to the Endangered Species Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and the National Environmental Protection Act.

When efforts were made to weaken the Endangered Species Act a few years ago, ED was one of the most outspoken opponents to such a move and was successful in adding plants and additional species of fish and wildlife to a bill strengthening penalties for selling endangered species abroad. In 1976, he was the primary sponsor of the bill that created the 200-mile fishing zone.

In addition to his environmental concerns, ED was also tireless in his desire to see that our U.S. merchant marine and shipbuilding base would return to its former position of preeminence.

I consider it good fortune that I had the opportunity to know him, to work with him, and to have him as my friend. We will all sorely miss ED's warmth and dedication in the House of Representatives.●

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my other colleagues here today in honoring Congressman EDWIN B. FORSYTHE.

ED was a decent and compassionate individual. Through our work on the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, I came to value his friendship and respect his reasoned approach to the many issues and problems before Congress.

This institution certainly needs more individuals with ED's philosophy and balance. We will all miss ED FORSYTHE greatly, and I would like to extend my sympathies to his family and friends.●

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, because ED FORSYTHE and I came to the House together in 1970, it is especially hard to realize he has departed our ranks.

He was a quiet, industrious worker and an effective Member of Congress.

ED was always interested in natural resource legislation and took an active role in promoting this interest. ED was a diligent Representative who served his constituency well, and we will miss him.

I join my colleagues in expressing my sympathies to his family and loved ones.●

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in this tribute today to our colleague, Representative ED FORSYTHE. It was a privilege to serve with him in this Chamber for 13 years. I will remember him as a very thoughtful and quiet man, who was dedicated to a strong set of principles.

I know the people of New Jersey feel a great sense of loss over his death, just as we do here in Congress. He served with distinction in the New Jersey Senate before coming to Washington in 1971 and was most able representative of the State's 13th District.

He was a hard working and knowledgeable member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and was very effective in his role as ranking Republican on the committee. He also was a strong member of the Committee on Standards and Official Conduct.

We will miss his quiet manner and bow tie here in the Congress.●

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, the passing of ED FORSYTHE is a major loss for this institution and for the Nation.

I had the privilege of serving for 5 years with ED on the Merchant Marine Committee and the subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife.

He was a quiet man, but when he spoke he was listened to.

And when he spoke, chances are he spoke on behalf of the environment, on behalf of wildlife conservation, on behalf of protecting America's abundant fisheries, on behalf of saving our precious coastline from pollution and plunder.

The legacy of this soft spoken, gentle, and hard-working man is written in our Nation's lawbooks: The National Environmental Protection Act, the Non-Game Fish and Wildlife Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and the 200-mile offshore fishing limit.

His accomplishments are as important for Massachusetts and for every other coastal State as they are for his beloved New Jersey.

Above all else, ED FORSYTHE was a gentleman. I am saddened by his passing.●

● Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity, along with my colleagues, to pay tribute to Congressman EDWIN B. FORSYTHE, who recently passed away.

The tremendous work he did in serving his constituents and our Nation is a shining example for others to follow, and his efforts will be long remembered. His record of accomplishments shows a great deal of dedication and ability, as well as personal integrity.

ED's knowledge and expertise on environmental matters made him an effective member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and he made many important contributions to this country.

My sincere condolences to Mrs. Forsythe, his family and friends in their hour of sorrow. Their loss is shared by those who knew ED, and his high level of service is etched in their memories.

I admired his work and the principles for which he stood, and it is a privilege for me to join with the distinguished Members of this body as we acknowledge the passing of this hard-working legislator.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I join in paying tribute to our late colleague, the Honorable EDWIN B. FORSYTHE of New Jersey.

Since his election in 1970, ED FORSYTHE ably and conscientiously represented his constituents in New Jersey. His entire life was dedicated to the public service starting with a position in the municipal government in 1948. He was elected to the New Jersey Senate in 1963 where he culminated his service as minority leader in 1967 and president in 1968.

During his many years of service in the House of Representatives, ED earned a reputation for hard work and thoroughness in carrying out his duties. He was particularly active in his work in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee where he became ranking member. ED was very instrumental in the enactment of the 200-mile fishing jurisdiction and was a key participant in the compromise worked out on the Endangered Species Act. For his work in that act, he received the Legislator of the Year Award in 1980 from the National Wildlife Federation.

ED had the ability to identify the issues and concerns in a way that promoted compromises and satisfactory results. During the past year, ED had become increasingly interested and involved in the problems and concerns of the U.S. Merchant Marine. His efforts had been directed to studying and analyzing the situation with the hope of coming up with alternatives and solutions that would result in a stronger and more competitive U.S. merchant fleet. It is particularly sad that he was not able to complete this effort.

His wisdom and counsel will be sorely missed by all of us. My prayers and condolences are with Mary his widow and the rest of the family.●

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, he walked quietly among us in the House of Representatives, but ED FORSYTHE made his mark here as he had previously done in the New Jersey State Senate.

I had the pleasure of serving with ED both in the State Senate in the 1960's and since 1979 when I came to Congress. He was a man of calm and reason who did not let the passion of his advocacy prevent him from hearing and carefully considering opposing opinions.

Though we differed on most issues, I admired him for many reasons including his strong support for cuts in the military budget even though Fort Dix was located in his district. He strongly upheld the Quaker's belief in a peaceful approach to conflicts.

ED FORSYTHE never forgot where he came from or why he was sent here seven times by the voters of central Jersey. He was an effective representative for the concerns of his constituents and he always remembered that the 13th District was only part of the whole, albeit a very significant part.

His work on the environment drew national recognition and was particularly important to his district and to New Jersey. ED knew the importance of focusing one's attention in order to be effective in this body. And he worked at it as a master craftsman.

For 27 years ED served in public office: First as mayor of Moorestown beginning in 1957 before elected to the State legislature and subsequently to the House of Representatives.

He was a very private man who preferred home and family to the glitter of Washington night life and he returned home to New Jersey at every opportunity.

ED's legacy to us is that he proved that one person can make a difference in public life. We are better because he walked among us.

I join my colleagues in extending to his wife, Mickie, his daughter, Susan, and the other members of the FORSYTHE family, my sincere sympathy.●

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity arranged by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO) to pay tribute to an outstanding Member of this body and a brave individual, our late colleague ED FORSYTHE.

He served his constituents in the 13th District of New Jersey since 1970 and he served them ably and well. He was an honest and honorable man who was liked by all who had the opportunity to get to know him.

I remember our service together on the Science and Technology Committee. He was always well prepared for debate and we all respected his views, ideas, and ambitions for America. We will miss him.

I extend my heartfelt sympathy to his family. We, in this body, have lost a friend and a colleague and we are the lesser for it.●

● Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, a deep sadness came over this Chamber on the 29th of March, when it was announced that our esteemed colleague from the 13th District of New Jersey, ED FORSYTHE, had died. This sadness will fade, but slowly, for ED, although a quiet man, was an effective and hard working part of this body for almost 14 years. Many suspension days will pass before we will realize that we cannot look for ED's counsel on the many bills that come from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee where he was for so long the able ranking Republican member.

ED's passing is a loss not only to this Chamber, to his wife Mary, whom he affectionately called Mickey, and to his daughter, Susan. The people of New Jersey have lost a faithful public servant, his staff have lost a good boss, I have lost a good office neighbor, and all of us have lost a friend.

I am proud to have worked with ED for several years on the Education and Labor Committee and to have served in the House with him. I hope the tributes paid to him today will somehow comfort his wife, his family, and his fine staff.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague from New Jersey, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Mr. RODINO, for reserving this time for Members to pay tribute to the late Congressman EDWIN B. FORSYTHE. I join with my colleagues in mourning the loss of an individual, who in my mind, personified the word "gentleman."

Mr. Speaker, I had the good fortune of serving with the late EDWIN FORSYTHE on the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct which I chair. Mr. FORSYTHE and I served together on the committee since his appointment in 1981.

Mr. Speaker, that was the first time I had the opportunity to work with Congressman FORSYTHE. We developed an excellent working relationship and friendship. I grew to admire his courage and dedication to the work of the committee particularly as we investigated and deliberated on some very difficult matters during the last 18 months.

Even at the most difficult and trying times, Congressman FORSYTHE never lost sight of the important and sensitive nature of the committee's work. He never missed a meeting. During the course of the investigations, EDWIN FORSYTHE consistently stressed that we seek the most equitable and fair solutions in an expeditious manner.

That simply was the manner of Congressman FORSYTHE, Mr. Speaker. He was a just and peace-loving human being. He also was a conscientious and hard working committee member. He never yearned for the limelight but rather was committed to working diligently behind the scenes. Those characteristics were displayed not only in his work on the House Ethics Committee but also during his entire 14-year career in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, as the senior Republican member of the New Jersey Congressional Delegation, Congressman FORSYTHE worked tirelessly to insure the cohesiveness of the delegation. His primary interest was the welfare of the residents of the State of New Jersey.

He also rose to a place of prominence amongst the Republican Members of the House. As the ranking Republican on the House Merchant Marines and Fisheries Committee, Congressman FORSYTHE was involved in the formation of U.S. maritime policy and the Congress efforts to preserve the Nation's wildlife.

He was credited with winning passage of the 200-mile limit, off-shore fishing law in 1976 and also played a critical role in such important national legislation as the National Environment Protection Act and the Alaskan Lands Act.

Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues on both sides of the aisle shall miss this dedicated human being. He was a friend and colleague to me on the House Ethics Committee. I know that residents of New Jersey's 13th Congressional District will mourn the loss of Congressman EDWIN B. FORSYTHE.

I take this time to extend my condolences to the late Congressman FORSYTHE's wife, Mary, and his daughter, Susan. All of us will miss this outstanding public servant.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of regret and personal loss that I pay tribute to one of this body's truly respected Members, Congressman ED FORSYTHE.

From his first term in Congress in 1970, to his death on March 29, ED worked tirelessly for this Nation and his constituents whom he knew so well.

ED's extensive knowledge and great skill were honed from a long and distinguished career in public service which stretched from the Moorestown, NJ, Township Council to the State Senate, and finally to this body.

During his years in the Congress, ED was a good friend and it was truly an honor and a pleasure to serve with him. Because of his position as the ranking Republican of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and on the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation, ED commanded great respect for his views on maritime issues as well as on environmental and wildlife preservation. There are many landmark laws in these areas that are the better because of ED.

Mr. Speaker, ED FORSYTHE was truly a servant of the people in the highest sense of the term, and he deserves to be remembered as such.

I wish to convey my heartfelt condolences to his family, and I share their grief for their loss. I know I speak for many when I say that he will be sorely missed.●

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, ED FORSYTHE was a man of high principles and deeply held convictions which together guided his actions as a Member of this House and in his personal life.

Although we had served together since 1970, it has been my distinct privilege to have him as my counterpart on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee where he has been the ranking minority member since the beginning of the 98th Congress. ED was a very fine leader of the minority and indeed set an example for all our Members. His unfailing forthright and reasonable approach contributed greatly to the enactment of much of the major legislation that has come out of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. The committee's record in fisheries, wildlife, and other environmental areas is due in large part to the commitment, vision, and efforts of ED FORSYTHE.

As chairman of the committee, and especially as his long time friend, I shall certainly miss him in the days ahead.●

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in expressing my deepest sorrow at the passing of a good freind and colleague, ED FORSYTHE. He was a highly dedicated and most distinguished Member of this body.

ED and I were both elected to the House of Representatives for our first term in 1970. I had the distinct honor of serving with ED for many years on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of which he was ranking minority member.

As one who worked closely with him on that committee, I can personally attest to the effective work and active leadership ED provided on matters considered by our committee. His contribution to legislation protecting our precious coastal environment, our fisheries resources and marine mammals was outstanding and benefited our entire Nation. With all of his legislative efforts, ED FORSYTHE always was alert to the interests and concerns of his constituents in the 13th District of New Jersey, working tirelessly on their behalf.

ED FORSYTHE's outstanding career in the Congress demonstrated the best characteristics of a true public servant: integrity, leadership, hard work, and devotion to meeting the needs of his constituency.

He was a man we all admired and respected. I extend my deepest sympathies to his lovely wife, Mary, and family. We will miss him greatly. Thank you.●

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, March 29, 1984, U.S. Representative EDWIN B. FORSYTHE, of New Jersey, died.

I am one of those Members of Congress who had the privilege of knowing and working closely with ED FORSYTHE on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, where he served with distinction as ranking minority member.

ED FORSYTHE had the ability to examine both sides of an issue and make the wisest decision. He was known for his support of both environmentalists and developers. He worked hard to create a 200-mile fishing limit and played an important role in the passage of the Endangered Species Act and other similar measures. At the same time, ED recognized the need for America to gain independence in our energy resources, and favored exploration and production of oil and gas on our Outer Continental Shelf. This was not a contradictory policy.

Indeed, ED FORSYTHE was always thoughtful and judicious in his insights, displayed the greatest integrity, and gained the respect of his colleagues on the majority side as well as on the minority.

I join with others in extending my condolences to the FORSYTHE family.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, today I join the distinguished dean of the New Jersey delegation in honoring the memory of EDWIN B. FORSYTHE with whom we served for many years. ED was an exceptional legislator and a fine human being. He did not shout to make his point heard because he did not need to. When he spoke on the issue that concerned him most—the preservation of our environment—he spoke from the heart and with conviction. He cared about his constituency and his State. Before, and up until his death, he actively sought to eliminate pollution—a problem that has threatened New Jersey's beaches and plagued its citizens for far too long.

As a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and, in the last 3 years, its ranking minority member, he was instrumental in the passage of important environmental legislation such as the Endangered Species Act, the National Environmental Protection Act, and the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

ED B. FORSYTHE was a man of conviction. Even though he disagreed with his own party at times, he did not compromise his beliefs, but always voted his conscience. As a Quaker, he was a man of peace. His votes on defense issues demonstrated this. We shall all remember EDWIN B. FORSYTHE for the man he was and the beliefs for which he stood.●

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to extend and revise their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO HARRY S. TRUMAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. ANDERSON).

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor to join with my colleagues in honoring former President Harry S. Truman on this the 100th anniversary of his birth.

At the outset, let me congratulate our distinguished colleague from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) for arranging this special order. Also, I would be remiss in my duties if I did not commend the entire Missouri delegation in helping make today's commemorative activities, including a joint meeting of the Congress, such a big success.

In April 1945 Harry S. Truman became the seventh Vice President in our Nation's history to assume the highest office in the land upon the death of a President. As we all know, he was thrust into the spotlight in a most difficult and critical period of time. Upon learning of Franklin Roosevelt's death, he said he felt as if, "the Moon, the stars and all the planets had fallen on me."

Instead of floundering about at this decisive time, Mr. Truman rose to the occasion and met the many difficult and complicated challenges with courageous and inspired leadership.

In the foreign arena, he will always be remembered and admired for the historic role he played in the restoration and reconstruction of war-shattered Europe, the creation and development of the Marshall plan and NATO, and what we now refer to as the Truman doctrine—to aid nations threatened by Communist takeover. He was also responsible for breaking the Russian blockade of West Berlin in 1948-49 with the now famous "Berlin airlift," and for strongly supporting the United Nations during its formative years.

In addition, President Truman's great sense of justice led to his momentous decision on May 14, 1948, to announce de facto recognition of the provisional government of Israel.

Later, in January 1949, after Israel repelled the attacks of the Arab States and had elected Dr. Chaim Weizmann president, President Truman recognized the Israeli nation de jure.

On the domestic front, President Truman was responsible for a higher minimum wage, increased social security, and aid-for-housing laws—including the National Housing Act of 1949.

Frankly, I feel that one of Harry Truman's greatest achievements as President centered around his commitment to civil rights. In his "Memoirs" he wrote:

> All my life I have fought against prejudice and intolerance. As a young man I was disturbed by the attitude of some people toward other races and religions. As I grew older, I could never understand how people could forget the origins and blessings of their own freedom.
>
> I have little patience with people who take the Bill of Rights for granted. The Bill of Rights, contained in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, is every American's guarantee of freedom.
>
> Equality of opportunity and equal justice under the law are not mere phrases of fine words. These are the living achievements of a people who had rebelled against despotism. Many generations have fled to this country to get away from oppression by their own governments. And it has always troubled me how some who called themselves Americans could themselves be oppressors.
> As Americans, we believe that every man should be free to live his life as he wishes. He should be limited only by his responsibility to his fellow countrymen. If this freedom is to be more than a dream, each man must be guaranteed equality of opportunity. The only limit to an American's achievement should be his ability, his industry and his character.

To this end, he submitted the first Presidential message on civil rights and signed an Executive order in July 1948 which declared that the Armed Forces would be integrated without regard to race or religion.

I first got to know President Truman during the 1948 Presidential campaign. Being Democratic chairman of Los Angeles County that year, I was automatically made chairman of the Truman campaign.

I raised the finances for a million-piece mailout, and was later told it was the largest single Truman-Barkley mailing piece west of the Mississippi River.

Whenever President Truman would visit the west coast, he would try to see as many of the grassroots people as his schedule would allow.

I can well remember one particular instance when we met at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco. For close to an hour we sat and discussed the pertinent issues of the day. He did not hesitate to ask questions and, he seemed most responsive to new ideas. I went away from that meeting with the feeling that here was a man who had the world's problems on his shoulders as President, yet was very attentive to my suggestions and genuinely concerned in helping the less fortunate.

Mr. Speaker, Harry S. Truman will long be remembered as a man of forthrightness and integrity—a man of vision and action. He had great commonsense and with all the power of high office, Harry Truman never forgot his roots.

My wife, Lee, joins me in paying homage to President Truman. We know he will continue to be simply remembered as a good man who became a great President.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank our friend from California for his very kind remarks about our session today and all those who made it possible to be such a memorable event.

Today marks the 100th birthday of Harry S. Truman. To those of us in Missouri, it is a special day. As you know, a number of months ago I offered a joint resolution which was passed in this House and also passed in the Senate which established a joint session of Congress and of course that session was the ceremony that we had this morning.

Throughout the entire time of working with the committee, I might say they were very, very helpful and filled with encouragement throughout the weeks and months working on this. But I learned that the special feeling about the late President Harry Truman is not confined to Missouri; that it is a universal feeling of respect and warmth and that President Truman, who was so keenly interested in history, would have felt, I feel, pleasantly surprised that he was being studied as closely as a positive object and lesson in history.

Mr. Speaker, a number of Governors and legislators and friends and associates of the late President Truman have sent me resolutions and letters and comments, which I will include in the RECORD.

At this point, I yield to my friend and colleague from the other side of the State of Missouri, Mr. GEPHARDT.

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to add my voice to those of the gentleman from California and others in commending the gentleman in the well for the work done putting together the joint session today and putting together the entire commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman.

Every member of the Missouri delegation and I dare say every Missourian today is proud to remember, with the rest of the citizens of the United States, the contribution made by President Harry Truman and to this country and free men who live everywhere.

I was thrilled today by the speeches that were made in the joint session and by the words of the President in the luncheon which was held in the White House.

I feel that it is important for us as Americans to remember our Presidents; it is also important to remember the values and the character and the things of importance that our President stood for. Obviously President Truman stood for many, many important values; honesty, candor, a feeling of patriotism about his country, a willingness to put human values above other considerations, which was all told to us today in anecdote and in the speeches that were so well given.

So I was thrilled to be here today to be a part of this commemoration ceremony and I simply wanted to rise at this point to commend the gentleman in the well and others who served on the committee so that the American people could have a lasting reminder of the meaning of the life of President Harry Truman.

Mr. SKELTON. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his very kind and warm remarks about President Truman.

Mr. Speaker, everyone has his or her favorite Harry Truman story. It is interesting, working through the months to actually be told or have them sent to me by various people, some who served with him in World War I, those who knew him as a county court judge and Jackson County politician, those who knew him in the Senate, those who worked with him when he was President of the United States.

Many things can be said about President Truman. I would like to share just a thought or two of mine at this time because he was a great inspiration to me at a young part of my life. I was known to him as "Ike's boy" because he and my father, whose name was also the same as mine, were friends through the years.

This morning at a breakfast in the Library of Congress there was a film clip showing the then-Senator Truman with a small statuette of the Madonna on the Trail. This is a replica of various statutes of the pioneer mother that are along various important early routes moving west across our Nation.

We have one in my hometown of Lexington, MO. And it was in 1928 that Judge Harry Truman came to Lexington and made the dedicatory speech for that Madonna of the Trail statute.

I might also say that my father gave another speech that day as he was the young prosecuting attorney of Lafayette County in Lexington at that time.

Also, I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, being brought to Washington by my father for the inauguration of President Truman and which took place on January 20, 1949.

Many people, political leaders, pollsters alike, felt that President Truman could not win the election in his own right in that 1948 campaign. Of course, it is history that he won and he won substantially.

I remember being brought to Washington and I was fortunate enough to be at the electors dinner, the electors who voted for him in the election system under our electoral process, where he made his very interesting and very accurate immitation of the radio commentator H.V. Kaltenborn.

□ 1810

It was quite a memorable event and as I recall the following day he was sworn into office as the President of the United States, which I witnessed as a 17-year-old high school student.

The President has meant a great deal to those who knew him. He has meant a great deal to those who did not know him. Integrity, determination, clear thinking, leadership, decisiveness. He was a good friend, a true friend to those who knew him. He was a warm and caring husband and father. He was a devoted public servant, the very epitome of a citizen soldier and we could go on and on about President Truman.

Let me tell two short incidents that reflect the inner side of Harry Truman. The first was related to me when I was 13 years old. I happened to be in the Kansas City Hospital. My roommate in that hospital was an elderly gentleman who was having an operation on his eyes for cataracts. In talking with this gentleman—this being 1945, August 1945—he came from the Kansas City area, he and I began speaking. He spoke of President Truman of whom he was very fond.

He told me that not too long before that he was at his job and his job was that of being a custodian at a Kansas City high school. He related to me that one day the President came to speak to the students at the school. The day President Truman came, he got out of his car and walked through the door and he saw this man, whose name was Tom, that is all I can remember, this elderly gentleman. President Truman shook hands with him and asked him if he was going to come in to hear him speak to the students of that high school.

This gentleman, Tom, told him that no, he could not because his job required him to stay there at the door. This gentleman took great pride in telling me that about 5 minutes later, before President Truman spoke, someone came to him and said, "President Truman has asked me to take your place so that you can come in and hear him speak," which of course elated this custodian greatly.

I also remember an incident in 1952 during the waning days of President Truman's term in office. He of course was campaigning, campaigning much as he did in 1948, but he was campaigning through Missouri on a train, on the back of this train. He, of course, gave one of his famous speeches to the crowd at Jefferson City, MO. And being a student at the University of Missouri, a friend of mine, young Rufus Burrus and I went over to see the President and there we did see him, heard his speech, were allowed on the train and shook hands with the various dignitaries there.

I do remember though immediately after his speech there was a gentleman who rolled himself up to the train, who, evidently through an accident or some other reason, had no legs, and he rolled himself up on what looked like a homemade skateboard. I will never forget the President seeing him down there, rather than waving at him, walked completely off the train and went down to shake his hand and to speak with him.

As I witnessed this I witnessed not just a perfunctory hello, but a very warm and kind appreciation that the President had for this man who, with great difficulty, had come down to hear the President speak that night.

I will never forget that. You really cannot describe it. But that incident portrayed to me as well as the incident that was related by my friend, Tom, about the warmth and the kindness and personal character of Harry Truman. He was truly a man who cared and was considerate of other people. I recall those instances and I hope that those who read this RECORD in the future years will know that he was far more than an outstanding President, far more than a determined and great leader, but he was a very warm and kind and caring human being.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield to my friend from Kansas (Mr. SLATTERY).

Mr. SLATTERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would first like to pay a special thank you for the work the gentleman has done and my colleagues from the great State of Missouri who have done just a fantastic job. And the gentleman's work was evident today in the ceremony which we held here which was a great inspiration to me as I listened to all the speeches given and saw people like Clark Clifford and others that were actively involved in President Truman's administration share with us their reflections. It was really inspiring to me.

I thank the gentleman for all the work that he has done.

I would like to share with the gentleman some recollections of a very special friend of mine who lives in northeast Kansas and who had a special friendship with the late President Truman and Mrs. Truman. She was the first woman to serve as Treasurer of the United States. She held that post from 1949 until 1953. Her name is Georgia Neese Clark Gray.

It is a special pleasure for me to just spend a couple of minutes, if I could, sharing with the gentleman some of her recent recollections.

Mr. SKELTON. Please do, because I had the pleasure of having a very nice visit with the lady of whom the gentleman speaks in the Truman Library not too many years ago. She is a lovely person and a very fine public servant.

Mr. SLATTERY. A great woman who made a tremendous contribution to our Nation and is continuing to do that.

HARRY S. TRUMAN MEMORIAL, MAY 8, 1984, IN THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

(By Georgia Neese Clark Gray, Treasurer of the United States, 1949–53)

Nothing in my lifetime is treasured and revered more than the memory of Harry S. Truman, 33d President of the United States, and that of his beloved Bess Wallace Truman. The celebration of the 100th anniversary of his birth evokes, for me, poignant and loving thoughts.

I shall never forget his almost fatherly concern when, in the Oval Office, President Truman offered me the position of Treasurer of the United States. "Can you afford it?" was his question. He then pointed out that the cost of living and working in Washington would exceed by far the salary. Cognizant that I would be the first woman nominated to such a post, I replied "Mr. President, I cannot afford to decline." He then closed the matter with the rather laconic comment: "No, you cannot."

Over the years prior to the appointment, I had known the President only casually as the Senator from Missouri. During his administration he was my boss. It was after returning to the family home in Independence that we, my husband Andy and I, developed a warm and devoted friendship. We were always welcomed at visits to the Truman's home on Delaware Street. We entertained the distinguished couple at our Home in Richland, Kansas.

We delight in the presentation of the City of Independence Public Service Award to be made to the Truman's Daughter Margaret Truman Daniel, next Friday night at the Truman Library. We'll be there, as we were present at the ground-breaking and dedication of the building. President Truman took great pride, as stone and steel were assembled, in the construction. To him, it symbolized an enduring record of his career for generations to come. Its imposing simplicity proclaims the man. It also served as a workplace for Mr. Truman, and work he did. He always delighted in leaving his office to stroll through the building and greet families, especially the youngsters. The prominent of the world also made a national mecca of his office and museum.

When the Truman Library Board of Trustees meets this Saturday, it will mark the 100th year of Harry S. Truman. We'll remember, somewhat personally and silently, the comforting memories. And en route to the library, we'll go past 219 North Delaware Street, recalling the "click" opening of the electronically-operated lock on the iron gate. And we'll march in memory of the walk to the open door and once again greet the indestructible Harry and Bess Truman.

May God bless them.

Mr. SKELTON. It was certainly very kind of the gentleman and very kind of Mrs. Gray to send those comments and we do appreciate them and we hope that they will be reflected in the RECORD as she said them.

We have so many comments that we could make about Harry Truman. I think one of the important lessons that we learned today from all that has gone on in this Chamber concerning the late President, the 33d President, is that we can learn something from his life and we can learn something from the way he did his work. As you know he did his best wherever it was at the time.

□ 1820

President Truman was very keenly interested in history. He let the light of history guide his work. And from our ceremony today, I certainly hope that we can take information, that we can take our judgment and we can take the knowledge not only of the type of person and the character of Harry Truman with us, but we can take those difficult decisions and the reasons he made them to heart as we make decisions in the days and years ahead for our great country.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to have this special order. Again I thank all of my colleagues who helped me so very much in this ceremony that we had today, with special recognition to Senator MARK HATFIELD, who served as the vice chairman of the committee for the joint meeting, Antoinette Arnett, the executive director who put untold hours into it, and all of those on the staffs of our colleagues who made it possible.

Harry Truman will be long remembered. I hope that what we did today will cause his memory to be all the brighter in the decades ahead, for he was a true and fine and great American.

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the centennial of the birth of President Harry S. Truman is an appropriate time to pay tribute to a truly remarkable man.

Few Presidents have taken office under more difficult circumstances than Harry Truman. With the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt—a President of considerable popularity and substantial achievement—and with the Nation still at war, Harry Truman assumed the Presidency in a tumultuous time. While many of his countrymen wondered about his ability to guide the Nation in the uncertain days that lay ahead, those who knew him best were confident that the country would be well served by his service as Chief Executive. History has recognized that that confidence was well placed.

A list of Harry Truman's accomplishments as President include some of the most important initiatives this country has undertaken in the 20th century. In the area of foreign affairs, the successful conclusion of World War II, the implementation of the Marshall Plan, the advent of the Truman doctrine, and the Berlin airlift, marked the United States as a world power with the means and the inclination to assist other nations whose freedom was threatened.

On the domestic front, Harry Truman's successful redirection of our economy from a war footing to one of peace ushered in a period of prosperity that made this Nation the envy of the world. He set the tone for the great national debate of the 1960's when he became the first President to address Congress on the subject of civil rights. His commitment to equality was perhaps best stated in his book, Memoirs when he wrote.

As Americans, we believe that every man should be free to live his life as he wishes. He should be limited only by his responsibility to his fellow countrymen . . . the only limit to an American's achievement should be his ability, his industry, and his character.

Harry Truman was a man of courage, commonsense, and good judgment. The respect and affection with which he has come to be regarded by the American people is a tribute to both the things he accomplished while in Office, and the manner in which he conducted his Presidency. His words are quoted with approval by politicians of all persuasions, and his willingness to tackle problems head-on and accept responsibility for the decisions necessary to resolve them, are traits by which succeeding occupants of the Oval Office have striven to be known.

Mr. Speaker, the Presidency provides as stern a test as can be made of the character of those who hold it. Harry Truman emerged from Office much as he entered: a man of integrity and candor whose love of family and deep sense of patriotism reflected the basic values of the American people. His character had surely been tested but had not been found wanting. He was able to return to Independence, to the house he loved, without a sense of longing because he had never lost sight of who he was and what things were important to his life. The special place which he holds in American history and in the hearts of his countrymen is due in no small measure to not only his achievements in Office but the constancy of his values as well. While he did not regard himself as extraordinary, I believe that that characterization is not inappropriate in light of the manner in which he discharged his duties and the manner in which he lived his life.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay homage to our late President, Harry Truman. As a legendary figure, stories of Harry's heroism, congeniality, and dedication to maintaining his high principles are often recited. Today we reflect with great admiration the courage he displayed when making those monumental decisions as President.

As some may remember, Harry was a decisive and conscientious wartime leader. However, his heart and his true skill lay in maintaining peace abroad and at home. He was a staunch supporter of the promotion of democracy overseas. He vowed to protect all free peoples who were unwillingly subjected to subordination by aggressive forces. In 1948, he instigated the Marshall plan which provided financial assistance for beleaguered Asian and European countries.

At home, President Truman also displayed adept decisiveness in his domestic policy. He attempted to reinstate Roosevelt's welfare ideals in his program the Fair Deal. But, perhaps his most notable contribution was his foundation work in the area of civil rights. Even one of his Executive orders included the abolishment of segregation in the armed services.

President Truman was not only a productive provider for the American people, but also an important symbol of success. His ascension from a farmer-haberdasher to a powerful world leader was proof that hard work and motivation pay off. For many Americans Harry's achievements have inspired them to strive for our highest goals. We have certainly missed this great man's humble candidness, as well as his ability to nobly assume the difficult responsibilities of President with confidence and laudable competence.●

● Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have met Mr. Truman and to be in meetings with him a few times both during and after his Presidency. I was very impressed with his directness and his ability to make people believe that he was in charge and to really want to carry out his decisions. Here was a man incapable of pretense. Some Presidents overrate their own accomplishments and try to create a Presidential image in an effort to live up to the public hero worship. But, Harry Truman knew exactly what he wanted to do and did not overrate or underrate his own capabilities. He was as plain as your next door neighbor, amiable but very firm, and always compassionate.

Some people have forgotten how he was ridiculed by opponents who are now long gone and little remembered, but I never had any doubt that Harry S. Truman would one day be revered. A review of his accomplishments through the years as artillery captain, county judge, crusading Senator, and activist in the White House—even as the failed haberdasher who honored and paid his debts—reflect his ability and integrity. At each stage of his life, he rose to his responsibilities, whatever they were. He became an enthusiastic and outstanding student of American history and what is more important, he showed the ability to use the historical knowledge he had acquired the hard way in his career as a national leader. This unassuming Missourian who was unafraid to speak his mind and to make the great decisions without looking back occupies a unique place in American history and his stature can only grow in the years to come.

As a final affectionate postscript, let it be said that President Truman's devotion to his beloved Bess and daughter, Margaret and family, was an inspiration that will always be remembered by those of us who first became active in politics when he was our President and leader.●

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, it is most appropriate for the House to take time today for reflection on the memory of Harry S. Truman, 33d President of the United States. Harry Truman's wit, his courage, and his indefatigable determination made him a legend in his own time. In the eyes of his country men and women, he will always be loved, admired and respected.

On the evening of April 12, 1945, Harry Truman sat only a few yards from where I now speak. He had joined his old friend Sam Rayburn, the Speaker of the House, for a slight libation in the Speaker's office. An unexpected and urgent call came from the White House. Truman immediately left the Hill for 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, where he was taken upstairs to the study of Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt. "Harry," she said, "the President is dead." Truman, who had not anticipated that this was the cause of his trip to the White House, asked if there was anything he could do for the widow and her family. Eleanor Roosevelt replied, "Is there anything we can do for you? For you are the one in trouble now."

Eleanor Roosevelt's remark was prescient, for Harry Truman's years at the helm of the "Ship of State" were filled with controversy, challenges and change. He led his country and the free world during years of maximum danger, when the future was by no means assured, and the nature of governments throughout the world was in a state of flux.

But through the great crises of the day, Harry Truman never doubted his ability to do what was best, and history will judge him kindly. His outward manner, the quick wit and the profane talk, disguised a learned intellect. Truman is said to have read every book in the library of his hometown and his memory was encyclopedic. He was especially fond of the classical figures of antiquity, and he felt a close affinity to the Founding Fathers of the United States. His love of history gave him a guidepost for his own involvement in public life, from his years as a county judge to his days in the Oval Office. Truman kept a copy of Marcus Aurelius' "Meditations," and often in his letters and conversations would quote from it. "If it is not right, do not do it; if it is not so, do not say it," Aurelius wrote in the second century. Harry Truman had it underlined.

Harry Truman brought the simple values of the American heartland to the White House and the world. He was honest and humane. His love for his wife and daughter was obvious to all Americans. His pride in our country, and his determination to insure a fairer deal for all its citizens, earned him the respect of the world.

Truman's record grows with the passing of every year. He led the Nation during the final months of the most destructive war in the history of human kind, and he worked tirelessly to insure that the peace would be a lasting and final one. He instituted the Truman doctrine to insure that freedom was defended and allowed to flourish. He proposed the Marshall plan, the greatest single gesture of generosity and responsibility in the 208 years of this Republic. He fought for increased aid for the elderly, education for the young, justice for the poor and equal rights for those in our society who were not white. He was a fighter for the causes he believed in, and a champion of freedom when it was threatened.

Few men have left such a lasting mark on the shape of the world. The faces of contemporary Japan and Western Europe owe as much to him as to the energy of their own people. The citizens of the United States have taken Harry Truman into their hearts as a gutsy, courageous folkhero. Somehow that seems appropriate for a politician who promised to "give 'em hell." He may well have done that sometimes. But, more often than not, he was giving the world hope. I am honored to join my colleagues in paying tribute to a great American statesman, Harry S. Truman, on the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.●

● Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor to rise in observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of one of our greatest Presidents, Harry S. Truman. Truman was an extraordinary man whose fortitude and bravery during the gravest of crises guided the United States and Europe through perhaps the most complex and turbulent of times.

Thrust into the role of the leader of the free world after the sudden death of Franklin Roosevelt, Truman led the allies to the successful completion of World War II, a victory over the Axis forces which were attempting to overrun two continents.

Truman then guided Western Europe back to freedom and prosperity with the Marshall plan and Truman doctrine. Harry Truman maintained that the United States would remain the friend of the oppressed and would not tolerate the spread of totalitarian governments.

It has been said that the mark of a great man is his ability to rise to great challenges. Harry S. Truman, the President of the United States, rose to and overcame some of the greatest challenges ever to face a world leader. His special place in history is assured and it is particularly fitting that we honor his memory on his 100th birthday.●

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today in tribute to the 33d President of the United States, Harry S. Truman. President Truman will be always remembered as a world leader in war and the architect of reconstruction of Europe and Japan after World War II.

Truman rose from sturdy American stock in Missouri to be a judge, a U.S. Senator, Vice President and, upon the death of President Roosevelt, President of the United States. In all he did he brought candor and honesty.

Growing up in north Florida, Harry Truman was one of my idols. He was a plain spoken man who said exactly what he thought and did exactly what he said he would do. Some might accuse him of being salty for the earthy way he phrased his remarks but I believe the American people responded to the genuine feelings of the man.

Truman is revered throughout America and has been the subject of books, a broadway play and the board game "Trivial Pursuit". Statues have been erected in his honor and schools and streets have been named after him.

His memory is still strong in a nation that is a better place to live because he served his Nation. As we celebrate the 100th anniversary of his birth, we should pause to remember how much this man gave to our way of life.●

● Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Harry S. Truman on the 100th anniversary of his birth. Harry Truman, the 33d President of the United States, has been described as a compassionate and humble man. He was a President with both character and commonsense and his integrity and leadership ability will be admired for generations to come. Although Truman was not initially voted into the Office, he responded to the duties and responsibilities of the Presidency by faithfully guiding the country through one of the most difficult and devastating experiences facing our great Nation.

President Truman's extensive efforts to help secure world peace through the Truman doctrine and Marshall plan have been acclaimed by all free nations. His endeavors to combat the spread of communism led to the creation of NATO. While Harry Truman made concerted attempts to help the underprivileged peoples of other nations he did not forget the people of this land. He was the first President to recognize the pressing need for civil rights legislation.

I admire this great President for his skill as a world leader as well as the ability he possessed to maintain his honor and dignity. I admire a man who never grew pretentious or self-righteous. He was raised on a farm in Missouri and by remaining solidly rooted in what is basic and good about rural and small town America, he was able—even holding the most powerful position in the world—to govern with perspective and commonsense. And after he had finished his job, he went back to Missouri, of course.

It is a good time in our history to take note and recall the valuable lessons we learned from this man of the people, and I am proud to be a part of paying tribute to one of our great Presidents.●

● Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in the special order honoring President Harry S. Truman. As we celebrate the 100th anniversary of the birth of this great American, we remember him as a man of innovative ideas, and one of this century's most influential statesmen.

Thrust into the Presidency by the sudden death of Roosevelt, Truman entered office at an extraordinary time: the complex and turbulent era ushered in by the conclusion of World War II.

His decision to end the war by dropping the atomic bomb on Japan was a difficult decision that he stood by, and in later years was praised for it. In addition, as the war concluded, Truman helped guide the Nation's economy back into peacetime channels.

President Truman was a strong, decisive man, who worked hard for what he believed in. He was ultimately responsible for the Truman doctrine which declared the United States would support all free peoples who were resisting attempted subjugations either by armed minorities at home or aggressors outside their borders. Truman also made it possible for George Marshall to carry through Congress the Marshall plan calling for the transfer of massive economic aid from the free nations of the West to the beleaguered countries in Europe and Asia.

The other side to the President possessed a quick wit to counter his quick temper, and he is known to be one of the great patriots of our country—believing that every person is responsible for the enforcement of the Constitution. During his tenure, President Truman, in an effort to shed light on his responsibilities, kept a diary. Published later as a book, President Truman felt it would help people understand the Presidency as he experienced it, and come to know him as he really was.

In an excerpt from that book he wrote a statement that truly reflects his candor and pride in being President. He wrote:

> It is a pity that some people have a contemptuous idea of politics—because politics under our system is government, and a man who is not interested in politics is not doing his patriotic duty toward maintaining the constitution of the United States. I am proud to be a politician and to work politically for the happiness and the welfare of the country.

Harry S. Truman will not only be remembered in history for his Presidency, but for the effectiveness and spirit he lent it.●

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, today we observe the 100-year anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman—a man who assumed the reigns of leadership in our Nation during difficult times, but with confidence and vision guided the United States through several tumultuous years.

Harry Truman's career symbolizes the essence of American traditional values—a man of modest upbringing who faced difficult challenges throughout his early life but never lost faith in his eventual success or abilities. As historian David McCullough recently said:

> Again and again he had turned setbacks into positive accomplishments. The boy who couldn't go to college became a life long student of history. The boy who was turned down by West Point became a model battlefield officer. The failed businessman met his debts so honorably that it is still talked about in and around Kansas City. The man who was first dismissed in Washington as the "Senator from Pendergast" became one of the prominent figures in the wartime Senate and in the Democratic Party. All in all, it had been no little man's career.

Mr. Truman faced many problems and crucial decisions during his Presidency. But he faced each crisis with a sense of confidence and a keen awareness of history. Indeed, his accomplishments became a part of history-shaping events which still have far-reaching consequences in our world today. The extent of Mr. Truman's achievements were aptly summed up in an editorial after his death in 1972: "It grows increasingly hard to remember what Harry Truman did wrong, and increasingly hard to dispute that he did most of the things right."

Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate 100 years since the birth of Harry S. Truman—a man of greatness and vision.

Although during his career few perceived his greatness, in retrospect Harry Truman distinguished himself in world affairs and earned an endearing place in history. The life and times of Harry Truman bring to mind the words of Sophocles: "One must wait until the evening to see how splendid the day has been."●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply moved to rise in honor of the 100-year birthday of our late President, Harry S. Truman.

Harry Truman—the man from Independence—is a symbol of how high a common citizen can rise in this country. He was a workingman, an entrepreneur, and an elected official who was well liked by all who knew him.

He rose through the ranks in the Missouri National Guard, eventually commanding a battery of field artillery during World War I. He ran a haberdashery after the war, and, although it failed, Harry Truman in his own hard-working way paid off the firm's debts without filing for bankruptcy.

The future President entered public life as an elected judge in 1922, and served in the U.S. Senate for two terms before becoming Vice President in 1944. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, Harry Truman became our 33d President after the death of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Despite the predictions of many people that a Truman Presidency would be weak and indecisive, he proved to be a strong and resourceful leader. He was a champion of civil rights, low-cost housing, Federal aid to education, and increased social security benefits.

Most notably, Harry Truman ordered the desegregation of the Armed Forces, oversaw a successful Berlin airlift, established the Commission on Civil Rights, and in an age of overt Communist aggression, began a policy of containment now known as the Truman doctrine. The Marshall plan, point four program, medicare, and the Fair Deal were all his brainchildren.

Harry Truman was a feisty leader who genuinely cared about the common man in this country and abroad. He probably would not have wanted this big fuss we are making over him today, but that is all right, because he certainly deserves it. God bless him.●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, The adjective most often used to describe President Truman is feisty. And he was, indeed, that.

He was the beleaguered underdog who won the Presidency in 1948 against all odds in a campaign against the do-nothing 80th Congress. I note in passing that I joined this body in the 81st Congress.

With little enthusiastic support from his party, he confounded all the political experts and won almost single-handedly by doggedly taking his campaign to the people. His opponent was a candidate who was so sure of victory that, in Harry Truman's words:

> He has been following me up and down this country making speeches about home, mother, unity and efficiency. * * * He won't talk about the issues. * * *"

No two-dollar words for Harry Truman.

Most remarkable of all, he won the Presidency despite a splintering of his party that say two Members run for that office on third-and fourth-party tickets.

In a victory that showed he was no accidental President, Harry Truman was both humorous and humble. His mimicking of the radio commentator who kept insisting during the long election night count—there were no exit polls or early projections back then—that President Truman would lose, despite his lead, will not soon be forgotten. At a victory celebration in his native Independence, MO, the President said: "I thank you very much indeed for this celebration, which is not for me. It is for the whole country. It is for the whole world."

Little was known of this man when he had the awesome Presidential mantle thrust upon him in the midst of World War II. Little was expected of him. Few knew of the depths of his courage and convictions, his vision, and his creativity.

In civil rights, Harry Truman was a pioneer. He abolished segregation in the Armed Forces. He banned discrimination by contractors working for the Federal Government. His administration challenged racial discrimination in education, arguing in court that segregation was an easy mark for communist propaganda and raised questions among our friends about the depth of our devotion to the democratic way of life.

It was a sad moment in our history when the enemies of President Truman reviled him as a tool of communism. Here was the man who created the Truman doctrine to support Greece and Turkey in their fight against subjugation by Communisits; the man who presided over the Marshall plan and the policy of containment of Soviet Russia; the President who, working tirelessly with Republican leaders of Congress, won bipartisan support for NATO—our Nation's first peacetime military alliance; the President who committed American troops to the defense of a nation under Communist invasion, an action that became so unpopular that he decided not to seek reelection. Soft on communism?

Whatever their internal problems and imperfections, Greece and Turkey, the nations of NATO, South Korea—none are under the domination of communism, thanks in no small measure to the haberdasher from Independence.

No other man in history has had to make the dread, soul-searing decision to use the atomic bomb, and we pray to God that no other one ever will. And what other President has had to endure the vilification President Truman suffered for carrying out his constitutional responsibilities—for firing an insubordinate hero general who had forgotten who was the Commander in Chief?—an action that history has vindicated.

Mr. Speaker, Harry Truman was a great President, but he always said he was two persons: the President of the United States and Harry S. Truman, father of Margaret, husband of Bess. It was Harry Truman the human being—the loving and feisty father—who wrote the scathing note to the music critic of the Washington Post for a review of his daughter's concert in which he attacked everything but "the varnish on the piano." Father Harry told the critic that he sounded like a "frustrated man that never made a success, an eight-ulcer man on a four-ulcer job and all four ulcers working."

Today, we honor Harry Truman on his 100th birthday anniversary. He will be just as greatly honored a century hence.●

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to participate in this occasion honoring the 100th anniversary of the birth of President Harry S. Truman.

In retrospect, the Presidency of Harry Truman compels great respect—especially in foreign policy—but it is unfortunate that our 33d President was widely underestimated by his contemporaries and burdened by the enormous popularity of his predecessor, Franklin D. Roosevelt. Truman, when he assumed the Presidency, was at best considered to be good natured but ordinary; at worst provincial and inept. Fortunately, he was usually indifferent to criticism.

Truman was further hampered by the fact that he was one of the worst prepared Presidents in history. As Vice President, he had been nowhere near the White House war room, had never heard of the atomic bomb, and had not even met the Secretary of State. Yet Truman surmounted these many disadvantages to be ranked as one of the greatest of all our Presidents.

It was gradually recognized that the country was extraordinarily lucky to have had Truman's leadership. His straightforward, decisive, simple, and honest style eventually inspired the confidence of even his toughest critics. Members of the Roosevelt circle who initially had been the most skeptical later rallied to Truman's defense. As David Lillienthal, whom Truman had appointed Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, wrote in the President's defense:

> The way he took on the aggressions of Russia; the courage in calling a special session of an antagonistic Congress controlled by the opposition to put through an extensive program for the restoration of Europe; his civil rights program, upon which he has not welched or trimmed—my God! What do these people want?

Truman was aided in his efforts to lead postwar America through a confusing and troubled time by a deep understanding of world history that surpassed that of most Presidents. As Truman often repeated in later years: "The only thing new in the world is the history we don't know." He had a strong sense of being part of history in the making and a humility regarding his role as President.

Today, we remember Harry Truman as one of our most beloved Presidents. We miss his unpretentiousness and his feisty rhetoric in an era of media-dominated politics in which an unimposing ex-haberdasher with a flat midwester accent might not be able to compete. But more than that we appreciate the scope of his knowledge, the depth of his character, his confidence in and understanding of his own abilities. He believed in the importance of trusting in his fellow man—"If you don't, how can you expect him to have trust in you?" Truman asked, "What's the use of living?"—and thought that the fact that many did not share such values constituted what was wrong with the modern world. He drew on the great literary works of the past for guidance and solace—from the Bible, to Plutarch, to Lord Byron—and believed firmly that the basic source of our strength as a country was a spiritual one.

But what finally distinguished him was his profound sense of his roots and his respect for the dignity of the common citizen. He liked to quote Benjamin Franklin who said:

> In free governments, the rulers are the servants and the people their superiors and sovereigns. For the former therefore to return among the latter is not to degrade them but to promote them.

"I kept that in mind when I was in the White House," Truman said in his retirement, "and I've had it in mind since I got my promotion."●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, IKE

SKELTON, for organizing this special order to honor one of our greatest Presidents, Harry S. Truman.

Many refer to Harry Truman as the common man who made good. Yet, there was nothing common about Harry Truman. From his humble early life in Missouri, Harry Truman rose to greatness because he strove for greatness.

His political life began in county government, when in 1922 he was elected as a judge in Jackson County. He then served in the U.S. Senate before becoming Vice President under Franklin Roosevelt. He gained national prominence as a Senator when he led an investigation of military procurement practices, which uncovered numerous questionable practices. In 1944, after serving less than 100 days as the Vice President, he became our 33d President upon the death of Franklin Roosevelt.

Few administrations can rival that of President Truman's. Domestically, he guided the United States in its difficult transition from a war-time economy to a peace-time economy. He laid the groundwork for medicare, and placed great emphasis on low-cost housing for the poor. Perhaps, most notably, it was President Truman who elevated civil rights onto the national stage. During the 1940 campaign, Truman asserted his commitment to civil rights in front of a group of farmers, many of whom were suspected Ku Klux Klansmen. He said:

I believe in the brotherhood of man, not merely the brotherhood of white men but the brotherhood of all men before the law.

In foreign affairs, we are all aware of the importance of the Truman doctrine, the Marshall plan, and NATO which successfully allowed free people all over the world to resist the tide of totalitarian aggression.

As the most powerful man in the world, President Truman never forgot his past or our Nation's past. He was an avid historian and believed in the value of lessons learned from the past. Moreover, Harry Truman, even after he had achieved international prominence, never forgot America's common men and women. Truman understood that it was the basic dignity and humanity of these people which made America strong.

We could marvel at the accomplishments of Truman's administration, for many hours, yet, I don't believe that is what Harry Truman would want. As we celebrate his 100 birthday let us keep in mind his ideals of leadership by example, courage, honesty, and plain speech. Perhaps he said it best when he remarked:

If politics ever gets away from the people, our country will be in big trouble. Politics is people. People count. People matter.●

● Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the idea that Harry S. Truman was born 100 years ago on May 8 is one to which I have a hard time accommodating.

The picture of Harry Truman that comes to mind is always one of a brisk, vigorous, decisive man of action—nothing at all about him suggested age or infirmity.

It was one of the great privileges of my life to be on the Democratic ticket with him in November 1948, when he so stirred the people of this country that he snatched victory away from Gov. Thomas E. Dewey who was considered by practically everybody to be the certain winner.

And I was proud to be his active supporter during the final 4 years of his Presidency.

The respect accorded to this man from Missouri today is almost universal. Prominent American leaders of both parties vie with each other in paying him homage. Polls of historians and political scientists place him among the great Presidents. Books written about him enjoy enormously successful sales, both at home and abroad.

Almost no one wants to remember the tremendous vilification that was visited upon him during the years he sat in the White House. Politicians all over the country lambasted him for his stands on civil rights. Labor leaders damned him at the highest decibel levels for his refusal to accept strikes in the coal and railroad industries which he said damaged the Nation's security. Opponents said his administration was riddled with scandal. Editorial cartoonists vied with each other in producing the most outrageously scurrilous images of him. But time has rubbed them out.

Now that he and his administration have receded into the past, the lens of history can show him as he really was: An extraordinary President who met unprecedented challenges, and acquitted himself and his country in a manner that reflected courage and honor upon us all.

Harry Truman emerged upon the national scene almost as a stranger on that April day in 1945 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt died. Roosevelt was such a commanding figure and such a dramatic one that the national spotlight was on him for the preceding 12 years. The President so dazzled the country that those around him went virtually unnoticed, even though many, like Truman, had had distinguished public careers of their own before the Roosevelt era.

As Roosevelt personified the extraordinary American, urbane and charismatic, Harry Truman came to be seen as the ordinary American. He seemed to be the man people would meet at the grocery store or the barbershop. He would not have been out of place as anyones next door neighbor.

He came unexpectedly to the Presidency and was immediately faced with absolutely stupendous decisions of which he had had no prior inkling. As Roosevelt's Vice President, Truman had never been an F.D.R. insider. The modern notion of a Vice President as a Presidential assistant had not even been considered 40 years ago.

But the modest, unassuming man who had been a farmer, a haberdasher, a country judge, and a U.S. Senator walked into the Oval Office and told his friends that he was going to do his "dead level best" and went to work.

His country was nearing the climax of a devastating world war and almost immediately he had to face the reality of the atomic bomb about which he had not been told before. He had to decide whether to loose a dreadful new weapon upon the Japanese or to face the loss of a million American lives in a final onslaught against the Japanese homeland. He opted for the bomb and thus forced an early end to the war.

Even before final victory was won in World War II, President Truman had to face the breakup of the wartime alliance, and the reality of the Soviet Union's threat to the peace and security of the ravaged and war-weakened West.

The steps he took to counter that threat set the policy of this country in the succeeding three decades, and there is no responsible authority to deny its correctness.

The momentous policy initiatives of the Nation under Harry Truman in those years from 1945 to 1953 are too well known to be repeated here.

But it is proper that, today, we pause to pay tribute to this remarkable man who could indeed walk with kings without losing the common touch.

The country owes Harry Truman a great debt, and as the years go by, there can be no doubt that his splendor as a great American will increase.●

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, it is heartening to hear the many words of praise for the late President Harry Truman. President Truman was elected in a bitterly contested campaign in 1948, with a razor-thin victory that almost no one expected to happen. So the bipartisan praise suggests, I suppose, a certain progress in the recognition of his statesmanship.

But for a political leader to be great, he must have done great deeds, he must have acted out of the ordinary. To praise Harry Truman's greatness means to praise the actions he took—otherwise greatness has no meaning.

Here, then, is a list, by no means exhaustive, of some of Mr. Truman's acts and deeds in office:

His recognition of the State of Israel within 11 minutes of Israel's declaration of independence.

The development of the Truman doctrine according to which "it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures."

The airlift to Berlin in order to break the Soviet Union's blockade of that city.

Creating the Marshall plan for massive economic recovery assistance to the war-torn states of Europe, in order to overcome Europe's weakness and vulnerability to Soviet aggression.

The development of a nuclear deterrant because "American's security and the security of the free world depend to a large degree on our leadership in the field of nuclear energy."

Establishing a worldwide strategy of mutual defense alliances from NATO in Europe to ANZUS in the South Pacific, to resist Communist aggression anywhere around the globe.

His magnanimous invitation to former President Hoover to head the Famine Emergency Committee, an act which helped restore Hoover's reputation.

President Truman followed the course of commonsense in dealing with the Soviet threat. He did all he could to help develop the economies of the free world nations so that they could resist Soviet aggression. And he did not hesitate to oppose force with force, when the Soviet imperial leaders left him no choice. He always understood that military aggression requires a military solution.

Dean Acheson described Harry Truman as "the captain with the mighty heart." Mr. Truman's plain speech made him a successful communicator in office. He shared in some of the finest qualities of the American people, and they recognized him as one of their own.

Mr. Speaker, we owe Harry Truman a great debt for his leadership and efforts on behalf of a strong America.●

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the 33d President of the United States.

While Harry—"Give 'em Hell, Harry"—was not felt capable nor sufficiently trained to lead a great Nation such as ours, he has become rated as one of the more effective and able Presidents of our time.

President Truman believed in helping those who could not help themselves and during his administration he instituted programs to help the poor and the underprivileged. He showed great leadership and compassion—as well as good old Missouri horsesense—in rebuilding Europe and Japan following the cataclysm of World War II.

As one who dedicated his life to his country, it is appropriate and fitting that we honor Harry S. Truman on the centennial anniversary of his birth.●

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honor to have this opportunity to laud one of America's finest Presidents, Harry S. Truman. On this day, the 100th anniversary of his birth, we may all feel proud as we reflect upon the courageous leadership President Truman provided during a trying time in our Nation's history.

In 1945, President Truman inherited the colossal task of trying to fill the shoes of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He responded with a display of decisiveness, innovation, and dedication that today remains an example worthy of us all. His strong leadership guided the Nation through the conclusion of World War II and into a peacetime economy. In the area of foreign policy, he established the Truman doctrine, declaring that the United States would support all free people who resisted attempted subjugation either by armed minorities within their country or from outside aggressors. The Truman doctrine was also vital for it helped pave the way for the adoption of the Marshall plan.

At home, President Truman fought for social welfare programs by supporting low-cost housing and the introduction of a health insurance program which would eventually evolve into medicare. As one of the first Presidents to address the importance of civil rights, President Truman ardently supported the wartime Fair Employment Act, designed to prevent discrimination against minority groups. It did not take long for President Truman to move out of FDR's shadow and establish himself as a firm and decisive leader.

Mr. Speaker, on this day, I am proud to join our colleagues in honoring a dedicated man, a strong leader, and a fine President, Harry S. Truman.●

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in a fitting tribute to one of this country's gtreatest Presidents. I have admired Harry Truman for many years. It is appropriate, on the 100th anniversary of his birth, that we honor this great American.

I thank the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Skelton) for taking this Special Order so that those of us who admire and appreciate the tremendous contributions of Harry Truman may show our esteem.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues a fine article on President Truman that appeared in April 28, 1984, issue of the Economist.

HARRY TRUMAN: FOREIGN POLICY MASTERBUILDER

WASHINGTON, D.C.—History has so far dealt kindly with President Harry Truman, who would have been 100 years old on May 8th had he fulfilled his intention of living to that age. The contrast between the slight opinion in which he was generally held when he took up the presidency and the towering achievements which he left behind when he departed gave rise to the unfortunate notion that the office of president of the United States has some magical quality about it that enables a small man to grow into it and become big, or an ignoble man to become noble. As has since been amply demonstrated, nothing of the kind can be expected. Truman could not have done what he did had he not, to begin with, had the right stuff in him.

His first period of office coincided with a sharp turn of the road in world politics and with the sudden emergence of a global power structure previously unseen, which called for a revolutionary change in American foreign policy. The high excitement of the Truman presidency came from the opening of the cold war and the accompanying transformation in American diplomacy, which Truman presided over. He had with him in this tenuous and alarming passage a group of public servants of exceptional quality. Without them it could not have been done, no doubt. But it was he himself, the little man with the thick eyeglasses from rural Missouri, who led the team, directed the fateful change and set the new course.

One of Mr. Truman's precepts was that you must always keep in mind who you are and where you come from. He was decidedly from Jackson County, Missouri. He was a small farmer, a wartime captain of artillery, an unsuccessful haberdasher, the elective administrator (judge) of his county and a senator from Missouri.

In 1944 he was picked somewhat indifferently for the vice-presidency by Franklin Roosevelt, to whom he was not at all close, as the one who would do least damage to the president's prospects of reelection to a fourth term. They won the election. But Roosevelt died on the 83rd day of his new term, leaving Truman high and dry. "That Throttlebottom!" exclaimed one eminent public servant with incredulity.

Truman was incomparably more simple, more direct and more limited than his predecessor. He was the last American president not to have been to college, though probably one of the three or four best-read; the last to cross Pennsylvania Avenue habitually on foot (usually with an armful of briefcases); in the words of his interviewer and biographer Merle Miller, "the last human being to occupy the White House". As president he kept on writing home to his mother and sister in Independence, Missouri, telling them what was going on in the White House and providing the 3 cent stamp himself, since this was not official business.

Of all American presidents he was the one with the least resemblance to Hamlet. It was not unknown for him to make a mess of something (in fact as an administrator he was no great shakes), but it was unknown for him to go on worrying about a decision once he had made it. He mishandled Henry Wallace in 1946, when Wallace as secretary of commerce was promoting his own foreign policy in conflict with that of the secretary of state, James Byrnes. When he realized that he had to dismiss Wallace he did it in a handwritten note so intemperate that it had to be fished back and destroyed with the magnanimous complicity of the victim. Afterwards Truman summed it all up for his mother in a few breezy words: "I had to fire Henry today . . . Well, now he's out and the crackpots are having conniption fits."

Until he became president Truman was told nothing whatever about the Manhattan

Engineering District, as the atom bomb project was called. Once he knew, he was quite able to appreciate how momentous it was. He set up the prodigiously authoritative Interim Committee to consider the future control of the new force as well as its immediate use. Later he backed the legislation that put the control of atomic energy in the civilian hands of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The immediate decision called for in July, 1945, was whether to use the bomb against Japan. This gave him no difficulty. The bomb has been developed for use in war. It offered the most efficient means of finishing the Japanese war. The chain of decisions had been long at work that led to Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Truman saw no reason to back away from the ghastly, conclusive deed, and once it was done he lost literally not a moment's sleep over it. Regrets to him were a form of self-indulgence.

FROM CHARM TO CURTNESS

Truman's presidency saw the start of the cold war, but it is necessary to be clear that the swift disintegration of the grand wartime alliance was already under way before Roosevelt's death in April, 1945, thurst Truman into the presidency. Signs of a hardening of the Soviet attitude to east-west co-operation in the postwar settlement started to appear soon after Stalin got back to Moscow from the summit conference at Yalta in February. The signs concerned Germany, Rumania and most immediately Poland; in addition, Stalin picked an unpleasant quarrel with Roosevelt about the start of negotiations for a German surrender in Italy. Truman took over an administration that was already disappointed and perturbed.

The Soviet rulers may, nevertheless, have thought that the change from Roosevelt to Truman was a change for the worse for them. If they did, the difference of Truman's style from Roosevelt's may have enhanced the impression. He was not subtle or particularly patient, he did not (indeed, could not) drench a person in charm as Roosevelt did, or use an apparently pointless digression to relax a moment of tension. When Molotov came to see him 11 days after Roosevelt's death, his staff briefed him to be firm, but he was so curt that Molotov went away in dudgeon. Mr. Averell Harriman, who was there, thought Truman's hard treatment of Molotov a mistake because it "gave Molotov an excuse to tell Stalin that the Roosevelt policy was being abandoned". He did not think it a decisive mistake. Molotov at the time was on his way to the charter conference of the United Nations at San Francisco. There the rift continued to widen without any personal help from Truman.

In May, with the war over in Europe, the president had to turn his attention to winding up Lend-Lease. This was a case in which a foreign-policy action was not merely influenced, but dictated, by domestic politics. Congress had been nagging at Roosevelt about Lend-Lease, suspicious that he might be planning to use it for some kind of global New Deal at the expense of the American taxpayer (something not unlike that did happen some years later). Truman probably had no choice but to end it, but he signed the order without reading the fine print, and the abrupt way it was done created an uproar. The Russians in particular thought themselves victims of a hostile act.

It was at Potsdam, in July, that Truman got word of the successful atomic test at Alamogordo, New Mexico, and casually mentioned to Stalin that the United States had perfected "a very powerful explosive". Stalin, who had probably heard about the Manhattan project long before Truman did, did not appear particularly impressed. Yet it does seem possible that, while the American atomic monopoly lasted, the knowledge of it affected both Americans and Russians in a way not helpful to diplomatic understanding. As for the Potsdam conference, Truman wrote to his mother about it: "You never saw such pig-headed people as are the Russians".

A PLAN AND A DOCTRINE

In the downhill slide of world affairs from the Yalta summit to the Korean war, the 15 weeks in 1947 from February 21st to June 5th have been singled out as the period in which American policy took its great leap forward. February 21st was the day on which the British embassy in Washington told the state department of the British government's decision to end its aid to Greece and Turkey. June 5th was the date of General George Marshall's commencement address at Harvard, offering Europe the Marshall plan. A participant, Joseph Jones, reconstructing the events some years later in a book, "The Fifteen Weeks", called them the most revolutionary advances in United States' foreign policy since the year of the Monroe doctrine, 1823.

Central to the change was the enunciation by the president, in his address to congress on March 12th, of what came to be known as the Truman doctrine. "I believe that it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures."

What the president was actually doing was asking for money, and for authority to step in with economic and military aid to Greece and technical military assistance to Turkey to fill the gap which had opened up with the sudden decline of British power.

On the face of it this did not require any statement so general or far-reaching. What had happened was that when General Marshall, in his terse, matter-of-fact way, explained to the congressional leaders what was needed, the congressional leaders fidgeted and muttered. The proposition sounded fishy to them. They did not feel the need to rescue the crumbling British empire or the unpopular Greek monarchy. Dean Acheson, who was present as undersecretary of state, intervened, with his chief's permission, with a rousing statement of the global danger in a situation more menacing than the world had seen since Rome faced Carthage.

The Democratic party at the time had recently lost control of congress to the Republicans, and Mr. Truman could get nothing important through the senate without bipartisan support. In foreign-policy matters this meant the support of Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan. Vandenberg had spoken early, even before Germany was beaten, of his misgivings about the course of Soviet conduct. Now he declared himself "impressed, even shaken" by Acheson's sounding of the global alarm. He insisted that the request for the money and the narrow authority which the administration needed be accompanied by a message to congress, and an explanation to the American people, in which the grim facts of the larger situation should be set out.

Acheson incorporated the "Vandenberg condition", as he called it at the time, in his instructions to the briefing team. The result was a doctrine of such general application that men like Walter Lippmann and George Kennan, whose writings and pleadings had charged the intellectual climate with much of its urgency, were startled and alarmed and devoted many months to arguing about what had gone wrong.

If the Truman doctrine was sown by political accident, it took root fast because of a convergence of challenges to the American consciousness which called for a bigger response than limited promises of aid. Mr. Kennan, startled as he was by the alarming scope of Truman's promise to the free world, nevertheless lost no time in spelling it out in the celebrated article by "X" in the summer issue of Foreign Affairs. This called for Soviet expansionism to be "contained by the adroit and vigilant application of counterforce at a series of constantly shifting geographical and political points".

This was attacked by Walter Lippmann as a recipe for over-expansion and for the recruitment and subsidizing of "a heterogeneous array of satellites, clients, dependants and puppets"—an accurate description of one part, though one part only, of what eventually happened. While later presidents have tried to elaborate or qualify, their efforts have been mostly transitory and the Truman doctrine, with Kennan's "containment" elaboration of it, substantially represents American global policy at the present day.

More important at the time, however, was the general state of collapse in Europe, of which Britain's decision to dump its Greek and Turkish responsibilities in the American lap was a mere side-effect. The team that stitched the doctrine together in a such a hurry was already at work on the outlines of the Marshall plan. Acheson delivered the first official exposition of the principles of foreign aid at a small college at Cleveland, Mississippi, on May 8, 1947. Marshall, in his customary modest language, made the offer to Europe, at Harvard four weeks later, of massive American support for a programme of European recovery; it was Truman who later insisted that this project be known as the Marshall plan. As Mr. Arthur Schlesinger was to describe it in "The Vital Centre" two years later, "Our present policy for world peace has thus settled into the formula of reconstruction plus containment".

Some interaction inevitably took place between the two. The recovery programme required an effort to organize Germany or at least its western zones; the Russians replied to that with the blockade of Berlin, to which Truman replied with the Berlin airlift and the reinforcement of the American air force in Europe—another fateful step requiring bipartisan support. Preparatory work started that summer on the North Atlantic treaty, although the treaty was not completed and signed until after Truman had confounded everybody by winning the presidential election of 1948, and had been inaugurated for his unexpected second term. It was in his inaugural address in January, 1949, that he broached the extension of the philosophy of foreign assistance to the under-developed world. The ratification by the senate of the North Atlantic treaty in the spring of 1949 was practically the last gasp of bipartisanship.

SOUR GRAPESHOT

As it turned out, much of the co-operation that Truman got from the Republicans in his first term was based on the general belief that the election of 1948 would see the end of him and that the Republicans, excluded from the White House for 16 years, would get their turn. Truman's rout of Thomas Dewey left them in a condition of frustration and impotent rage from which in some ways the party has still not altogether recovered.

One form it took was the welling up of the already powerful anti-communist stream in the nation's feelings into paranoia: the point about Joseph McCarthy was not anything original in him, it was the hearing he got in the country. Another feature was the mythology built up around Chiang Kai-shek (who was losing China at the moment Truman was elected) and concurrently, by a curious syllogism, around the Napoleonic commander-in-chief in the Far East, General Douglas MacArthur.

More subtle was the reinterpretation of the Yalta agreement to show Roosevelt, and by extension his successor Truman, as having wantonly sacrificed the national lives of free peoples to Stalin's greed for territory. Both the China lobby and the eastern European émigré groups joined in the attack on what most people believed, at the time it was done, to be the best postwar settlement that could be got in the circumstances.

Truman, with Marshall back at work to support him engaged in the Korean war against this unpromising political background. At the height of it, since MacArthur persisted in threatening to carry the war into China, he was obliged to dismiss MacArthur; he did it in his accustomed brisk, prosaic manner, to all appearances impervious to the uproar and fury that broke upon his head. "We're in for a run of hysteria in this country", he said.

From that period Truman still holds the statistical record, unbroken even by Mr Jimmy Carter, for public unpopularity as reflected in the opinion polls. While a good part of the trouble come from the national political paranoia that prevailed in the last years of his administration and the first years of Eisenhower's, that was not all.

Not only had the Republicans been out too long, the Democrats has been in too long; patronage was overdone, too many comfortable self-serving practices had been established; there were congressional investigations which revealed wrongful allocation of Reconstruction Finance Corporation grants of money and political manipulation of the tax collections. As scandals they have been exceeded before and since; still, Truman lacked the administrative sense to put them right or the political showmanship that might have restored appearances. In domestic goverment he made many innovations that the postwar era required and that have endured; yet it is as the layer of foreign-policy foundations that he is most remembered.●

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, the various proclamations, tributes, and statements relating to Harry Truman to which I referred earlier are as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, May 8, 1984 marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States, and is one of this nation's most respected statesmen; and

Whereas, in November of 1944 the voters of this country elected Harry Truman Vice President where he served only 83 days and succeeded to the Presidency in April, 1945 upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Whereas, in his first months in office, President Truman guided the country through the end of World War II and made the difficult decisions that ushered in the nuclear age and in the postwar years he oversaw America's transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy and began an era of growth and stability; and

Whereas, in foreign affairs President Truman established the cornerstones of the policy of containment in dealing with the communist threat to Europe and through the Truman Doctrine and Marshall Plan he assisted free peoples in their efforts to stem the tide of totalitarianism; and

Whereas, in 1948 Harry Truman was elected to the Presidency, battling from behind to overcome Thomas Dewey and President Truman responded to the invasion of South Korea by utilizing United Nations as well as American forces in dealing with that crisis;

Now, therefore, I, Anthony S. Earl, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman" in the State of Wisconsin.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, on May 8, 1984, the nation marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, our 33rd President and one of this century's most influential statesmen. President Truman's vision and leadership contributed greatly toward shaping the course of history in the post-World War II era; and

Whereas, Harry Truman first gained national prominence as a United States Senator from the State of Missouri; and

Whereas, in 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt chose Mr. Truman to be his vice presidential running mate. After serving only a brief tenure as Vice President, Harry Truman ascended to the Presidency upon the death of President Roosevelt in April 1945. In his first few months in office, President Truman guided the country to the successful completion of a devastating war and oversaw the transition to a peacetime economy; and

Whereas, President Truman's domestic policies clearly illustrated his compassionate nature. He prevailed upon Congress to pass legislation pledging the federal government to use all means at its disposal to assure maximum employment. He made it possible for millions of Americans to obtain low-cost housing by securing passage of the National Housing Act of 1949. And, he became the first President to submit a message to Congress on civil rights; and

Whereas, above all, the world remembers Harry S. Truman as a man of courage, decisiveness, humanity, and wit; now

Therefore, I, James B. Hunt, Jr., Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, as "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman Day" in North Carolina and commend this observance to our citizens.

STATE OF TENNESSEE—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, in honor of President Truman, President Reagan has officially proclaimed May 8, 1984, the "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman," and has called upon all Americans to "observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities in remembrance of his many accomplishments and dedication to freedom and democracy;"

Now, therefore, I, Ed Herschler, Governor of the State of Wyoming, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, as "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman" in Wyoming, and call upon the citizens of Wyoming to mark this occasion with fitting tribute to President Truman.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Wyoming to be affixed this thirteenth day of April, 1984.

STATE OF COLORADO—PROCLAMATION—THE CENTENNIAL OF THE BIRTH OF HARRY S. TRUMAN, MAY 8, 1984

Whereas, May 8, 1984, marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States and one of this nation's most respected statesman; and

Whereas, elected to the U.S. Senate from Missouri in 1934, Mr. Truman gained national recognition during World War II, when his investigating committee saved the taxpayers large amounts of money by exposing waste and extravagance in the procurement process; and

Whereas, in 1944 he was elected vice president and succeeded to the presidency in April 1945, upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Whereas, President Truman guided the country through the end of World War II and in postwar years oversaw America's transition to a peacetime economy and began an era of growth and stability; and

Whereas, in foreign affairs President Truman established the cornerstones of the policy of containment in dealing with the communist threat to Europe and implemented the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan; and

Whereas, President Truman assisted in the formation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; and

Whereas, Mr. Truman was elected to the presidency in 1948 and he responded to the invasion of South Korea by utilizing the United Nations as well as American forces in dealing with that crisis; and

Whereas, although confronted with a series of major challenges throughout his tenure, President Truman responded with courage, humanity, decisiveness and a wit which have secured his place in the nation's history as one of our most respected presidents;

Now, therefore, I, Richard D. Lamm, Governor of the State of Colorado, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984 as "The Centennial of the Birth of Harry Truman" in the State of Colorado.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT—OFFICIAL STATEMENT

America has been the birthplace of many individuals whose leadership skills and abilities serve as an inspiration to people everywhere and whose visions and policies have had significant effect in determining the course of history.

The life and leadership of Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States and a most respected statesman, stand as a magnificent example of these outstanding Americans.

Mr. Truman was first elected to the United States Senate in 1934. He distinguished himself in that body and gained national recognition as Chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program (Truman Committee). The Committee saved an estimated $15 million by eliminating waste and extravagance in defense spending.

In 1944, he was elected Vice President and he succeeded to the Presidency in April 1945 upon the death of Franklin Roosevelt.

President Truman guided our country through the waning days of World War II and made the difficult decision to deploy the A-bomb. He directed America's transition to a peacetime economy at the conclusion of the war and ushered in a new era of growth and prosperity.

President Truman's contributions to the field of foreign policy were the most far reaching. He firmly believed that nations should be free to work out their own destiny and that those who chose to be free but were threatened by outside forces were deserving of our assistance. The implementation of the Marshall Plan, the Truman Doctrine, the Berlin airlift, and the Point Four program are all indicative of his unwavering belief in and support of the right of self determination and the containment of subversive forces.

May 8, 1984 marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman. He is remembered as a man of compassion, great courage, decisiveness and wit. Ceremonies and activities will be held throughout the country to commemorate his life and his dedication to the ideals of freedom and democracy.

Therefore, in conjunction with the national observance and in tribute to a great American leader, I am proud to designate May 8, 1984 as centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman Day in Connecticut, in recognition of his many accomplishments and contributions to the progress of our nation.

STATE OF DELAWARE—STATEMENT IN RECOGNITION OF THE CENTENNIAL OF THE BIRTH OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

Whereas, May 8, 1984, marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this nation's most respected statesmen; and

Whereas, while in the United States Senate, Mr. Truman gained national recognition during World War II when his investigating committee saved the taxpayers large amounts of money by exposing waste and extravagance in the procurement process; and

Whereas, Mr. Truman succeeded to the Presidency in April, 1945, upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Whereas, President Truman guided the country through the end of World War II, oversaw America's transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy and began an era of growth and stability; and

Whereas, although confronted with a series of challenges throughout his tenure, President Truman responded with courage, humanity, and a wit which have secured his place as one of our most respected Presidents.

Now, therefore, we, Pierre S. du Pont, Governor, and Michael N. Castle, Lieutenant Governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby declare May 8, 1984, as an observance of the Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman, and urge all citizens to recognize his many accomplishments on behalf of all people.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, May 8, 1984, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this Nation's most respected statesmen; and

Whereas, First elected to the United States Senate from Missouri in 1934; and

Whereas, In November 1944, the voters elected Mr. Truman Vice President. He served only 83 days in that office and succeeded to the Presidency in April 1945, upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Whereas, although confronted with a series of major challenges throughout his tenure, President Truman responded with courage, humanity, decisiveness, and wit, all of which secured his place in the nation's history as one of our most respected Presidents;

Now, therefore, I, John Spellman, Governor of the State of Washington, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, as "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman" in Washington State.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, May 8, 1984 marks the one hundreth anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this nation's most respected statesman; and

Whereas, President Truman guided the country through the end of World War II and made the difficult decisions that ushered in the nuclear age; and

Whereas, President Truman oversaw America's transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy and began an era of growth and stability; and

Whereas, President Truman established the cornerstones of the policy of containment in dealing with the communist threat to Europe;

Now, therefore, I, Toney Anaya, Governor of the State of New Mexico, do hereby proclaim Tuesday, May 8, 1984, as: "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman" in New Mexico, and I call upon the citizens of the state to observe this day with appropriate ceremonies and activities in remembrance of his many accomplishments and dedication to freedom and democracy.

STATE OF NEVADA—A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

Whereas, May 8, 1984, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this Nation's most respected statesmen; and

Whereas, first elected to the United States Senate from Missouri in 1934, Mr. Truman gained national recognition during World War II, when his investigating committee saved the taxpayers large amounts of money by exposing waste and extravagance in the procurement process. In November 1944, the voters elected Mr. Truman Vice President. He served only 83 days in that office and succeeded to the Presidency in April 1945, upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Now, therefore, I, Richard H. Bryan, Governor of the State of Nevada, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, to be the "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman" and call upon the people of the state of Nevada to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities in remembrance of his many accomplishments and dedication to freedom and democracy.

STATE OF HAWAII—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States, was born on May 8, 1884, in Lamar, Missouri; and

Whereas, the life of Harry S. Truman was one of extraordinary accomplishment and dedication to American ideals; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman began service in the Missouri National Guard in 1905; served in World War I in France; became a businessman; entered the field of politics as a Democrat; served with distinction in the United States Senate before and during World War II; and was elected Vice President of the United States in 1944, a position he held only 82 days, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt died in office and Mr. Truman became the 33rd President; and

Whereas, the period of Harry S. Truman's public service was one of immense distress for our nation and the world, including the Depression years and the years of World War II and the Korean conflict; and

Whereas, both before and after assuming the office of President, Mr. Truman proved to be a citizen of great courage, unquestioned integrity, exceptional decisiveness, and total dedication to American principles and ideals; and

Whereas, in making decisions awesome in their implications for the world, President Truman sought the counsel of many and then acted decisively, meriting admiration for his keen logic, sound judgment, and willingness to bear the burden of crisis management; and

Whereas, Hawaii in 1953 was privileged to welcome President and Mrs. Truman as honored guests in the islands; and

Whereas, it is eminently fitting that all in Hawaii be reminded of the centennial of the birth of this great American President;

Now, therefore, I, George R. Ariyoshi, Governor of Hawaii, mindful of the extraordinary contributions of President Truman to our nation and the world, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, to be "President Harry S. Truman Centennial Day in Hawaii" and invite all in our islands to observe this day with activities appropriate to its importance.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, Harry S. Truman served America in World War I, helping to organize a Missouri regiment and later commanding a battery of that regiment in France; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman began a career in local politics in Jackson County, Missouri in 1922 and was elected to the United States Senate in 1934; and

Whereas, as a Senator, Harry S. Truman was instrumental in drafting significant legislation and also helped save taxpayers an estimated $15 million in World War II defense costs; and

Whereas, after serving as Vice President for less than three months, Harry S. Truman became President upon the death of Franklin Roosevelt on April 12, 1945; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman presided over the successful conclusion of World War II, then developed the Marshall Plan and the Truman Doctrine to aid and protect our war-ravaged Europen allies; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman was elected President in his own right 1948, and continued to show resolve in the face of communist aggression, while proposing social legislation embodied in the Fair Deal; and

Whereas, after his Presidency, in the final two decades of his life, Harry S. Truman remained a popular public figure, admired for the plain in speaking, the wit, and the decisiveness he displayed as President; and

Whereas, May 8, 1984 marks the centennial of the birth of Harry S. Truman;

Now, therefore, I George Deukmejian, Governor of the State of California, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984 as Harry S. Truman Day in California and do urge Californians to honor the memory of this great American on this occasion.

TRIBUTE TO HARRY S. TRUMAN

(By Missouri Secretary of State James C. Kirkpatrick)

In the time span of a little over a half of a century, I was deeply honored to meet the greatest President of the United States when he first campaigned for the United States Senate in 1933 and finally to receive one of my most cherished awards, the Harry S. Truman Award for Public Service in 1983.

As the publisher of the Daily Democrat in Lamar, the birthplace of Harry S. Truman, I learned much about his early childhood and talked to many about his character traits. He stood for honesty, integrity, strength and freedom throughout his exemplary life.

He earned the respect of our nation by striving to do what he felt was right. His statement, "I don't give a damn what history thinks of me. I know what I did, and that's enough for me," summarizes the leadership of Harry S. Truman, when our nation desperately sought a strong leader.

Our country needs a Truman today—for his courage and for his dedication to truth, fair play and social justice.

As a greatful Irishman for the accomplishments of our greatest President, may I close this tribute with my own form of an old Irish Blessing:

May the many moral attributes of President Harry S. Truman be continually idealized by dedicated people.

May our nation continue to respect and follow the principles set forth by this great man,

As we constantly strive for better government, after the example set for us by a great President from Missouri.

CITY OF KANSAS CITY, KANS.—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, May 9, 1984 marks the centennial of the birth of Harry S. Truman, 33rd President of the United States; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman as President guided the United States through one of the most difficult periods in its history; and

Whereas, The Truman Doctrine, Marshall Plan and NATO serve to remind us of the contributions he made to the rebuilding and stability of Europe and thus to free peoples everywhere; and

Whereas, Candidate Truman became the architect in 1948 of the greatest political upset in the history of American politics; and

Whereas, Historians have accorded to President Truman the status of one of our most respected Presidents; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman represented one of America's greatest national assets, nurtured here in greater Kansas City and inbred with midwestern common sense and decency; and

Whereas, everyone in the greater Kansas City metroplex should be proud to have called Mr. Truman, "neighbor":

Now, therefore, I, John E. Reardon, Mayor of the City of Kansas City, Kansas, do hereby proclaim Tuesday, May 8, 1984, to be "the centennial of the Birth of Harry S.

Truman" in Kansas City, Kansas and urge all citizens to observe this day.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—HARRY S. TRUMAN DAY, A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, May 8, 1984 marks the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this Nation's most respected statesmen; and

Whereas, Harry Truman was elected to the United States Senate from Missouri in 1934 gaining national recognition during World War II, when his investigating committee saved the taxpayers large amounts of money by exposing waste and extravagance in the procurement process; and

Whereas, in November 1944, the voters elected Mr. Truman Vice President where he served only 83 days in that office and succeeded to the Presidency in April 1945, upon the death of President Roosevelt; and

Whereas, President Truman guided the country through the end of World War II overseeing America's transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy, beginning an era of growth and stability; and

Whereas, President Truman was confronted with a series of major challenges throughout his tenure; he responded with courage, humanity, decisiveness, and wit securing his place in our Nation's history and in the hearts of his fellow countrymen as one of our most respected Presidents:

Now, therefore, I, the Mayor of the District of Columbia do hereby proclaim Tuesday, May 8 1984 as "Harry S. Truman Day" in Washington, D.C. and call upon the residents of the District of Columbia to join me in observing the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our thirty-third President.

CITY OF LAMAR, MO.—A PROCLAMATION

May 8, 1984, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the thirty-third President of the United States and one of this Nation's most respected statesmen.

Born in Lamar, Missouri, on May 8, 1884, Truman's birthplace was officially dedicated and opened to the public in Lamar in 1959. Lamar is very proud of this birthplace shrine which is officially listed on the National Register of Historic Places, in recognition of the outstanding significance of the property and to encourage its preservation. It serves as a symbol for Harry S. Truman, whose personal sacrifices for his God, his nation and his people merited him the highest honor the United States can bestow—The Office of the President of the United States.

Truman was elected to the United States Senate in 1934, and in July 1944, he was nominated as the vice-presidential candidate to run with Franklin Roosevelt. Mr. Truman drew the largest crowd in Barton County history when he returned to Lamar on August 31, 1944, to deliver his vice presidential nomination acceptance speech. Elected in November, he served as Vice President only 82 days succeeding to the Presidency April 12, 1945, on Roosevelt's death. His first year as President was marked by the dropping of the first atomic bomb and the end of World War II.

Although confronted with a series of major challenges throughout his tenure, President Truman responded with courage, humanity, decisiveness and a wit which has secured his place in the Nation's history as one of our most respected Presidents. Truman was a Missourian of candor and wit. He was not afraid to tell it exactly like it was. A trait which made him a controversial President, but gain him many admirers, both Republicans and Democrats.

On April 19, 1959, Mr. Truman returned to Lamar, for the last time, for the dedication of his Lamar Birthplace. Over 6,000 persons attended the ceremonies.

Now, therefore, I, Gerald W. Gilkey, Mayor of the City of Lamar, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984 to be the "Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman". I call upon the people of Lamar to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities in remembrance of his many accomplishments and dedication to freedom and democracy.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 16th day of April, 1984.

TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN BY WALTER E. WASHINGTON, FORMER MAYOR OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

I am pleased to participate in the commemoration of the Centennial of President Harry S. Truman. President Truman was a strong voice in support of civil rights in the Nation. He played an important role in the transformation of the United States from a closed segregated to an open integrated society. He will be remembered for having integrated the armed forces by Executive Order. He will also be remembered for his forthright advocacy of civil rights, even though he knew he was taking a great political risk. Those of us in Washington, D.C. recall him as an early advocate of local self government for the citizens of this city and for a vote in presidential elections. He believed in the many citizens who lived behind the monuments and he acted to assure their equality and human dignity.

In his address to the Annual Convention of the NAACP on June 29, 1947, President Truman asserted:

"As Americans, we believe that every man should be free to live his life as he wishes. He should be limited only by his responsibility to his fellow countryman. If freedom is to be more than a dream, each man must be guaranteed equality of opportunity. The only limit to an American achievement should be his ability, his industry and his character."

Harry S. Truman was an inspiration for our times.

STATEMENT BY W. AVERELL HARRIMAN

When he first became President, people assumed that Harry Truman was an ordinary man—but he became one of the most extraordinary leaders in our nation's history. I came home from my post as Ambassador in Moscow to brief the new President. I discovered that he had read every cable, was thoroughly informed, and already completely in command. He had a gift for decision making; he never looked back and agonized once an issue was settled.

In any crisis, he was a center of calm. The politicians said he had no chance in 1948; he went ahead and fought his fight and won his stunning victory. When his ratings in the polls fell in the early 1950's, especially after he dismissed General MacArthur, he held to his course and was content to wait for history's more favorable judgment. His enemies were the pompous and the irrational apostles of the extreme right and the extreme left, who both seemed to think that the only choice was a nuclear war or appeasement.

Harry Truman resisted the worst excesses of McCarthyism; he stood for civil liberties and civil rights. And abroad, it was President Truman who was responsible for the Truman Doctrine in Greece and Turkey, and for the Marshall Plan in Western Europe.

At one point someone derisively called him an accidental President. If that is what he was, he was one of the happiest accidents in this nation's history.

PITTSBURGH, PA., April 24, 1984.

It was my privilege to be assigned to a succession of top commands—Commanding General, U.S. Eighth Army and Republic of Korea Army in combat; Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers and Commander-in-Chief United Nations Forces in the Far East; and Supreme Allied Commander Europe—all during President Truman's Presidency.

By the nature of these assignments, I feel that each of them required his personal approval.

In every one of them, no Field Commander or Theater Commander could have had finer support, nor more considerate personal courtesies from his Commander-in-Chief than he accorded me.

I early formed great admiration for President Truman's personal integrity, courage, and leadership, and his wide knowledge of military history. That admiration has steadily grown through the years.

M.B. RIDGWAY,
General, U.S. Army, Retired.

STATEMENT OF J. J. MCCLOY, THE FORMER ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR DURING WORLD WAR II IN REGARD TO THE STATURE OF HARRY S. TRUMAN AS ONE OF OUR LEADING PRESIDENTS

I came to know President Truman when he was a Senator and Chairman of the Truman Committee dealing with the adjustment of munitions contracts during the course of World War II.

My chief connection with him, however, was following the death of President Roosevelt when I had a number of important discussions with him relating to the terms on which the war with Japan could be brought to an end in order to preserve peace in the Pacific and in the best interests of the United States and its Allies.

President Truman will rank, in my judgment, as one of our finest national leaders. He quickly absorbed the profound consequences of the atom bomb and its potential use. He was a student of history and a great patriot, sensitive to the vital interests of the country in a critical period of its history. He dealt sensibly with challenging international problems as well as with problems induced by far reaching postwar changes. He did much to help preserve the peace in a new world charged with the release of nuclear power and with major political readjustments.

STATEMENT OF ELMER B. STAATS, PRESIDENT, HARRY S. TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIP FOUNDATION

President Truman had a great personal interest in the Federal Budget, possibly stemming from having served on the Senate Appropriations Committee. But he also simply liked to work with the budget. He had a prodigious memory. He startled us, for example, in budget briefings by recalling what we had requested for some specific program in the prior year. He worked at the budget in detail.

He was the only President to hold his own press conference on the budget. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Budget, who sat at his side during these conferences, had little to do. And, when appropriation bills were enacted, he was interested in following up as the agency programs were being carried out. A briefing book, prepared at his request, called "The Budget in Operation," showing such details as trends in government employment, workload, grants-in-aid, procurement, unemployment compensation, and so forth, was in the upper left drawer of his desk and he referred to it in most of our meetings with him about the budget.

Overall, of the eight budgets prepared by President Truman, four were in surplus and four were in deficit. Three of these deficit years reflected the defense buildup during the Korean War. Even so, the surplus exceeded the deficits—$22.5 billion to $12.1 billion, a ratio of nearly 2 to 1.

After President Johnson prepared his first budget for fiscal year 1965, knowing of President Truman's interest in the budget, he asked Charles Murphy, President Truman's former Counsel, and myself to brief President Truman in Independence on the new budget. Visiting the President's former office in Independence not long ago, I discovered that President Johnson's 1965 budget was on top of the reading stack which he left at the time he died.

President Truman understood budgeting as an important tool in managing the executive branch and in gaining acceptance of his programs in Congress. He set an example for any President of the need for personal involvement and understanding of what goes into the budget and the need for working closely with Congress in its enactment.

STATEMENT OF BENEDICT K. ZOBRIST, DIRECTOR, HARRY S. TRUMAN LIBRARY

As Director of the Harry S. Truman Library and as a professional historian and archivist, I am grateful for this opportunity to pay tribute to Harry S. Truman on the occasion of the celebration of the centennial of his birth. While the final verdict is not in, most historians now rank President Truman high among our Chief Executives in terms of leadership, strength of character, high courage and devotion to principle. From the beginning of his administration to its end, President Truman was called on to make many tough decisions. In making these decisions history always served as a constant guide. From his earliest schooldays Mr. Truman was an omnivorous reader of history and biography. "My debt to history," he once wrote, "cannot be calculated."

By the time of his death, President Truman had repaid this debt in full, I believe, by his gift to the Nation of his Presidential papers together with the thousands of gifts which had been given to him while he was in the White House by heads of state and common people alike. Housed in the beautiful Harry S. Truman Library, dedicated in 1957, which is located in President Truman's hometown of Independence, Missouri, the Truman Presidential papers along with papers of many of Mr. Truman's associates also deposited in the Library have been used since 1959 by more than 3,600 scholars from every state in the Union and from many foreign countries. In the museum area of the building, exhibits which reflect President Truman's interest in the history and nature of the Presidency have been viewed by more than five million visitors. Administered by the National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration, the Library stands as a permanent symbol of Mr. Truman's lifelong dedication to the study of history and his deep appreciation of its significance to decisionmakers in a free society.

STATEMENT OF JOHN W. SNYDER, CHAIRMAN, HARRY S. TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIP FOUNDATION

Gentleman: At noon on April 12, 1945, I was in Mexico City. A joint group of United States-Mexican bankers had just concluded a successful conference on exchange rates concerning our export-import business.

Floyd Ransom, a prominent American businessman in Mexico City, had invited a number of the conference participants to his home for a luncheon to celebrate our significant accomplishment. It turned out to be a typical Mexican luncheon that lasted the remainder of the afternoon.

We were still at the table when the butler announced that the radio had just flashed the story of President Roosevelt's death.

A. P. Giannini, the founder of the Bank of America, was sitting next to me, and had been inquiring about the background of Vice President Truman, as there had been numerous rumors on the West Coast regarding Roosevelt's health.

The announcement had the effect of a startling explosion, which started everyone to talking at once. There was great speculation as to what sort of President Mr. Truman would make and because of my long friendship with him I was plied with many questions.

Due to my close observation of his activities as a military leader, County Court official, Senator, and Chairman of the Truman Committee, I talked particularly about his great skill in choosing men of experience in connection with the individual task that he was working on at any given time. This facet of Mr. Truman's markup greatly impressed Giannini. He made one remark, "I really feel better."

Later in the evening at the Reforma Hotel, President Truman telephoned me. I told him how greatly shocked we all were to learn of Roosevelt's death. "Yes, he said. "I feel like I have been struck by a bolt of lightning." I went on to assure him of my deepest sympathy in the trying hours he was experiencing. He broke in to ask how soon I could get to Washington. I said that I would be there at the earliest possible moment. The conversation ended with his telling me, "Come to see me as soon as you get here."

I finally arrived in Washington at 10:00 p.m. the night of April 13th. In those days we travelled by DC3's which required many stops for refueling. It had been a sad, depressing trip across the country. At each stop we made, the terminal was filled with dazed, apprehensive mourners lamenting the death of a great leader.

The next morning, April 14, I was on the way for my first visit with President Truman. I can assure you that it was in a prayerful mood that I approached my appointment with a man who so richly deserved the fullest and the most earnest support of every citizen of our country, and for that matter, of the world.

In spite of the problems that had been prepiling in on him, I was pleased to see the President appeared to have had a good night's rest and was confidently taking up his myriad tasks.

He spent about fifteen minutes bringing me up to date. The first official act had been to declare a National mourning period and in making arrangements for the White House funeral rites of President Roosevelt. He had talked with his Cabinet, with leaders of Congress, advised foreign Heads of State, conferred with the Secretary of State to receive information reports on foreign matters, including the war posture. He had met with Admiral Leahy and the military leaders, including the Secretaries of War and Navy, he had arranged to address a Joint Session of Congress on April 16. Throughout the day he had received messages from all over the world and had had a visit with Jimmy Byrnes. He was learning that he had not been kept informed on critical matters by his predecessor. He also had learned the day before for the first time that Stalin was not living up to the agreements that he had made with Churchill and Roosevelt. A matter that greatly distressed President Truman was the unhappy complications which were developing in the Polish situation. He said that he had spent some hours the evening before reading the position papers on this development, which revealed that the Soviets had deliberately shot down hundreds of Polish officers and had buried them in an open ditch.

That morning before I arrived he had already talked to Steve Early and Sam Rosenman about his forthcoming speech before Congress. Another matter that he must decide that day was about the final arrangements for the United Nations Conference which had been scheduled in San Francisco for that month.

Frankly, I was appalled at the volume of matters that he had acted on in the few hours since he had been sworn in.

He then told me that he wanted me to be in Washington with him. The day before he had checked for a suitable assignment and had learned that the job of Federal Loan Administrator was vacant. It was an operation with which I was thoroughly familiar. So he wanted me to take that one immediately. Personally, I felt that I could be of far greater help as the President of the First National Bank in St. Louis, a position to which I had already been elected. We were still discussing the matter when Jim Byrnes came in. He told Jim that I was holding out on the appointment. Jimmy spoke up and said, "Harry, don't forget who you are now. Order him' to do it." That ended the discussion. Three days later, on April 17, the President sent my nomination as Federal Loan Administrator to the Senate as his first major appointment.

As I was leaving, Secretary Morgenthau came in for a very short call. Another day's heavy schedule was ahead for the new President.

At 4 p.m., James Byrnes and I proceeded to the East Room of the White House to attend the simple funeral rites for a great President. The service was conducted by Bishop Angus Dunn of the Episcopal National Cathedral. A few words by the Bishop, some of President Roosevelt's favorite hymns were sung, and the service was over. The brevity was at the request of Mrs. Roosevelt.

President Truman, Mrs. Truman and Margaret went to Hyde Park for the services there. I met the train upon their return Sunday evening and rode with the Trumans to their Connecticut Avenue apartment. En route we discussed the speech which he was to deliver before the Joint Session of Congress the next day. I was pleased with what he planned to say. We changed one or two parts and decided to add a couple of thoughts to emphasize that the war was not yet over and to touch on the U.S. role after the war.

I had left him at the apartment with the understanding that I would be at the White House early the next morning.

On Monday morning I had an opportunity to go over the full draft of the speech and later went with the President to the Capitol to hear him deliver it. It was well received—at one point with a standing ovation when he reasserted the demand for an unconditional surrender.

I saw President Truman two or three times a day during the week. I had lunch with him, Vaughan and Ed McKim at the Blair House. This was quite a reunion from Old Fort Riley days during the Twenties and Thirties when as Colonels, Truman commanded the 379th F.A. Reserve Regiment, Vaughan the 380th and I the 381st, for two weeks each summer. I recall this military phase as it was in those days that Colonel Truman and I began to apply the Five Paragraph Military Order to problems in our civilian life. To refresh your memory, the Five Paragraph Order requires:

1. Situation: a. Enemy Forces (Elements working against us); and b. Own Forces (Resources we have available).
2. Mission: (What we are trying to do).
3. Solution: (How can we handle problems).
4. Administration and Logistics: (Implementation of our resources).
5. Order and Communication: (Retained direction); (Delegated direction); and (Line of authority).

I know that formula was of great value to Our President in the critical first months, as it was throughout his entire administration.

A delightful incident occurred as we were returning from lunch to the White House. As we reached the center of Pennsylvania Avenue, the President suddenly stopped and said, "Oh, Hell! I left my White House pass on the dresser."

Tuesday morning, the 16th, among other matters we discussed the world's critical food situation. I took the occasion to mention former President Hoover's experience after W.W. I. I had met him in Paris in 1919. Others thought well of the idea, and some time later Mr. Truman called him to the White House to discuss Europe. This led to his appointment by the President, as Honorary Chairman, Famine Emergency Committee. They became warm friends. Years later, when I was talking with President Hoover, he said that the appointment added ten years to his life.

The President spent some minutes in discussing the problems that would follow the fall of Hitler. He felt, from reports, that victory was imminent in Europe. There were many matters that would require conferences with Churchill and with Stalin. He was most interested in meeting Churchill, though he did not wish to offend Stalin by a premature talk with the British. It was a delicate situation about which he was seeking diplomatic advice. He was considerably concerned about the organization of the Occupation of Germany, the logistics of some withdrawal of troops, and the reenforcement of the forces in the Pacific. He told me that he had learned something that might materially affect the Pacific situation but was not in position to discuss it yet. (It was his first knowledge of the atom bomb.)

Later that morning, I attended the President's first press and radio conference at 10:30 a.m. After a few announcements covering White House staff, a letter from Mrs. Roosevelt, and one or two other matters, he said he was ready for questions. Everything went well, although the President passed up a few questions that he preferred to discuss at a more appropriate time.

The Trumans moved to the Blair House that day.

The night of the 17th, the President made a world-wide broadcast to the U.S. Armed Forces in foreign service.

The warmth, understanding and courage conveyed by this message was reassuring to the troops around the world that they were under the continued leadership of a dedicated commander.

The remainder of the week I spent considerable time on the Hill and at the R.F.C. The hearing on Friday was relatively short as most of the Committee had had me before them numerous times during the Defense Plant days and already knew my policies.

The President told me that he was particularly pleased with his talk with Harriman, who had flown back from Moscow for the converence. "Harriman knows what he is talking about," he remarked. "He is well informed on the Polish situation. His views on Stalin were most revealing. His dispatches, which I have carefully read are frank and to the point." He grinned when he told me that Harriman had been fearful that he had not read his reports and would not, therefore, fully understand the situation. "I told him," the President said, "that if he sent in good reports, I would always read them carefully."

Incidentally, the attitude of Molotov had completely toughened since the first friendly, cooperative talk President Truman had with him during the first week in office. In the later talk, the President forcefully insisted that the Polish agreements arrived at in Yalta should be carried out. I was told by Ambassador Harriman later that the President was very firm in his talk with Molotov, insisting that Russia live up to her agreements.

I would like to inject here that it was Ambassador Harriman who advised Jesse Jones and me on one of his visits to Washington in 1943 that Stalin was not trustworthy about all of his agreements.

During one of our talks, the President said that he thought that he would take his time about making major changes in personnel. He strongly felt that as President Roosevelt had been elected to the Presidency by a substantial majority only five months before, he, Truman, should carry out, to the best of his ability, the policies on which Roosevelt had been elected. He believed that Cabinet members and staff who were close to the former President could help him materially in learning about those commitments. He had asked all Cabinet members to stay on. He said, however, that he had already asked Jim Byrnes, off the record, to be Secretary of State, after the United Nations meeting. He worried about Presidential succession. He considered that Byrnes would be highly qualified. He said that he also wanted to talk with me about the Treasury, as he was not pleased with some of Morgenthau's positions. I promptly brought up Fred Vinson's name, as I immediately thought of the tax problems that would confront the Administration. When asked how well I knew him, I had to confess that my acquaintance was largely by reputation, but that he appeared to have considerable political charisma. Frankly, I don't use that word as it hadn't been liberated at the time.

Mr. Truman said he had thought of him—and one or two others. We were interrupted about that time and further discussions had to be postponed.

I left early the next day for St. Louis to terminate my First National Bank connection, and make peace with my family. During my absence from Washington, the Senate unanimously approved my appointment as Federal Loan Administrator, on Tuesday April 24th.

I remained in St. Louis four days in closing matters at the bank and in arranging to bring my family to Washington. Walter Smith, then President of the St. Louis bank, said he would not hurry in replacing me in the hope that I might be able to get back soon. With that same hope in mind, we stored our furniture and planned to take only a few things to Washington. It turned out that the few months stretched out to eight years, and I never got back to St. Louis.

I arrived back in Washington at 10:30 a.m. on April 30th and was sworn in at the White House at two-thirty that afternoon. And there I was, back in government service again. My face was really quite reddened when I received a telegram from Giannini saying, "I see that Truman is following his old policy in selecting men."

President Truman was present at the swearing-in. He called me into his office and told me not to get so tied up at the RFC that I couldn't show up regularly for informal talks. He said, "I want you around where I can talk with you, or I wouldn't have brought you back here."

It was at that time that we made an agreement that we kept throughout three jobs and nearly eight years of time. We would keep my name off of the calendar when I came to see him. As a result our visits were mostly off-the-record except on rare occasions.

Upon taking charge as Federal Loan Administrator, I immediately began work on two important projects to which I had devoted much study. The first, because of the imminent ending of the war, was to take steps to get Congressional authority to merge all of the wartime subsidiary corporations into the parent corporation, and second, to begin planning for the reconversion of war plants of the Defense Plant Corporation into peacetime production and to start studies for providing financing to business for postwar developments. These were ideas that the President and I had started discussing when he was Chairman of the Truman Committee and I, at the DPC. We both felt that these two steps would greatly accelerate the return of our economy from a total war status to a private enterprise basis.

It was my opinion, which was confirmed some months later, that banks and the RFC working together could speed up the solution of the financial problems that would confront business, both large and small, in the post-war period. Congress promptly authorized the mergers.

On July 1, 1945, the first Cabinet changes were made: Tom Clark (Attorney General), Clint Anderson (Agriculture), Bob Hannegan (Postmaster General), and Lou Schwellenbach (Labor), were sworn in. On July 3, James Byrnes became Secretary of State. On July 23, Fred Vinson became Secretary of the Treasury, and I became Director of Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion. Within a few months Fred Vinson was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and I succeeded him as Secretary of the Treasury.

In those early days, when pressures were greatest, President Truman came in contact intimately with a number of able, effective leaders with whom he had had only casual acquaintances before. The foundations were laid then for friendship that lasted through good days and bad, for many years.

In his splendid book on the Truman Administration, "Present At the Creation," Dean Acheson ventured that Mr. Truman learned fast. This was really quite an understatement when you consider that on April 12, 1945, Harry S. Truman was suddenly catapulted from the relatively peaceful atmosphere of the Senate into the seething caldron of exploding events in the midst of a war about which he had not been fully briefed.

To this day I am still filled with pride and admiration at the amazing speed with which President Truman assimulated the huge piles of information, hitherto unknown to him, about facts, situations, figures and personalities, and came through promptly with scores of sound decisions.

Consider for a moment of suddenly being made aware:

(1) That you were the President of the United States,

(2) The necessity to assure continuity of the functions of the entire U.S. responsibilities; orient with his Cabinet—with Staff—with Congress—with Foreign Powers,

(3) Communicate with troops in the field all over the world,

(4) Take up share of direction of a World War,

(5) Assimilate the vast amount of information covering diplomatic arrangements, including briefings on Heads of State, Foreign Ambassadors here and ours abroad,

(6) Consider changes in Cabinet, and other posts,

(7) Carry on discussions and plans for the war with people you had never met or communicated with before,

(8) Arrange to quietly learn if any unrecorded commitments had been made to the British or to the Russians,

(9) Address the United Nations Conference (June 26, 1945),

(10) In three weeks face the countless problems of the surrender of the Germans (May 8, 1946),

(11) Arrange and attend the Potsdam Conference,

(12) The change of British Prime Ministers in the midst of the Potsdam Conference,

(13) The decision to drop the atom bomb,

(14) And square off for the holocaust brought on by V-J Day: Decision to have MacArthur take the Japanese Surrender; Demobilization; Reconstruction; Economic adjustments; Occupation of defeated enemy countries; Russia's threat; Interim Aid; Foreign Aid; and, importantly state of our domestic economy.

Yes, gentlemen, those four months were busy days for the President. It was fortunate, as I have said, that he was able to quickly recruit able talent to help him bear the burden of those and later days.

In closing I want to give you a few of my impressions of the strengths of Mr. Truman that stood him in good stead in meeting the tremendous demands on his courage, strength, faith and character in that testing period of heart and mind.

There were many facets to Mr. Truman's make-up that enabled him to make decisions promptly:

(1) His capacity to quickly classify, weigh and make use of facts presented to him.

(2) His choice of counsellors on specific matters.

(3) His instinctive ability to sort out essentials.

The President was once asked if he had ever regretted having made a major decision. His reply was revealing, "Events followed events so closely that there were many things that had to be done almost instantly as a delay might have been disastrous. Had I had more time to contemplate some of the matters, they might have been handled in some other way. But considering the information available at the time and the circumstances prevailing when the decisions had to be made, I do not see how I could have acted very differently."

He told me that when he was preparing for bed at night, he would searchingly ask himself whether or not he had acted on matters of the day to the best of his abilities. If the answer was in the affirmative, he went soundly to sleep and awakened the next morning refreshed, and ready for another day's trials.

Dean Acheson in speaking of Truman some years after the close of the Truman Administration, said, "If a President will make decisions, you're in luck. That is the essential quality. And if he has a high batting average in the correctness of his decisions, then you're in clover."

As to the quality of President Truman's decisions there was never any doubt.

Eric Sevareid summed up my remarks for me when he wrote:

"Chance, in good part, took Harry Truman to the Presidency, but it was his character, his simplicity, his honesty and his self-discipline that kept him there and determined his historical fate. He is, without any doubt, destined to live in the books as one of the strongest and most decisive of the American Presidents."

A COMMEMORATIVE STATEMENT ON THE CENTENNIAL OF THE BIRTH OF HARRY S. TRUMAN FROM THE HARRY S. TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIP ALUMNI ASSOCIATION, AS WRITTEN BY DANE A. JOHNSON, TRUMAN SCHOLAR

As Truman Scholars, we are perhaps more indebted to Harry S. Truman than most. Therefore, it is fitting and proper that on the centennial of his birth we should recount in a specific manner the debts all of us owe to this great American. We do not intend, however, to detail all of Mr. Truman's accomplishments. That can be left to the more eloquent, left to those who lived and worked with the honorable former President. Instead, we will try to capture a bit of his spirit, for it is this spirit we hope to employ as Truman Scholars—young men and women dedicated to public service.

We have been lucky enough to further our education via the Truman Scholarship, but all Americans would do well to recognize Mr. Truman's belief in the value of learning. In fact, he was a legendary self-educator. It has been said that no other U.S. Senator before or since ever checked out and read as many books from the Library of Congress as the politician from Missouri. In this spirit, Mr. Truman stated, "Free and inquiring minds with unlimited access to the sources of knowledge can be the architects of a peaceful and prosperous world."

Nevertheless, education alone will not serve as a panacea for facing today's myriad governmental problems. Mr. Truman knew that one also needs a certain spirit, the desire to solve problems by getting right to the heart of things. It was this indefatigable spirit and a wry sense of humor which led then President Truman to remark about some dilly-dallying "experts": "If you lay those economists end to end, they'd probably point in all directions." He preferred practical solutions rather than high-flying theories for meeting the most difficult challenges.

And Mr. Truman certainly never shirked a challenge, whether it was commanding a tough artillery unit in World War I or facing a mother-in-law who did not believe that he measured up to her daughter. It was with this sense of facing a challenge that he stood up to the problems of the Presidency that were thrust upon him so suddenly, and still claimed in his self-deprecating style that "lots of folks could do this job better than me, but it's my job to do it."

He was a man who disliked phonies, distrusted the power hungry, and despised bureaucratic bunglers. He believed in standing up for one's beliefs, working hard, and listening to the people. He was proud to be called a politican and never shrunk from making the tough decisions. Clearly, these are attributes all citizens should honor, things that circumscribe the spirit of an American.

An army officer, county judge, Senator, and our 33rd President, Harry S. Truman always insisted that he was a public servant first and foremost; "President" just happened to be his final title. Again, it is this spirit, rather than any specific actions, that we strive to memorialize as Truman Scholars. Mr. Truman's spirit supplies both direction and inspiration to our studies and our careers. On this day of commemoration, we hope all Americans share in our feeling.

APRIL 30, 1984.

Hon. IKE SKELTON,

Joint Committee on Arrangements for the Truman Centennial, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR IKE: President Harry Truman had one of the keenest sense of humor and every once in a while, it came out with a bang.

I recall going down to The White House to visit one day and found him laughing his head off. He said "Those Vermont Democrats were so sure I was going to lose the election that they didn't lift a finger to help me."—So he appointed Ernest Gibson, a Republican, District Judge for the State of Vermont. He thought that was pretty funny.

Sincerely,

GEORGE D. AIKEN.

HARRY S. TRUMAN—REMEMBERED ALWAYS!

Harry S. Truman will be remembered as a great President because of his courageous decisions in office. Truman was a trustworthy and intelligent man who had a short vice-presidential term due to the death of Franklin Roosevelt. Mr. Truman believed the greatest duty of the presidential office was to lead and inspire the public's opinion.

After Truman dropped the atom bomb ending World War II, he thought that he should develop ways to keep peace and give aid to the suffering countries. He helped frame the United Nations, an organization to bring peace to nations. George C. Marshall outlined the Marshall plan which extended into the Truman Doctrine. It is a plan to help economic recovery for war-torn countries.

Truman announced a doctrine of international resistance to communistic aggression and it was called the Truman Doctrine. This doctrine guaranteed American aid to free nations. He set up NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, for protection against aggression.

The "Fair Deal" was a slogan that Truman used during his compaign. He said it offered the American people "the promise of equal rights and equal opportunities" for both the rich and the poor.

Being very outspoken and very forward, he won the loyalty of many people. No American President revered his office so highly as did Harry S. Truman—a truly great President!

HARRY S. TRUMAN—A GREAT PRESIDENT

Harry S. Truman is remembered by the people today as the president who dropped the atomic bomb. But I think this is only because our generation is so concerned with nuclear issues. I think history will show that Truman's accomplishments will rank him among the most outstanding president in our country.

Truman's great understanding of the common people, his responsibility, his proposals for Social Security, his stand against Congress, the establishment of military training, government health insurance programs, and the approval of the Marshall Plan are only a few of his outstanding achievements while in office.

On April 12, 1945, at 7:09 p.m. Harry S. Truman became the 33rd President of the United States, after President Franklin D. Roosevelt died of a hemorrhage. About thirteen days after Truman took office the first United Nations Conference took place. On May 7, Germany surrendered. On August 6, the first atomic bomb was dropped an Hiroshima. Three days later the second bomb was dropped on Nagasaki. As a result on August 14th the war ended.

Many people might say in looking back that Truman's decision to drop the atomic bomb on Japan was a mistake. However, Truman gave the order to save thousands of Americans' lives and to end the war. Interviews and investigations have been conducted with much evidence proving that Japan would never have surrendered, but would have carried on the war with the loss of many American lives.

Truman not only made important decisions but took responsibility for any decision made. He had a sign made for his desk, "The Buck Stops Here." This policy of responsibility, set a standard that American Presidents have since followed. Presidents are elected to a high office with much glory and honor, but they must remember Truman's ideal. In the end the decisions and responsibilities are the president's.

Truman also understood world economics as shown by the fact that under his administration the Marshall Plan was created to re-establish war damaged Europe.

In my opinion, history will show that Truman was one of our truly great presidents, and many other Americans think so too.

"WHY HARRY S. TRUMAN WILL BE REMEMBERED AS A GREAT AMERICAN PRESIDENT"

HARRY S. TRUMAN: A MAN OF COURAGE

Throughout his life he showed promise and courage. He was proud of his state and retained respect for all the offices he held. This man, Harry S. Truman, was a leader in all phases of his political career but will be most remembered for his courageous term as the thirty-third President of the United States.

After serving as Vice-President only eighty-three days, Truman upon Franklin D. Roosevelt's death, took office as President, becoming the first to enter the office during a war. He immediately turned his concern to foreign affairs.

Truman's first major decision was to call a meeting of world leaders which would result in the formation of the United Nations. This was soon followed by his meeting in Potsdam, Germany, with Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin to adopt a policy for dealing with wartime foes. Many of the countries participating in these meetings, including the United States, were involved in World War II. After six years of fighting with death tolls and expenses soaring, Truman made the memorable order to drop two atomic bombs on Japan. The resulting historic destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki brought the atomic age to life, but Truman in the world's interest ended the war.

Following his reelection, Truman was again involved in wartime as the Korean War broke out in 1950. Truman, after meeting with the United Nations, recommended the country support South Korea from the North's invasion. His major reason was to demonstrate the United States' ability to stop the expansion of communism.

Other alliances overseas were formed during the Truman Presidency besides war. These included the formation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, a peacetime military alliance with twelve countries and the Truman Doctrine, a policy supporting the cause of freedom wherever it was threatened. After the wars, Truman pushed for the passage of the Marshall Plan which helped the countries of Western Europe rebuild. He also showed interest in underdeveloped nations by offering them American funds and knowledge with his enactment of the Point Four Program.

While he was occupied with foreign affairs, Truman never forgot about domestic issues. His Fair Deal program, a continuation of FDR's New Deal, lowered housing costs and raised minimum wages.

Harry S. Truman will be remembered as a president of courage. The devotion and respect he had for the office allowed him to proudly lead the country with consideration for her citizens. His popularity enhanced the country's leadership abroad and advanced the welfare of the citizens at home. His creativity and aggression gave him the will to face tough decisions and the courage not to falter in his responsibilities. His term in office clearly demonstrated his following of a Biblical prescription taught him by his mother, "whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might."

CITY OF DETROIT—PROCLAMATION

May 8, 1984 marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States and one of our nation's best respected statesmen.

After succeeding the presidency in April 1945 upon the death of president Franklin Roosevelt, Truman steadily and strongly guided this nation into the beginning of a new era—the nuclear age—and helped rebuild the economies of war torn nations. At the same time, he established the cornerstones and implemented the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan to assist those threatened by totalitarian aggression.

Mr. Truman was repeatedly confronted with a series of major challenges throughout his tenure including the Berlin Airlift, the Korean War and desegregating the U.S. Armed Forces. For each issue he acted and responded in the manner of a great leader—with courage, honesty, decisiveness and wisdom. Harry Truman earned his place in U.S. history as one of our most respected presidents.

Therefore, I, Coleman A. Young, Mayor of the City of Detroit, issue this Proclamation in recognition of the 100th anniversary of Harry S. Truman's birth and urge Detroit residents to take cognizance of the impact he had upon the history of the United States and the world.

PROCLAMATION: OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR, STATE OF MISSOURI

Whereas, Harry S. Truman was a native Missourian, born May 8, 1884, in Lamar, Missouri; and

Whereas, Mr. Truman farmed 600 acres in Grandview from 1906-1917 and later made his permanent home in Independence, Missouri; and

Whereas, Harry S. Truman was sworn in as the thirty-third President of the United States on April 12, 1945; and

Whereas, we in Missouri are proud to claim our famous native son, the only Missourian to serve his country in the highest office in the land; and

Whereas, we recognize and compliment Mr. Truman for his determination, leadership and firm resolve in carrying out his responsibilities as President of the most powerful nation on earth; and

Whereas, we particularly remember Mr. Truman for his wit, his wry humor and his resolve by the sign he had placed on his desk in the White House, which read: "The Buck Stops Here"; and

Whereas, we set aside a special day in Missouri each year to salute Missouri's first citizen; and

Whereas, this year marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of our thirty-third President:

Now, therefore, I, Christopher S. Bond, Governor of the State of Missouri, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, as "Harry S. Truman Day" in Missouri, in honor of this great Missourian and do call upon all citizens of the State of Missouri to pay tribute to the memory of Mr. Truman and his many accomplishments and contributions to the benefit of the world, the United States and his native State of Missouri.

PROCLAMATION

Harry S. Truman, the 33rd President of the United States, continues to gain in stature as historians and political scientists evaluate the significance of the momentous decisions made by the man whose motto was "The Buck Stops Here."

Assuming the Presidency after only 83 days as Vice President, Mr. Truman directed the country through the final stages of World War II. He never vacillated in making judgments calculated to change the course of world history. In the post-war years he supervised the transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy and guided the United States into an era of development and vitality.

President Truman's greatest achievements were in foreign affairs. Through the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan, he provided the wherewithal to enable free peoples to resist encroachment by totalitarian forces. His theory of collective defense gave birth to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and constructed a cohesive force capable of responding to any act of aggression.

No reminiscence of the Truman years would be complete without mention of the 1948 Presidential campaign. Political pundits and the polls predicted certain defeat—but Mr. Truman undaunted by the odds—went directly to the people and scored the greatest come-from-behind victory in the annals of American politics.

Facing a number of major problems following his reelection, President Truman utilized United Nations' and American troops in response to the invasion of South Korea. On the homefront, he was a staunch proponent of civil rights and moved with dispatch to desegregate the Armed Forces.

A great humanitarian, astute statesman and political leader par excellence, President Truman's service to this Nation and the entire world will be recounted for centuries by the chroniclers of important events. It is fitting that all New Yorkers join in paying tribute to this noble leader who was blessed with the common touch.

Now, therefore, I, Mario M. Cuomo, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim May 8, 1984, as the Centennial of the Birth of Harry S. Truman Day in New York State.

A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO

DAY OF RECOGNITION

Whereas Harry S. Truman served our nation with valor, integrity, and distinction as a soldier, Senator, Vice-President, and President;

Whereas Mr. Truman retained throughout his life a profound faith in his fellow citizens, a faith that served him especially well in the Presidency, when he was obliged to endure the contemptuous scorn of numerous journalists and prominent public figures, even though historians acknowledge today that he was among the very best of American chief executives;

Whereas Mr. Truman did more than any other President has done to pave the way for political equality for the United States citizens of Puerto Rico, by signing into law the bills that authorized Puerto Ricans to elect our own Governor and to adopt a local Constitution;

Now, therefore: I, Carlos Romero-Barcelo, Governor of Puerto Rico, do hereby proclaim Tuesday, May 8, 1984, as a day of recognition throughout Puerto Rico, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Harry S. Truman, 33rd President of the United States. I urge that this day of recognition be observed by all Puerto Ricans, in respectful and affectionate appreciation of the democratic and humane values embodied by Mr. Truman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my special order precede that of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH DEMOCRATIC FOREIGN POLICY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, recently Frank Gregorsky, from the Republican Study Committee, prepared a paper entitled "What's the Matter with Democratic Foreign Policy?" It would be the intention of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH) and myself this evening to present this paper in detail as Mr. Gregorsky has written it, because we feel strongly that the outline that has been presented here in fact is a very cogent presentation of how the radical wing of the Democratic Party has taken over the foreign policy of that party and is leading the party, and insofar as it leads part of the country, is leading that part of the country, into a foreign policy which does not serve our best long-term interests. And so, Mr. Speaker, I am going to begin presenting this paper as Mr. Gregorsky has written it.

PART 1: A WORLDVIEW IN SEARCH OF A WORLD

INTRODUCTION

The French Socialist Jean-Francois Revel wrote in 1976:

> The historical memory of the Left is like that of a pillow; it changes shape when pounded by a fist, but it doesn't know how to avoid the blow, and it always peacefully regains its original shape, ready for the next pounding.[1]

He was talking about the European Left and its refusal to see that Marxism-Leninism was inherently totalitarian, and that Communist movements and governments inevitably threaten and often kill democracy. But Revel's contempt might just as well be directed at half or more of House and Senate Democrats in the U.S.A. in 1984.

That's what this monograph is about: the growing impact on America's oldest political party of a worldview that is defeatist, drenched in pessimism and incompetent when applied to a world having little to do with its assumptions.

The American Democratic Party today, almost everywhere outside the South, is led by people profoundly affected by the Vietnam sequence as seen from stateside America. Some are veteran politicians (WALTER MONDALE, ALAN CRANSTON, CLAIBORNE PELL) once comfortable with the Truman-JFK-Johnson "containment" approach to Communism. Others (TOM DOWNEY, CHRIS DODD, and a flood of people whose thinking this monograph samples) became politically aware during the Vietnam controversy, and began political careers that would sharply alter their party.

[1] Footnotes appear later in RECORD.

When Senator Henry Jackson died the day after the KAL 007 atrocity, official Washington justifiably praised him as a tough centrist, one who mixed liberal idealism with a firm view of Soviet power. It didn't ask the logical follow-up: who's left to live out that legacy in the Democratic Party?

Indeed, what prominent Democrat comes to mind, other than Senator SAM NUNN of Georgia?

There really isn't anyone else. Democratic Senators like LLOYD BENTSEN and DAVID BOREN may now and then risk a speech in favor of Ronald Reagan's Central America policies, but they count for little when it comes to guiding Democratic thought-processes. One shouldn't expect SAM NUNN, with or without their help, to be any more successful in toughening up Democratic foreign policy in the next five years than Scoop Jackson was in the last five.

Containment—the willingness to use or finance force to bolster friendly governments under Communist attack—is dead in the Democratic Party. Not only conservatives realize this.

Alan Ehrenhalt of Congressional Quarterly noted that the congressional Democratic Party used to have three roughly-equal factions: southern conservatives, ethnic machine loyalists from the big cities, and issue-oriented liberals. As late as the early 1970s, you could find the first two groups supporting a strong defense and, for the most part, the efforts of a centrist Republican President to end the Vietnam war in a way that preserved South Vietnam's independence.[2]

These two groups had the congressional power and experience; they included moderate Democratic Representatives like Hale Boggs, Carl Albert, John McCormack and Martha Griffiths, and Senate hawks such as Gale McGee, Harry Byrd, James Eastland and Jackson himself.

The third group in Ehrenhalt's trio was busy learning, or at least reciting, the "lessons of Vietnam" and growing in number.

The 75-strong Democratic freshman class of 1974 signalled the beginning of the end for Ehrenhalt's "big city ethnics," and for the whole tradition and structure of the Rayburn-era House. Writing in 1983, he noted that Rep. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI (D-Ill.) "used to command an eight-member Chicago Democratic delegation . . . but this year, when he voted for the defense authorization bill, only two of his troops joined him." Ehrenhalt illustrated in one district the steady 1970's wave of change that swamped the party of John Kennedy:

> A decade ago, the working-class neighborhoods of western Queens in New York City were represented by Rep. James J. Delaney, a cranky old Democrat who voiced Archie Bunker-style sentiments in a district that contained Bunker's fictional home. Delaney was never heard to question the Vietnam War, the Pentagon or military spending. When Delaney retired in 1978, his district went to Geraldine Ferraro, an outspoken feminist who is independent of any machine.[3]

This was happening in dozens of districts, a trend underlying even the generally conservative elections of 1980. By the time President Reagan took the oath of office, JFK-Jackson Democrats had been superseded by McGovern-Mondale Democrats, especially in the House. In 1982 57 new Democrats solidified dominance of the House Democratic Caucus by the Vietnam generation.

Freshman Rep. JIM BATES (Calif.) called a special party caucus to question Majority Leader WRIGHT's mild support (since ended) of the Reagan Administration of El Salvador and the MX missile. Class of '74 Reps. GEORGE MILLER (Calif.) and TOM DOWNEY (N.Y.) complained that WRIGHT and whip TOM FOLEY weren't reflecting the majority of House Democrats; they were right. WRIGHT recognized his political wrong and changed on MX.

Ehrenhalt drew the conclusion:

A decade ago, candidates for House Democratic leadership had to be careful not to sound too liberal. Today, they cannot afford to sound too conservative. Otherwise, they risk alienating the generation that will be crucial in party leadership contests in the years ahead. In the climate, Wright's decision this summer to change his mind and oppose the MX was a prudent one.[4]

□ 1830

Prudent in what sense? If not for U.S. foreign policy, then for Mr. WRIGHT, and his ambitions to succeed Speaker TIP O'NEILL. JIM WRIGHT has to speak softly about the declared enemies of the U.S., and carry a big stick against the exertion of American power, if he's to be the next Speaker. But campaign produces schizophrenic behavior.

In January 1984 he endorsed the Kissinger Commission's Report on Central America, which said that "history offers no basis" for the notion that America could sweetly nudge Nicaragua's Marxist government into becoming a pluralist democracy. But force might do the trick, so the Commission called for continued help for anti-Marxist forces fighting to break the power monopoly in Nicaragua.

Three months later WRIGHT, with Democratic colleagues MIKE BARNES (Md.), BILL ALEXANDER (Ark.), MATT MCHUGH (N.Y), ROBERT TORRICELLI (N.J.), EDWARD BOLAND (Mass.), STEPHEN SOLARZ (N.Y.), DAVE OBEY (Wis.), BOB GARCIA (N.Y.), and LEE HAMILTON (Ind.), sent a letter to Nicaraguan strongman Daniel Ortega.

The letter condemns U.S. pressures against his government, praises Ortega's "decision . . . to reduce press censorship and allow greater freedom of assembly for political parties," and expresses pleasure that this progress could be made "in the midst of ongoing military hostilities on the borders of Nicaragua."

The second paragraph stresses, "We have been, and remain, opposed to U.S. support for military action directed against the people or government of Nicaragua," and the closing salutation reads, "Very sincerely yours." [5]

JIM WRIGHT has served his home State of Texas in the U.S. House for nearly 30 years. While his flip-flop on the MX from 1982 to 1983 surprised many, his weakening on Central America from 1983 to 1984 was less newsworthy. You'd think an experienced man aspiring to be the most powerful Congressman in the land would know better. Maybe he does, in a manner of speaking: the House Democratic Caucus is probably turning its formal leadership into followers.

The newer members of WRIGHT's team are making sure there's no backsliding on MX. Rep. LES AUCOIN (D-Oreg.) wrote to party colleagues TOM FOLEY and BILL ALEXANDER (majority whip and assistant majority whip, respectively), urging a "no" vote on MX. This letter, as characterized by the pro-MX Nuclear Times, "implies that liberal Democrats will not back MX supporters for House leadership positions . . . Anti-MX lobbyists are pressing O'NEILL to put out the message to Democratic members: If you're not with us, then take a walk and don't be in town the day of the vote."[6]

Majority leader WRIGHT's personal convictions on weapons systems and Central America may be irrelevant. Even if he chose to stand fast for whatever his beliefs are, it's doubtful it would make a difference. WRIGHT's dealing with a force wilder than any he's ever known. The ousting of President Carter removed all restraints from the Caucus's Vietnam-scarred activists. The notion that on Central America they were reacting to Reagan's "belligerence" isn't borne out by the sequence of events; they had an agenda, but not a Democratic President to worry about constraining if they pushed to the hilt.

Less than two weeks after Ronald Reagan was sworn in, moderate Democrats were purged from Foreign Affairs subcommittees by secret ballot. On February 3, 1981, Rep. GUS YATRON of Pennsylvania was deposed as chairman of what later came to be called the western hemisphere subcommittee, in favor of Rep. BARNES of Maryland. Tho he had the seniority for it, Rep. DAN MICA of Florida then lost to Rep. HOWARD WOLPE of Michigan for chairman of the Africa subcommittee.

Before that MICA moved to take the Yatron vacancy and was voted down. Afterwards he said, "It was obviously part of a deal . . . BARNES and WOLPE and I came in the same class, so they used that as an argument that there really was no seniority there. I thought it was just an excuse to pull a radical-liberal revolt." MICA guessed, wrongly, that it was "a last flicker in this House of extremist attitudes."[7]

The Foreign Affairs Committee wages covert war on America's Central American policy from that day on. In April 1981 the Inter-American subcommittee nearly accepted an amendment by Rep. JERRY STUDDS (D-Mass.) to continue a military and economic aid ban on Argentina. STUDDS then tried to ban military aid to El Salvador and BARNES tried to do the same thing via human rights conditions that Congressional Quarterly called "difficult." Both amendments failed on 4-4 votes [8], a division not at all representative of the full House in that early period of the Reagan Presidency. It was a harbinger.

By 1984 Foreign Affairs Democrats were more effective. On March 1 the Barnes subcommittee voted down the President's entire request ($218 million) for FY 1984 military aid to Honduras and El Salvador. This was described by the Washington Times as "largely the legislative vehicle to implement the recommendations of the Kissinger Commission on Central America." [9]

Then 22 committee Democrats, including chairman DANTE FASCELL of Florida, wrote the Administration demanding Congress vote on emergency military aid heading for El Salvador.

BARNES' subcommittee also voted to pull nearly all U.S. troops out of Honduras, where U.S. servicemen engage in joint maneuvers with the Honduran army. Congressman STUDDS introduced H.R. 4745 to prohibit those exercises, and hold to 200 the number of U.S. military personnel allowed in Honduras.[10]

The Studds bill wasn't going to win acceptance by the full House, and there was always the Senate to offset the harsh treatment by Foreign Affairs Democrats of U.S. allies in Central America. But the defeatists have raw numbers and a disproportionate share of committee muscle. So House Foreign Affairs and its subcommittees show no bipartisanship or moderation. House Democrats use these institutional platforms to stress certain themes; they send messages to the President and keep their own skittish leadership in line.

There has to be more pressure on the leadership than meets the eye. Individual GOP and Southern Democratic Representatives recall incidents of broken commitments and unexplained tradeoffs, but haven't really built a mosaic out of the pieces of glass. Occasionally enough background data ignites to light up the path of a pivotal Member. Evans and

Novak charged in their July 22, 1983, column that U.S. policy in Central America was being strained by one internal ideology-for-position arrangement:

For four years under the chairmanship of Rep. Edward Boland, the Intelligence Committee had shown commendable ability to overcome partisan wrangling that destroyed its predecessor committee under Otis Pike. But that admirable record has crumbled under political pressures of the Central American crisis and a runaway staff.

As a result, what is supposed to be a bipartisan watchdog over the intelligence community [now attacks] President Reagan's Latin American policy in behalf of the Democratic Party's left wing.

Boland . . . is under relentless political pressure from Democratic liberals. He will need their support to achieve his dream of becoming chairman of the House Appropriations Committee some day.

If not for the more realistic Senate, the U.S. would have virtually no leverage in Central America.

REFLEXIVE DEFEATISM

Since President Richard Nixon's April 1970 move into Cambodia, a pattern has come to rule public discussion of U.S. foreign policy options:

(1) News comes out that a U.S. President has aided, is aiding, or proposes to aid, with military means a group somewhere in the world opposing a rival Communist group—sometimes by direct help to friends, other times by military pressure against adversaries.

(2) Alarmed Representatives and jittery Senators schedule hearings and rush to microphones to brand America a force for ill while finding little fault with the Communist group.

(3) The President gets only part of the support he wants and the situation in (fill in region), if not ended decisively that very month, is stalemated or goes against the West, while defeatists allege the U.S. is risking war or promoting hostilities for no good reason.

For at least 14 years this 1-2-3 has happened like clockwork.

The pattern was there in varying degrees during the Cambodia incursion in 1970, Laos in 1971, the Haiphong Harbor mining of 1972, the U.S. nuclear alert that kept the Soviets out of the Middle East in October 1973, the Mayaguez retrieval in May 1975, the Angola contest in late 1975, the decision to resume substantial aid to El Salvador in early 1981, U.S. naval maneuvers in the Caribbean during July 1983, and the Grenada rescue operation three months later.

To see how the congressional Democratic Party has changed during that period, it is worth looking at two of those incidents 12 years apart. The first is President Nixon's decision to mine North Vietnam's main harbor in 1972 to choke off the spring offensive against South Vietnam. The second is the mid-April 1984 fracas about U.S. mines in Nicaraguan harbors. Both initiatives came from Republican Presidents and were aimed at Communist states friendly to the U.S.S.R. who were arming insurrections against U.S. allies.

Here is what key House Democrats said in Congress the two days after Nixon's May 8 announcement:

Congressman JAMES SCHEUER (N.Y.) on the House floor:

Up until a short time ago, he was telling us how successful his policy was . . . Now he suddenly escalates the war, not only within Vietnam but in such a way that risks a confrontation with the Soviet Union that could push us into a nuclear world holocaust . . . President Nixon is more interested in his own reelection than in the maintenance of world peace.[11]

Congressman SIDNEY YATES (Ill.):

The decision is provocative, unnecessarily risky, and in great measure useless. Why indulge in such a futile gesture at this time? . . . North Vietnam will have enough arms and war material to carry on their operations for months without additional supplies from the outside . . . It is particularly difficult to understand an action that may jeopardize the work of years of peace in the signing of the nuclear arms limitation agreement.[12]

□ 1840

Congressman RON DELLUMS (Calif.):

Those of us in Congress must have a great sense . . . of responsibility both to the Americans who are pawns in Mr. Nixon's games, and to the Vietnamese whose society we are turning into a smoking ruin . . . In the last year of the Second World War, after the Germans knew they were defeated, they went on an orgy of killing that exceeded the horrors of the earlier part of the war, haunting the conscience of mankind ever since. No longer able to impose our will in Southeast Asia, will our removal be in the same frenzied manner?[13]

Congressman EDWARD P. BOLAND (Mass.):

[This] risks a direct confrontation with the Soviet Union. Nixon, in effect, has thrown down the gauntlet, defying the Soviet Union to challenge his will. It is an exercise in brinksmanship wholly unparalleled in the history of the Vietnam War. It could conceivably lead to nuclear war, even more conceivably to the introduction of Chinese or Soviet "volunteers" into the conflict. And all the minor triumphs of American diplomacy over the past decade—the SALT talks, the European detente, the rapprochement with China, the summit conference still gamely scheduled for later this month—could vanish before our eyes.[14]

Congressman JOHN CONYERS (Mich.):

Mr. Speaker, today a resolution of impeachment of the President of the United States, Richard M. Nixon, was introduced for myself and Representatives Bella Abzug, Shirley Chisholm, Ronald Dellums, and William Ryan.[15]

George McGovern called the mining "a flirtation with World War III." Senator Ed Muskie (D-Maine) said Nixon "is risking a major confrontation with the Soviet Union and with China and is jeopardizing the major security interests of the United States." Congressman TIP O'NEILL denounced Nixon's "get tough" attitude and said it "presents the calculated risk of a confrontation with the Soviet Union. The White House will have to show tremendous diplomatic skills in the next three days or we could be in World War III."[16]

The scheduled summit in Moscow came off as planned. The North's offensive against the South petered out and was not renewed until 1975. The Russians and Chinese didn't order their volunteers into Vietnam. A SALT pact between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. was initialed that month and passed by the Senate in September. North Vietnam changed negotiating tactics and became more flexible. A Harris Survey taken May 9-10, 1972, showed 59-24% endorsement of Nixon's move. There was no World War III. None of the above Democrats admitted later to being inept analysts of how power and diplomacy work; none showed any sign that they learned anything from their forecasting mistakes.

One month short of a dozen years later, the congressional rank-and-file heard about another mining of Communist ports. For a few months in early 1984 the CIA had, from a ship just outside Nicaragua's 12-mile boundary, been supervising minelaying by insurrectionists.

Legislators of many ideological stripes were offended. Some Republicans opposed the mining for practical reasons (fear of sinking ships of allies like France); some were insulted at being encouraged by Administration personnel to deceive Congress (BARRY GOLDWATER, JAKE GARN, BILL ARMSTRONG). White House Chief-of-Staff Jim Baker and CIA Director Bill Casey even gave Senate Republicans the okay to vote against an anti-mining resolution, which passed by 84-12.

So it can't be true that to oppose the way the mining was handled, or even to oppose the mining itself, was a sign of defeatism and alarmism. To find the latter you have to listen carefully to the angry Democrats; they focused only somewhat on practicality and little on institutional honesty. They mainly seemed offended by the very thought of yet another U.S. move against a Communist nation.

If the U.S. had violatd international law with the mining, it was in response to Nicaragua's violation of national law by arming El Salvador's Marxists. This was a point most Democrats ignored. Instead, in the name of holding it to pristinely aloof standards, they trashed their own country.

This is a sample of what they said during April 10-15, 1984:

Senator TED KENNEDY (D-Mass.): "This is a dark moment in the history of our nation. . ."[17]

Senator GARY HART (D-Colo.): The mining "comes very close to an act of war, a return to the cowboy days of the CIA." [18]

Jesse Jackson: "We must support the government of Nicaragua. We have no right to mine the harbors there." [19]

Senate Minority Leader ROBERT BYRD (D-W.V.): "It is an act of terrorism." [20] (One week earlier BYRD had voted moneys for the anti-Sandinista forces, who have done more property and human damage than any collection of CIA mines.)

Congressman TIM WIRTH (D-Colo.): "After fighting throughout this century for the rule of law in international affairs, we have decided to become international outlaws . . ." [21]

Congressman MATTHEW MARTINEZ (D-Calif.): "This CIA-sponsored terrorism must be stopped. It is the responsibility of Congress to put a halt to this militant aggression and provocation . . . . We all but guarantee a continuation of the political confusion in Nicaragua by economically crippling the country." [22]

Congressman ED MARKEY (D-Mass.): "Is Ronald Reagan going to give America a new role in the world? Instead of being the world's policeman, are we now going to become the world's outlaw? . . . (I)t is time for us in Congress to stop President Reagan's reckless, irresponsible war against Nicaragua." [23]

Congresswoman CARDIS COLLINS (D-Ill.): "We must stop attacking a sovereign country, an impoverished nation left bankrupt by a despotic family we helped put and keep in power for so long. If we do not say no now, I am afraid that we will find out why Reagan wants to exempt himself from international law . . ." [24]

Congressman DAVID BONIOR (D-Mich.): "I am proud that a majority of this body has voted twice to stop funding the CIA-sponsored war against Nicaragua. And I urge the House to stand by its convictions, and reject any funds for a policy that is branding this nation as an international outlaw." [25]

TED KENNEDY again: "Give diplomacy a chance, give peace a chance, give negotiations a chance." [26]

Congresswoman BARBARA BOXER (D-Calif.): "I am appalled and ashamed of our cowardly behavior, waging a secret war, endangering lives at sea and refusing to stand up to world scrutiny. The President blames the Congress for interfering with his military exploits. I say thank God we do." [27]

"Ashamed" is a key word. Many Democrats, and not just those elected ones who like microphones, are ashamed, horrified, livid and traumatized every time the U.S. comes anywhere near using or supporting force against a Communist government or insurrectionist force. They use words like "impractical" and "ineffective" from time to time, but the emphasis is on the vileness of the intent and the unworthiness of the goal.

The comparison between 1972 and 1984 says two things. In one respect, there is continuity. Lots of Democrats enjoy doubting the wisdom and intent of their nation's President when he moves against Communist elements; those same Democrats almost never come back and say, "We called that one wrong; we'll be a bit more realistic next time."

In another respect, there's a big difference.

In May 1972, during the first week of the Haiphong mining, Richard Nixon actually got more vocal support from House Democrats than he got opposition. A majority of the House Democrats taking a strong position adhered to the JFK tradition and trusted presidential leadership. In April 1984, tho, House (or Senate) Democrats willing to give a Republican President the benefit of the doubt on the Nicaragua mining were hard to find.

THE 1974 REPUDIATION

It's an old story that the student protesters of the late 1960s donned business suits, adopted a middle-class outlook when the children came, and starting voting for property tax relief. A lot of them did. But some changed packaging more than substance. They bought suits and dropped the anti-establishment rhetoric only to make their politicking more effective, and they carried their anti-military, defeatist outlook to Congress.

By 1984 fully 191 of the 267 House Democrats, or almost 72% had come to Congress in 1974 or later. Colorado Rep. TIM WIRTH, Class of '74, was correct to observe, "We were the children of Vietnam, not children of World War II. We were products of television, not of print. We were products of computer politics, not courthouse politics. And we were reflections of JFK as president, not FDR. We were the first class that was like that, and now the whole place is." [28]

WIRTH is accurate, with one major exception. The Class of '74 House Democrats are not reflections of JFK in their thinking about the U.S. role in the world. JFK was an optimist; he was of the generation that had won a war against tyranny and helped rebuild (and then manage) the free world. He looked around him as he matured and saw things that largely worked.

The Class of '74, by contrast, was birthed in a period of extreme skepticism. JFK liked to say "We can do better," but the 1974 campaigns of Democratic challengers were enshrouded by feelings of "We can't do anything right, so let's quit." It's true that some could sound upbeat, but this was probably more a reflection of hope about their own individual, political futures. The Class of '74 personified a decade whose travellers routinely told pollsters, "I'm gonna do fine, but the country's a mess and the world is even worse." They looked around them and all the signs said, "Be skeptical. Question. Doubt. Shatter illusions before they shatter you."

This was understandable. The U.S.A. in 1973-74 was a land of gas shortages, a 27% hike in food prices and a 35% hike in energy costs, and a doubling of the prime rate. Actions to combat pollution hadn't yet brought real results and an energy crisis looked to abort the struggle. There was isolationism, scandal, impeachment, deep cracks in NATO, and a bipartisan feeling that the Soviets and Red Chinese were, one way or another, supposed to cooperate with America.

All the certainties of the postwar era, from cheap energy to who America's enemies were, were being bludgeoned. None of the Vietnam POWs running for Congress that year made it.

In this environment one of the greatest political warps in American history occurred, as the voters repudiated the visible symbol of incompetence, venality and collapsing certitude: the congressional Republican Party. The dimensions of the 1974 warp are clear when one looks at where key Members of the Class of '74 won, and how those districts voted only two years prior.

In 1974,

□ 1850

WIRTH won 52-48% in a district (Colorado 2) that had voted 65% for President Nixon.

MATT MCHUGH won 53-43% in a district (New York 27) that had gone 64% for Nixon.

BOB CARR won 60-50% (647 votes) in a district (Michigan 6) that had gone 59% for Nixon.

CHRIS DODD won 60-40% in a district (Connecticut 2) that had gone 60% for Nixon.

DON BONKER won 62-38% in a district (Washington 3) that had gone 58% for Nixon.

LES AUCOIN won 56-44% in a district (Oregon 1) that had gone 56% for Nixon.

JAMES WEAVER won 53-47% in a district (Oregon 4) that had gone 56% for Nixon.

HAROLD FORD won 50-50% (744 votes) in a district (Tennessee 8) that had gone 57% for Nixon.

NORMAN MINETA won 53-42% in a district (California 13) that had gone 58% for Nixon.

JERRY PATTERSON won 55-42 percent in a district (California 38) that had gone 68 percent for Nixon.

STEVE NEAL won 52-48 percent in a district (North Carolina 5) that had gone 71 percent for Nixon.

MARTY RUSSO won 53-47 percent in a district (Illinois 3) that had gone 70 percent for Nixon.

PHIL SHARP won 54-46 percent in a district (Indiana 10) that had gone 69 percent for Nixon.

TOM HARKIN won 51-49 percent in a district (Iowa 5) that had gone 63 percent for Nixon.

TOM DOWNEY won 49-45 percent in a district (New York 2) that had gone 72 percent for Nixon.[29]

(Downey's Long Island district had been Nixon's best in all of New York. Noted the 1976 Almanac of American Politics, "How a district that gave 72 percent of its vote for Richard Nixon and 66 percent for Republican Congressman James Grover two years before could switch so massively is a question worthy of a sophisticated piece of survey research.") [30]

All managed to hang on. They survived the GOP mini-wave of 1978 and the Reagan tidal wave of two years later. All except (perhaps) Neal, Mineta and Russo tend to work from a Vietnam-scarred perspective.

Because of that 1974 warp, and because foreign policy hasn't been a salient issue in any election since the early 1970s, dozens of traditionalist districts have Democratic Representatives with pessimistic attitudes about the U.S. mission in the world. That, along with Ehrenhalt's phenomenon of defeatist Democrats taking over from JFK or conserative Democrats in districts never Republican, changed the composition of the congressional Democratic Party.

Most congressional Democrats elected in 1974 and after may like JFK's modernist style but they repudiate his optimistic essence. They are competent professionals with no positive political vision to believe in. They inherited a domestic liberal tradition in ruins. They survive by shrewd media-management, effective constituent service, and whatever compromises are necessary on domestic issues. On foreign policy they're able to stick to their principles.

The Class of '74 has become what WIRTH called the House's "middle managers." Six of 20 Budget Committee Democrats were first elected in 1974. Said Congressional Quarterly: "Virtually every one of the 37 remaining class members is in a power position in the House: 30 chair subcommittees and all the others serve on either the Appropriations, Rules, or Ways and Means Committees, the most prestigious panels in the House." A 1983 CQ study found the class of '74 voting alike 82 percent of the time "on selected key votes." [31]

When observers like Ehrenhalt can write that "it is no longer considered radical or even adventurous for rank-and-file Democrats from Eastern and Midwestern districts to vote against authorizing money for defense. It is standard practice," one sees a Vietnam generation that stuck to its banners, in effect if not literally.[32]

With the disappearance of the big-city ethnics, and the taming of the Southern conservative contingent to where it controls no committee, the House Democratic caucus, and often the House (which is set up to follow majorities of majorities even if they're minorities), defeatist Democrats have the power, or most of it. Not every House Democrat elected in 1974 or later is a defeatist but the great majority are. No leadership decision they firmly oppose can last.

THE RADICAL WORLD VIEW

You can analyze defeatism in the House and Senate two ways. One is by post-1974 rollcall votes and speeches of Democrats on individual issues, a partial list of which runs: Opposition to Trident, MX, and the B-1 bomber. Successful stoppage of Ford-Kissinger plan to help pro-Western forces in Angola. Belief in the promises of the Sandinistas in Nicaragua in 1979-80. Stress on arms control process over actual state of U.S. defenses. A dovish stance, stressing retreat or negotiation over confrontation, in every world hotspot except (sometimes) the Middle East. And, after 1980, attempts to cut or end U.S. aid to El Salvador's government and Nicaraguan rebels.

Most studies of the philosophical make up of Congress use that approach, which starts with vote analysis and draws conclusions, cautiously, about policy formulation.

This monograph takes another tack. It surveys the character of Democratic foreign policy commentary and actions, and derives a radical world view; then it measures that world view against the world. The world view is implied by lists of defense and foreign policy votes but clarified by themes and phrases repeated in floor statements, on national TV, and elsewhere.

As a result, the sketch is more impressionistic than statistical. It isn't the kind of thing people used to thinking of Congress in CQ terms would come to easily.

Everyone knows that Senator TED KENNEDY has a "dovish" voting record on defense and foreign policy matters. It would be no news to list those votes and say they imply X or Y. What's a lot more useful is to look at the arguments and underlying assumptions KENNEDY and others make. Why do their minds work that way?

KENNEDY chose to write in Rolling Stone on March 15, 1984:

> Reagan is the best pretender as president that we have had in modern history. Some White House aides talk of "the peace issue" as if it were mostly a political problem for Ronald Reagan. Others imply that they only need to play for time before launching a wider war in Central America in 1985, which would be a tragic replay of the fateful mistake of two decades ago in Indochina. Administration officials are talking peace in 1984 as a prelude to making war in 1985.[33]

That definitive prose is worth more for insight than a printout of KENNEDY's 21+ years of Senate votes; there's a comprehensive way of viewing America and the world behind it. And KENNEDY's emphatic, motivation-judging and mind-reading rhetoric is not a unique product of his revolving-door, ever-bright team of writers hoping to be the next Ted Sorensen. The same violent assumptions, the same pining for 1968 and looking under every bed for Tonkin Gulf conspiracies, grace the words of people you never heard of, like freshman Rep. EDWARD FEIGHAN (D-Ohio), who told the House in a March 28 statement:

> President Reagan is preparing for war. And by perpetuating a policy of military intervention that has failed nearly every American President since Monroe, he is sentencing the people of Central America to another endless cycle of violence and poverty and despair.[34]

Taken together, the votes, the speeches, the choice of villains, the terms stressed or ignored, show this view of the world:

(1) There are no evil ideologies or governing systems in the world except for South Africa. Communists are at heart reformers who are too rough in their means. They're not inherently bad, but the U.S. is so clumsy and paranoid in its dealings with Communists that we facilitate or give them excuses for their excesses.

(2) Leftwing totalitarianism is caused by rightwing authoritarianism, and the U.S. makes both worse. We finance the rightists, and make the leftists worse by not competing with the Soviets to finance them. There's always hope that Nicaragua, Vietnam, the U.S.S.R., Cuba, Angola, et al. will behave, if we only treat them as sincere and respectable nations run by people not that different from Americans.

(3) Foreign policy conflicts are worse off when America plays world policemen. The lesson of Vietnam is that we can't impose our will anywhere; neither can the Soviets, in the long term. What Presidents sometimes say are "vital interests" are not worth fighting for in any event. To ease world tension the U.S. should maintain a low profile in whatever area it wants to keep influence in.

(4) American military force is only proper to defend the U.S. and (perhaps) a few of its democratic allies from an attack that has already commenced. Threatening force to prevent a feared attack is too risky in almost all circumstances. Force never really settles anything, and if it does, it should not. Even when a victory for freedom is quick and relatively cheap, as in Grenada, it's still wrong, evil, a violation of some principle (usually labeled "noninterventionism").

□ 1900

(5) Political negotiations and military force have nothing to do with each other; Clausewitz, U.S. Grant, and Henry Kissinger were wrong. In fact negotiating and force are mutually exclusive. Presidents who subsidize or threaten force prove that they don't want to negotiate. Members of Congress and peace activities who forswear force make the best negotiators because the other side knows no harm will come to them from the U.S.

(This world view is called "Radical" because it's thoroughgoing, comprehensive, fixated on 10% of recent history to the permanent exclusion of the other 90%, and different from anything elective U.S. politics has known in the postwar era. It's not a perfect word but seems more accurate, or at least more neutral than "leftists" or "isolationist." After all, Democrats entering national politics in the 1970's tend not to be statist on price controls, nationalization or starting new programs. And they favor foreign aid and the alliance with Israel.)

Attempts by Democrats at sketching a comprehensive foreign policy ought to be measured by those five postulates. Try it with George McGovern's 1972 convention acceptence speech, or President Jimmy Carter's Notre Dame speech in May 1977. Or look at New York Congressman STEPHEN SOLARZ' April 1984 statement to the Democratic Platform Committee.

In his statement, SOLARZ condemns South Africa's apartheid. He blames NATO's problems on Reagan's rhetoric. He eschews "military solutions to what are essentially political problems." He wants a quick end to covert action against Nicaragua. He wants the elected leaders of El Salvador to "enter into a good faith and unconditional dialogue with the opposition," and an end to U.S. military exercises in Honduras. He mocks the phrase "evil empire" and blames the Russians for nothing except, mildy, keeping troops in Afghanistan and keeping Jews in the Soviet Union. He says annual summits and the nuclear freeze will meet the "high priority" of "repairing our relations with the Soviet Union."

SOLARZ calls for a human rights crusade against governments "right or left." But he only mentions right-wing violators, condemning U.S. allies in Pakistan, South Korea, the Philippines and Taiwan. He says nothing about Quaddafi's terrorism, nothing about Vietnam's regional aggression, nothing about Cuba, nothing about Soviet use of chemical weapons, nothing about the Soviet military build-up, and nothing that contradicts the five radical postulates just listed. (See Appendix A.)

One can't be sure how many national Democrats consciously make policy based on a radical world view. The problem for the party is that so many of them now speak and vote as if they accept most of all of the world view.

The first problem is the world view doesn't work in this particular world. The second is that those who hold it don't seem to care.

M'CARTHYISM LOSES

Tho linking today's Democrats to an ineffective way of thinking, this monograph shouldn't be taken as a narrow endorsement of Ronald Reagan's administration. The ideal approach in the broadest sense is how the U.S. handled itself in a troubled world from Truman's time to now except for Jimmy Carter's term.

The hallmarks of that approach are pragmatism, internationalism, a feeling that the U.S. is a force for good, a bulwark against Soviet expansionism, and able to learn from its mistakes. That tradition encompasses the work and mindset of Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, and Ronald Reagan.

The post-1945 tradition includes a series of foreign policy successes that saved Greece and Turkey for NATO in the late 1940's; Lebanon for the West in 1958 and 1970; Western Europe from famine and Stalin's threats up to 1948 and, thru NATO from 1949, from Warsaw Pact invasion since; South Korea in the early fifties; Guatemala in 1954; Indonesia and the Dominican Republic in 1965; Israel in 1973; and Grenada in 1983.

Thru wise diplomacy it kept Taiwan from mainland domination, engineered a neutral and relatively free Austria, reconstructed Japan into a Pacific showcase for freedom and meant military pacts between the U.S. and its sister democracies everywhere.

It was not all roses. There were failures in Cuba, in Iran, and, in huge dimension, Southeast Asia. There was serious bickering between the two parties about foreign policy in the 1952 and 1964 presidential elections. There was high defense spending and many soldiers were killed. There were official lies by Johnson and Nixon and DEF-CON alerts that terrified the nation.

Running foreign policy as the world's leading free nation after 1945 was not easy. Both parties had shared assumptions, even if they didn't always think so at the time. During the time of Cold War consensus (1946–68), the centers of both parties governed within a framework of shared values—freedom's importance and Soviet threat. The left-wing of the Democrats and the right-wing of the GOP made the noise but the centrists of both parties made the history; they became instructors of reality to the rest of the political culture.

The modern Democratic Party, led now by two generations traumatized by Vietnam, can't govern in that framework of realism. It's a framework that includes bombs, deals, threats, an activist CIA, and cold calculation, as well as economic aid, peace pacts, diplomatic protests, and summits at which goodwill is displayed. Today's Democrats seem only like the last four. Without more than that, they can't defend U.S. interests in a hostile world.

Anti-Communist Republicans for a long time tried to make a similar case, starting with the second Truman Administration. Their efforts were inelegant, the political side-effects and intellectual fallout ghastly. They made the moral and strategic error of presuming motivation. They were given to doubting Democratic patriotism—even before Vietnam, when that party was led by strong, anti-communist liberals.

The attackees (everyone from left-wing Hollywood activists to Dean Acheson, one of the most effective Secretaries of State ever) then fought back with the tarbrush "McCarthyism." The isolationist remnant in the GOP under both Truman and Eisenhower managed to separate itself from responsible analysis and unite the Republican center with responsible majority of Democrats. So clumsy was the right-wing attack, and so powerful the Democratic response, that "McCarthyism" can still silence debates about foreign policy—30 years after the Wisconsin Senator was censured by his colleagues.

The necessary question still gets lost in the rhetorical mud. It's a question national Democrats could answer convincingly in 1955 or 1965, but can't now. That question has nothing to do with motivation or patriotism, and everything to do with results and reality. Conservatives, Republicans and traditional Democrats ought to ask it the right way:

"Can the Democrats manage U.S. foreign affairs based on their view of the world? Based on the record of the recent past, will their policies work?"

Effectiveness and competence is the standard for judging, not motivation. Any fair-minded (or merely cautious) critic should take as a given the patriotism of any Democrat. Republicans eager to save Central America from Radical blunders must make it a point to endorse the patriotism and sincerity of every Democrat they take to task for being, objectively speaking, blind to reality.

Radicalized Democrats would prefer Joe McCarthy launch every debate. Their opponents must instead make Al Smith the keynote: "Let's look at the record, my friend." They should downplay words like "appeasement" and emphasize words like pessimism, defeatism, reality, and results.

Conservatives, Republicans and traditional Democrats must be instructors in reality, not evaluators of motivation.

What they are, and what they aren't, must be made painfully, redundantly and emphatically clear. If it's not, today's Democrats will successfully dodge responsibility for the results of their Radical worldview, and Republicans eager to unite political justice and recent history will only unite Radical delusions and U.S. policy dominance.

Hardliners tempted to smear Democrats should remember what freshman Rep. BILL RICHARDSON (D-N.M.) said in the House April 27, 1983:

> This Administration, in a disturbing echo from the past, is . . . attempting to equate support for official policy [in Central America] with patriotism . . . This foot-stomping is not only unfair but dangerous. I would remind this Administration that remaining silent in the face of policies that hurt the nation is not patriotism, but moral cowardice.[36]

Republicans need never resort to the motivation-assumptions inherent in "McCarthyism." Neither should they be guilty of "moral cowardice" as Rep. RICHARDSON defined it. Grant the mobility of the intent while objectively measuring the effect of the results. There are enough results to make a sound case against the Radical worldview.

M'GOVERNISM WINS

1972 Democratic standard-bearer George McGovern used to be remembered for losing big to Richard Nixon and picking a running-mate who quit after 2½ weeks. Now, after his 1984 race, he's seen as a decent, friendly sort who appealed to his party's conscience and made good showings in the Iowa Caucus and Massachusetts Primary.

In the party's history books, he deserves to be remembered for clarifying a new approach to foreign policy, one ahead of its time.

McGovern's 1972 slogan was "Come Home America," his main issue Vietnam. In early July of that year he said he'd go on his knees begging Hanoi to release American POWs if he thought that would make the difference. On national TV 4 weeks before the general election he called the Vietcong "a small band of peasant guerrillas" who only wanted independence from American aggression. He promised to cut off all ties to allied governments in Southeast Asia and called for a 33% cut in the defense budget by fiscal year 1975.

□ 1910

Some of McGovern's advice was taken and some wasn't. He stuck to his principles. In 1972, he embodied every part of the Radical worldview just outlined, and still does.

McGovern's 1977 autobiography "Grassroots" has photos of the South Dakota Senator with Fidel Castro in a jeep, and with Vietnam's Premier Pham Van Dong, as Ho Chi Minh looks down benignly from the wall. It ends with a chapter revealing to the point of embarrassment: in "Looking Outward," every part of the Radical worldview is there. U.S. diplomacy after the Marshall Plan is called an unmitigated failure, and a "mature," friendly approach to Communist elements is called for.

From his time in Cuba in 1977, McGovern concludes:

> Castro does not seem to be a dictator for his own sake, but a convinced revolutionary who is popular among his own people. Tho we may wish that he would see the world our way, his own scale of values weighs social and economical equality far more than civil liberties. He will never, it is clear, trade his conceptions for American tourism and trade. (p. 284)

Translation: American talk about democracy is a cover for business propositions, which the uncorruptible and unselfish dictator won't fall for in any event. Castro is wise to America's retrograde commercialism, and we have some nerve applying standards of civil liberties to him. Seven years later—after the evidence of Castro's support of Puerto Rican terrorists in the U.S., after his 1980 Vietnam-like pushing of Cubans (criminals and political victims alike) into the sea on rafts, after endorsing Brezhnev's invasion of Afghanistan—George McGovern could still say of Cuba's dictator:

> We could have him in a cooperative relationship with the United States if we'd go after him. I would begin conversations looking to the exchange of ambassadors . . . and lifting the trade embargo . . . so that instead of fighting at every turn in Central America, we'd at least have a working relationship of some kind with him.[37]

McGovern wants to be friends with and make amends to Communists everywhere. His autobiography says of five days in Vietnam in January 1976:

> The visit to Vietnam moved me as has no other experience abroad. Walking thru the streets of Hanoi where American bombs had fallen, seeing the devastation of the countryside from an airplane window, listening to Vietnamese expressions, despite all this, of friendship for the American people redoubled my determination to work for reason and fairness in our postwar Vietnam policy. (p. 129)

That meant attacking the Carter Administration for not supporting Vietnam's loan applications to international development banks. Sen. McGovern wanted the U.S. trade embargo lifted, too, plus billions in U.S.-to-Vietnam aid. The McGovern tendency to excuse Vietnam's Communists for everything and put the blame for that region's troubles on America is almost pathological. Asked by the Washington Times in July 1983 if the Vietnamese were "better off" under Communist rule than under an authoritarian regime supported by the U.S., he wouldn't say no:

> That's a hard question to answer, because we virtually devastated that country in some 20 years of war, first with the French and then with the Americans. After a quarter of a century of devastating warfare they have been left to fend for themselves, and under those circumstances you're bound to have enormous suffering and disorder.[38]

It's still our fault. Everything Communists do is somehow America's fault. McGovern told the Washington Post a few days before the Soviets shot down Korean Flight 007 on September 1:

> I think we ought to be very thankful that this man Andropov seems to be a reasonable guy and somewhat restrained. Because certainly the Reagan-Weinberger approach is one of intense confrontation. It's almost as though they were spoiling for a military showdown.[39]

Two weeks later he declared for the 1984 nomination calling for a 25 percent cut in the defense budget and, as he put it 6½ weeks before the New Hampshire Primary, "no more American military involvement anywhere in Central America, period." At about the same time he told the Washington Post: "The most serious single mistake Reagan has made is to permit Soviet-American relations to collapse."[40]

Right after Andropov's death became known, McGovern said, "It is a modern tragedy that one of the Soviet Union's most intelligent and realistic leaders has served and died, during the administration of the most ill-informed and dangerous man ever to occupy the White House."[41]

President McGovern would stop more Cruises and Pershings from entering Western Europe, because a bolstered NATO makes the Soviets "even more trigger-happy and paranoid. * * * If they shot down a Korean jetliner thinking that their airspace was threatened, my God, what are they going to do if they think that we have surrounded them with intermediate-range missiles?" This logic has the U.S.S.R. being eminently logical and paranoid simultaneously, and it is America's fault for appreciating neither.[42]

George McGovern may be an oddity—a politician who says what he thinks about world events and never deviates from his underlying assumptions—but McGovernism is no longer an oddity. He was as much founder of as spokesman for the orthodoxy that supplanted his party's JFK-era realism. Ben Wattenberg said on CBS radio in January 1984, "McGovern has grandfather rights on hyper-dovish Democrats." The former Senator's legacy is a generation that thinks like he does, even if it talks less fulsomely.

An October 16, 1983, Washington Post piece called him "the brood hen of American politics," and pointed out that "every Democrat running for President owes George McGovern," because he "gave his opponents the brainpower without which they could not run their campaigns." GARY HART said as much in a campaign memoir published 10 years earlier.

His candidacy brought new hope to millions. It was the first step in forging a new political "center," a movement consecrated to change and progress. It was the occasion for the emergence of new activists. Unlike those who have gotten into politics for an individual candidate and then disappeared after the defeat, the thousands of people who came into the McGovern campaign will stay active in party affairs all across the nation. They are joining the staffs of Senators, Governors, and Congressmen. They are seeking party positions at the state and local level. Some will undoubtedly seek office themselves.[43]

Walter Mondale's campaign director (Jim Johnson) and political director (Paul Tully) are important McGovern operatives. ALAN CRANSTON'S campaign manager ran McGovern's Dade County effort in 1972. ERNEST HOLLINGS' campaign manager was the South Carolina coordinator. The architect of McGovern's stunning 2nd-place showing in the 1972 New Hampshire primary was Joe Grandmaison, thru late 1983 high in the JOHN GLENN organization. McGovern veterans comprise "two full pages" of GARY HART'S campaign staff list. And GARY HART, tho he now disassociates himself from McGovern's big spending tendencies, remains true to McGovern's foreign policy.

Post writer Bill Peterson explains:

Their idealism has been tempered by time, and political defeat. They are no longer the political bomb-throwers they were portrayed as in 1972. Actually, few ever were. They were simply some of the most ambitious young people of their generation, deeply committed to a cause. They were liberal activists during a year when the McGovern campaign was The-Place-To-Be. They are now at an age, and have accumulated the experience, that they feel entitles them to a shot at running the country.

McGovern and his minions directly altered the presidential nominating process, and they legitimized running a national campaign on anti-Cold War principles. The party's three 1980 presidential candidates (Carter, Brown and KENNEDY) espoused world views not that different from the McGovern ones of 1972. Some of the 1972 veterans ran for Congress, and implanted McGovernism there.

If America's participation in the Vietnam War had as one of its legacies the McGovern 1972 crusade, then a legacy of both has to be the shape of the Democratic Party in 1984. In the 1970s it was never an equal match between Jacksonism and McGovernism. Jackson lost two nomination fights; McGovern beat him for one and then McGovernism dominated the policies of the man (Jimmy Carter) that beat him for the other. Scoop Jackson can best be seen in the 1970s as JFK holdover, with fewer and fewer allies as the decade wore on.

McGovern's 1972 campaign built the coffin for John Kennedy's tough-minded internationalism. What McGovernism did to the Democratic Party in subsequent elections nailed the coffin shut.

HISTORY LESSON

To be a rising Democrat today requires a certain view of what shaped the present. It was stated with a flourish by a man elected to the House in 1974 and the Senate in 1978, PAUL TSONGAS of Massachusetts, in a floor speech January 29, 1980:

Twenty years ago, Mr. President, people stood up on the floor of this Chamber and said, "Well, maybe Batista was not such a great soul after all," but they never said anything about him when he was in power. "And this fellow, Fidel Castro, we do not like the way he combs his beard."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Would the gentleman pause just a moment. The Chair does request the gentleman to omit those portions of the paper which he is reading which refer to specific sitting Members of the other body and to their actions in that body.

As you know, there is a rule against it, and the Chair is required to take the initiative to enforce that rule.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the gentleman to whom I am referring was a Member of the House during the period of the time that this speech was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As long as it is not a reference to his actions in the other body, in the Senate, or critical of him as a Senator.

There are a couple of other references a bit earlier that the Chair would respectfully request the gentleman to omit when he has finished his reading today.

Mr. WALKER. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have referred to any direct speeches in the Senate. And I am fairly certain that the Member from Massachusetts to whom I am referring here in 1980 when the speech was made was a Member of the House and not of the Senate.

And this fellow, Fidel Castro, we do not like the way he combs his beard, and we have to get rid of him; he is a threat. So the way we are going to get rid of him is to isolate him.

□ 1920

And they raised the spectre of Communism and everybody rallied around the flag and we isolated Castro, all right. He is still in power and most of those who were here and argued that case have long since passed on to the boards of directors of various U.S. firms.

Castro is in power today because we isolated him and gave him no choice but to turn to the Soviets. The people whose arguments resulted in that policy are the same ones who have continued for 20 years to argue for more isolation. . . .

If you want to understand Castro, go back and look at Batista. If you want to understand what happened in the Dominican Republic, go back and look at Trujillo. If you want to see what happened in Nicaragua, look at Somoza. If you want to find out what happened in Vietnam, look at Diem. If you want to find out what happened in Cambodia, look at Lon Nol. Look at the Shah of Iran.[44]

In this panoramic sweep, two things are missing. The first is an ideology called communism that facilitates (or requires) totalitarianism if given any opening. The second is any redeeming international value for Uncle Sam, a hapless sort fumbling around the world indirectly creating Communist regimes and making them worse by avoiding friendship.

A similar overarching perspective comes from the late Frank Church, who served Idaho in the Senate 1956-80. By the mid-1960s he'd blended the "lessons of Vietnam" with the traditional isolationism of his home turf. In January 1984, he told columnist David Broder:

Remember how many years we pursued stupid policies in Asia, based on ignorance and an irrelevant ideological view of the world. The stupidity of it! All those years of trying to "contain" China, a pygmy nation beset by problems of its own. . . .

Yet we seem to be unable to learn from the failure of our Vietnam policy, or the equally evident failure of our hard-line policy toward Castro in Cuba. It is this idea that the communist threat is everywhere that has made our government its captive and its victim.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE DEMOCRATIC FOREIGN POLICY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SKELTON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to pick up where the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) left off in the document entitled, "What is the Matter With the Democratic Foreign Policy," by Mr. Frank Gregorsky, who was quoting at this point Senator Frank Church talking to David Broder in January 1984:

Somehow, some day, this country has got to learn to live with revolution in the Third World. It's endemic. It's relatively easy to suppress revolution in Grenada, so we congratulate ourselves. It's more difficult to suppress it in Nicaragua or Central America, so we fret about that. But it will be impossible when it comes to Brazil or Argentina.

This country has become so conservative—so fearful—that we have come to see revolution anywhere in the world as a threat to the United States. It's nonsense. And yet that policy we have followed has cost us so many lives, so much treasure, such setbacks to our vital interests, as a great power ought not to endure.

Until we learn to live with revolution, we will continue to blunder, and it will work to the Soviets' advantage. It will put them on the winning side, while we put ourselves on the side of rotten, corrupt regimes that end up losing.[45]

Tsongas and Church were never found singing the praises of Stalinism. They were not necessarily static as political thinkers: on domestic issues, they challenged the big-government orthodoxy of their party's leadership (as have GARY HART and TIM WIRTH).

But their comments taken together show a view of the modern world that is rigid, unyielding, and skewed. It's a world where America does nothing right and Communism is just sort of out there, not as a proactive, sinister force, but as a bland atmospheric particulate that rushes into vacuums caused by "stupid" America and its "rotten, corrupt" allies.

McGovern, Tsongas, Church and other Democrats perfected the technique of not holding left-wing governments accountable for their actions. Those governments, quoting Lenin and justifying brutality in the name of Communism, are history's fault. Or maybe America's fault for being on the wrong side of that history, and supporting Batista, Trujillo, Somoza, and Thieu.

Some Democrats are eager to help write that history:

When a Communist regime seems likely, McGovern Democrats are willing to bet on its neutrality. Even though there is only one Yugoslavia, they treat it as the rule not the exception. Once a Communist regime is in, these Democrats give it unlimited sway to get even with history. At some distant point, they say, it may become an independent Communist state we can do business with, and that day can come sooner if we make a generous offer now.

Revel wrote that some people on Left think there's "some variety of communism other than Stalinism. But Stalinism is the very essence of communism. What varies is not the Stalinist system but the harshness with which it is applied. You cannot shoot or imprison all of the people all of the time. Nor is it necessary every day of the week to send tanks to reestablish Stalinist order in a friendly country. At times when pressure from above plus a rising standard of living are enough to forestall rebellion, repression need not be spectacular: it is part of the daily routine. But it is nonetheless Stalinist."[47]

The people making Democratic foreign policy today, from veterans KENNEDY, PELL, CRANSTON, and Mondale, to rookies FEIGHAN, BOXER, RICHARDSON, and MARTINEZ, implicitly reject that statement. (Just ask a Democrat to tell you what's wrong with it.) They appear to believe Stalinism exists only as a historical relic (Khrushchev got rid of it) or, if here now, is a byproduct of the change from a right-wing government to a left-wing one—a change the United States didn't get on the right side of early on.

Since Communism doesn't strike them as an independent, inexorable force feeding on totalitarian personalities and concepts, McGovern Democrats don't fear it. It's an animal their worldview didn't equip them to tame.

Every time a Communist movement battles an authoritarian U.S. ally, Democrats with Radical views believe the promises of the movement.

Every time a Communist movement takes power, Democratic Congressmen say it will be fair, progressive, enlightened.

Every time it's not, the blame goes to the United States or the particular country's history. Every time a Communist government declares for the export of its system, we're not supposed to pay attention to what's being promised.

Every time a Communist government commits an atrocity, Western memories are to be short and tempers long.

Rep. TOM HARKIN had high hopes for the Sandinistas in July 1979:

Nicaragua is a very small country. Thus, the members of the Broad Opposition front are quite familiar with the members of the provisional government and would know, much better than we would, if there was reason to be wary of it. The fact that the Broad Opposition Front, whose members would have the most to lose by a Communist takeover, would endorse the new plan, should assuage fears in this country that the junta is dominated by Communists. . . . The chances that General Somoza will be replaced by a truly democratic and representative government can only be enhanced by this most recent show of unity.[48]

Another Congressman elected in 1974, DON BONKER of Washington state, made excuses in advance for a Marxist force about to take Angola's capital in December 1975, remaking its leader into a reassuring Western presence:

Perhaps (an MPLA) government is inclined to nationalize American oil holdings, but it would not necessarily do so without compensation. In any case, such an action is understandable for a fledgling country which wants to reverse a humiliating legacy of dependence. If, as we claim, capital investment and trade are mutually beneficial, a new government, whatever it politics, will be tempted to establish relations. . . The leader of MPLA is Agostinho Neto, a medical doctor who seems to have acquired the enlightened and diplomatic style of the Europeans with whom he has long had admiring contact. . .[49]

BONKER thinks it was terrible for Angola to be dependent on the Portuguese; today it, or its besieged government, is every bit as dependent on the Soviets. But BONKER says nothing; when a Marxist group does take over, most Democrats have a hard time speaking ill of it and blame America for the rest of it.

□ 1930

AND BLAME AMERICA FOR THE REST

The other half of the Radical syndrome of looking for the best in Communists (and rationalizing the worst) is the assumption that America can do no right. The Marshall plan and the Peace Corps are the only postwar foreign policy initiatives today's Democrats point to with pride; they ignore or are ashamed of almost all else.

More than anything, this belief stems from Vietnam. In the late 60s and early 70s, it became a truism with the entire American left, from bombthrowers in Chicago to Eastern writers to progressive, pinstriped supporters of Eugene McCarthy and McGovern, that Southeast Asia would be fine once the U.S. left.

"Give Peace a Chance," American policy-makers were told, the implication being that it was only the U.S. or its ally South Vietnam getting in the way. Some Democrats went beyond mere implication.

Rep. DAVE OBEY (D-Wis.), June 2, 1970:

And we further believe that when it becomes unmistakably clear that America intends to end its involvement in Vietnam, all contending political factions in South Vietnam will have incentive to make the accommodations necessary for negotiating a political compromise.[51]

Senator Walter Mondale (D-Minn.), February 10, 1971:

The million-man South Vietnamese Army is the basis of our policy—to withdraw and yet to preserve the Saigon regime at the same time. In the end, this policy is built on sand. That is why we bomb and invade. We have seen this logic before. If only we "hurt" the other side, if only we show ourselves manly, or ferocious, or unpredictable, the truth will somehow be postponed or go away. . . The (Nixon) Administration is so committed to the Theiu-Ky regime, and so doubtful of its strength, that they refuse a compromise settlement and launch a wider war. . .

History has given us words for what we are doing in Indochina. We are making a wilderness of devastation in three countries, a wilderness of our own schools and cities and farms starved by war spending. We are making a wilderness, and call it peace.[52]

Rep. BOB CARR, March 12, 1975:

If we really want to help the people of Cambodia and the people of South Vietnam, is it not wiser to end the killing? Since most credited analysts of foreign policy admit that the Lon No I regime cannot survive, won't the granting of further aid only prolong the fighting and, with it, the killing?[53]

Rep. ED BOLAND, June 17, 1971:

Draining our resources and dividing our people, the war is now little more than an exercise in futility. A negotiated political, settlement is the only way—quite literally, the only way—to stop the bloodshed. The concept of victory, always suspect, is now absurd . . . How much more can we endure? How many planeloads of coffins, how many mutilated and lamed soldiers, how many more Mylais, how many more plundered cities and burned villages?[54]

The questions of Congressmen CARR and BOLAND ought better to have been put to the North Vietnamese. The pattern for 1984 rhetoric was locked in long ago: give the benefit of every doubt to the Communists and doubt every benefit of your own nation. Make mincemeat of any ally dumb enough, or imperfect enough, to fight on the side of the U.S. Trash America, indict the President, and give the benefit of every doubt to Marxist regimes. That's the standard formula.

One radical Democrat went so far as to blame the U.S. military for part of the 1968 Hue massacre, a crime of particular viciousness usually ascribed to Communist forces even by antiwar historians:

There is some question as to how many people actually suffer if South Vietnam came under Communist administration. The example is often cited of Hue, which after having been occupied by the North Vietnamese was found to have mass graves with many bodies in them. We had assumed these people had been shot by the North Vietnamese, although a story has surfaced to the effect that our bombing and razing of a great portion of Hue resulted in many deaths and that these victims, too, were buried in the same open trenches.[55]

There is no absolute certainty that there would be a bloodbath. As I have noted, it appears there is a possibility that some of the people buried in the trenches at Hue may well have been killed by American bombs, so many deaths may not be clear evidence in themselves that a bloodbath would ensue.[56]

Perhaps the programmed drownings of boat people later in the decade would meet that radical Democrat's legal definition of bloodbath. It's a fair question for the institutional leader of radical Democrats on foreign policy.

In the Radical worldview, there is no crime by a Communist army or government that can't either be trivialized or blamed on America. There can be no "absolute certainty" that the next Communist regime will do whatever all the others have done in varying degrees.

Congressman HARKIN, on June 26, 1979, told the House that the Sandinistas knew more about nurturing democracy that America did:

Should the United States feel impelled to meddle once again in Nicaragua, the result will certainly be self-defeating . . . The process of developing a unified democracy in Nicaragua will be a slow one. However, if we attempt to artifically speed it up, we will only end up killing democracy once again, as we did four decades ago.[57]

Rep. BILL RICHARDSON, on April 27, 1983, said the best way to teach the Sandinistas a lesson was to cut off aid to those fighting them:

All of us in the Congress oppose Marxist power in Central America. But our current policies cannot and will not save that region. They will only prevent us from resolving the fighting and restoring the peace . . . In the past two years, we have secretly shipped over $60 million worth of weapons, helicopters, and supplies to the anti-Sandinista forces operating in Nicaragua. Our actions will only serve to drive that regime into the arms of the Soviets and to strengthen their grip on that country.[58]

In September 1983 a few Democratic Congressmen even showed more anger at the U.S. for the KAL 007 atrocity than at the Soviets. Said Rep. TED WEISS (D-N.Y.):

(W)e should learn that the Russians are not barbaric, subhuman, agents of aggression and deceit upon whom we suddenly can no longer trust or work with in . . . negotiations. Rather, the Soviets' response to a commercial airliner overflying its territory reflected the defensiveness and paranoia of a nation desperately afraid that the world might perceive it as a second-rate power. The harsh rhetoric [by the U.S.] can only heighten the Soviets' state of paranoia and isolation, and reduce ever further the already slim chances for arms reduction.[59]

One week earlier, Rep. GEORGE CROCKETT (D-Mich.) addressed students at Anderson College in Indiana:

The easy temptation . . . is to put the incident into our old Cold War framework and capitalize on it as simply another illustration of the inhumanity or brutality of the Soviet people—and then answer the attack by voting more money for missiles and bombers and other weapons. But, let us acknowledge for a moment that maybe our own preoccupation with defense and military solutions contributed to the climate that allowed the mistake to be made.[60]

How do you reason with people who think like that?

THE ANGOLA DEPARTURE

When both houses of Congress ended U.S. covert aid to pro-West forces in Angola, the Class of 1974 showed its policies could be implemented against the wishes of a traditionalist President. It exploited the Vietnam weariness of the population and national press to put the forces of realism thoroughly on the defensive. Angola was McGovern Radicalism's first clear "win." A lot of other causes and interests lost.

When Portugal granted the Southwest African state of Angola its formal independence on November 11, 1975, the three-way civil war heated up. The Soviet Union supported the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA). South Africa and the U.S. backed the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). Zaire and Red China backed Holden Roberto's National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA).

In the December 6, 1975, New Republic, Tad Szulc spelled out the Soviet investment in Angola:

Quite aside from its wealth—oil, diamonds, sugar and coffee—Angola is strategically located on Africa's west coast. Control would give Moscow a military presence on the South Atlantic. The Soviets have a foothold in Cuba in the Caribbean and a foothold in Somalia right below the entrance to the Persian Gulf. Bases in Angola, if they were to be obtained, would be crucial in supporting the Soviet fleet both in the South Atlantic and the Indian Ocean, thus faciliating operations along the oil tanker routes around Cape Horn.[61]

But the Administration of Gerald Ford was in hot water when previous CIA aid to UNITA was revealed and more asked of Congress. At about the same time Fidel Castro sent in 15,000 Cuban soldiers to fight on the side of the MPLA. At the end of 1975, the younger Democrats saw a chance to teach the foreign policy establishment the "lessons of Vietnam."

On December 12, 1975, freshman DON BONKER called for strict objectivity between the forces of the West and the forces favored by Russia and Red China:

(It) is an effete chessboard mentality, the 1950ish notion that we have to counter every Soviet move, however many innocent pawns we lose in the process, or that in the end we will be blackmailed. The only genuine parallel I detect between chess and the tragically real Angolan situation is that both superpowers are indeed treating it as a game. I thought by now we had learned that the United States cannot be the policeman of the world, let alone the king. . . . Why not remain above the fray and let them [the contending factions] fight it out?[62]

Rep. BONKER that day vowed to amend security assistance legislation before the House International Relations Committee to "enjoin direct or indirect American military aid to Angola." The Senate voted such a ban one week before Christmas 1975. Dozens of House Democrats made similar moves when the second session of the 96th Congress opened in January 1976; any help for UNITA was out of the question after that month, an aid ban known as the Clark amendment having been legislated over President Ford's veto.

The Class of 1974 was joining with veteran Democrats radicalized by Vietnam to make policy out of world view: American involvement in an East-West conflict, apart from aid to Marxist forces once they won, is wrong.

Castro's troops tipped the scales. By April, MPLA forces led by Agostinho Neto had the capital of Luanda and nominal control of the country. The Cubans stayed, acting less as soldiers and more as technicians and doctors. Neto flew to Cuba in the summer of 1976 and signed a flock of agreements. Within 5 years, there would be 30,000 Cubans in Angola, and their fighting would again reach high levels.[63]

Most Democrats stood firmly by the Clark Amendment. President Reagan tried to repeal it in spring 1981. The WOLPE-led Africa subcommittee on House Foreign Affairs voted 7–0 against repeal, and the full committee agreed 19–5 in a show of hands. Rep. WOLPE worried that repeal would make Angola's Marxist leaders fear renewed U.S. aid to Savimbi's insurgents, and so make the government more reliant on Cuban troops. Under WOLPE's formulation, banning aid to the insurgents was a way to lessen Castro's influence.[64]

Other Democrats were more direct in their sympathies. George McGovern flew to Luanda in December 1978 to meet with the governing Marxists. He said, "I wouldn't be here today if I didn't believe it were possible for us to improve our relations with Angola." But the U.S. refused to do diplomatic business there unless the Cubans left, a stance enduring thru three presidencies.[65]

What happened to the Angolans? Good question, and it can't be answered easily. There seems to have been no bloodbath, if only because a sub-tropical, bush-covered African state is not given to totalitarian micromanagement. All we know is that Neto and his successor Eduardo dos Santos made attempts to communize Angolan society, never held real elections, and tied Angola to Cuba, the Soviet Union, and certain Eastern Bloc countries.

It's also the case that Angola encouraged the Katanga province of the old Belgian Congo to rebel against Zaire, a sometime U.S. ally (and persistent foe of Libya's Colonel Qadhafi). There were border skirmishes in 1977 and 1978. The Carter Administration felt compelled to ship $2 million in medical supplies, combat rations, backpacks, and radio gear to Zaire's President Mobutu. Even that unnerved Congressman BONKER, whose committee assignments encouraged him to apply the Radical worldview to Africa:

(P)lummeting copper prices and general mismanagement have put Zaire's economy in political straits; and its political situation, depending more on military power than on popular support is, in the long run, tenuous. Supporting narrowly-based regimes—as we did in Portugal, Greece, and Vietnam—can be good policy one day but bad policy the next. In the case of Zaire, even tho "our boy" is still in power, it is not evident what influence we have achieved for all the hundreds of millions of dollars in economic and military aid we have put in. President Mobutu is not known for his ringing support of America's policies and principles.[66]

That quote is marvelous. It and the March 1977 op-ed piece it's from make excuses for Angola's Marxist leaders and take gratuitous shots at "our boy" (read: our ally) in Zaire, who probably doesn't deserve, implied BONKER, even non-military aid. America's friends are always worse than its enemies; help the latter and get tough with the former. This could be made in a Radical mantra if their arguments didn't require such long sentences.

One wishes Mr. BONKER would find a Marxist regime "depending more on military power than popular support" and denounce it; there are a lot of them around. "Narrowly-based" governments for the Left are rarely called that by today's Democrats. If they were, Mr. BONKER would be writing op-eds against present-day Angola.

By early 1984, Neto's heirs controlled less than one-third the country. FNLA's leaders were exiled in Paris, but UNITA forces led by Jonas Savimbi controlled the southeastern third of Angola and most of the provincial capitals. With help of various kinds from Zaire, Zambia, South Africa, Saudi Arabia, and Morocco, Savimbi aimed to force President dos Santos into a coalition government.

Savimbi was quoted in the Washington Post May 29, 1983:

My critics in the West are hypocrites. Do they believe that black men like us want to import apartheid to Angola? It is unthinkable. Against whom would we apply it? Ourselves? These Westerners say we should not take aid from South Africa for our struggle. But they will never give us aid themselves. They seem to be asking us to commit suicide, to accept being crushed by the Cubans and the Russians in our own country. We do not want to be an African Hungary. To avoid it, we have to take help from wherever it is on offer.[67]

It won't come from a Democratic House. It won't come from Democrats like CHRIS DODD, who is more entranced than Jonas Savimbi by the thought of another Hungary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is sure the gentleman is aware of the rule that he cannot make reference to sitting Members of the other body or to the activities or proceedings in that body.

Mr. GINGRICH. In the body. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thanks the gentleman.

Mr. GINGRICH. Over eight years later Democrats stand guard over the 1976 Angolan aid ban and the Clark amendment. They don't know what to make of Savimbi and his broadly-based, anti-Communist army, against which no civilian atrocities have been effectively held. Pro-western guerrillas who tend to avoid terrorism don't fit into the Radical worldview, so Democrats don't think about Angola until some American conservative suggests sending weapons to UNITA. At that point reflexes are triggered, and ineffective doctrines spill forth.

It gets harder and harder to believe that the MPLA regime is the true voice of the Angolan people. But some people; they have to.

The themes of the worldview should be familiar by now:

Communism is not necessarily wrong, but America nearly always is. Our allies are bigger threats to freedom than our declared enemies. Anytime a Communist government sins, it originates in something we or the previous rightist regime in that nation did. America must strive to show goodwill to the forces of history, by disengagement, desertion of its allies, cutting its defense budget, and generous aid and credit. America can't be the world's policeman, but that's fine because the neighborhood isn't in much, if any, danger from Communists to begin with. Force is never a part of effective negotiation but always an obstacle to it.

Some Democrats have been astonishing in their consistency.

Let me ask the chair for just a moment, to insure the chair understands what I am now doing, I have a series of quotations from a gentleman who is currently in the other body, but the quotations are from the floor of the House when he was in this body. I presume they are, therefore, legitimate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If they are not references to or critical of him as a Senator.

Mr. GINGRICH. All right.

Messrs. DODD and DOWNEY are two who've been saying the same thing since they got to Washington over nine years ago.

CHRIS DODD on Cambodia, March 12, 1975:

President Ford has tried to make this an issue by charging Congress with abandoning an ally. I say that calling the Lon Nol regime an ally is to debase the meaning of the word as it applies to our true allies. We have no defense commitment to Cambodia, and none is claimed by the President . . . The greatest gift our country can give to the Cambodian people is not guns but peace. And the best way to accomplish that goal is by ending military aid now.[68]

CHRIS DODD on Angola, December 19, 1975:

Mr. Speaker, I am urging my colleagues . . . to denounce equivocally the blatant intrusion on the part of the Ford Administration, the Soviet Union, and the South African and Cuban regimes in the domestic affairs of a newly independent African nation. Sadly, Angola has become the most recent staging ground for a familiar game of power politics whose players are failing to keep at heart the best interests of the Angolan people.[69]

CHRIS DODD on Nicaragua, August 21, 1983, questioned by Morton Kondracke on "Meet the Press:"

Q: The Nicaraguan government says that it's promoting a revolution without frontiers in the Central American region. Doesn't that seem to mean to you that they have it in mind to overthrow the neighboring governments, and shouldn't the United States be able to use military assistance and perhaps the threat of force to prevent that from happening?

A: That's rhetoric—"revolution without frontiers"—there's an awful lot of rhetoric being thrown about Central America these days. I don't necessarily believe because they use that kind of rhetoric that they're determined to overthrow every neighboring government in the Central American region. And I certainly don't think it warrants the kind of support of a covert activity which could clearly enflame the entire region in a military situation which would not serve our interests or the interests of our neighboring allies in the region well.[70]

CHRIS DODD after President Reagan's Grenada speech, October 27, 1983, questioned by John Dancy of NBC-TV:

Q: What about the President's contention that this was about to become a major Cuban base? Was that the reason for going in?

A: Not in and of itself. I think you'd like to try and exhaust other possibilities. . . The question of whether or not we needed to do what we did militarily, in order to deal with the potential Cuban threat, I think is something we should have sought the advice and counsel of other people [on]—particularly the Organization of American States, where as many as 15 countries today, not to mention our European allies, have all condemned our action. I'm not opposed to the use of military force; it just seems to me that ought to be your last option, not your first option. And my sense of the Reagan Administration is, they've jumped too quickly to this option without exhausting those other ones.[71]

Congressman DOWNEY minces fewer words. From Grenada back thru Vietnam he's been harshly loyal to the Radical worldview. On October 25, 1983, within hours of the Grenada operation's start, DOWNEY was on the House floor accusing President Reagan of shooting first and asking questions later:

First of all, you say that we are there to protect American lives . . . Then, five minutes later, the chancellor of the medical school comes on to say that no lives were in danger in Grenada. Second, you say to us that we have a treaty commitment that the eastern Caribbean countries can ask for help if they feel threatened? What if they feel threatened by Cuba and Nicaragua, Mr. President? [72]

TOM DOWNEY on anti-Communist forces in and around Nicaragua, July 28, 1983:

It appears as though some of my colleagues have transited the last 30 years without learning very much about American diplomatic history or the history of Central America . . . Some of the blackest pages of American history have been written in that portion of the world. American troops have been [in Nicaragua] twice in this century. The only thing that is different is that no longer are we interested in directly sending in American troops . . . We are not prepared to do a land version of the Bay of Pigs, with the 10,000 thugs, brigands and thieves.[73]

(In DOWNEY's entire 500-word House statement, there's not one critical mention of the Sandinistas, Fidel Castro or the Soviets. He doesn't even make the pretense of objectivity between the allies of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. that others did.)

To those of my colleagues whose myopia on viewing the Red menace obscures the enormous suffering of the people in this region, I say this to them: Is our arrogance so infinite that we can suggest that these countries are ours to lose? The presupposes they are ours to begin with.[74]

It is the millions of poor, innocent people who would like to live in peace, have something for their families, that should concern us first—not whether we lose or win in Nicaragua, but whether or not these people can live a life of hope and opportunity. They can live a life of hope and opportunity, Mr. Chairman, if we stop the killing.

□ 1950

TOM DOWNEY urging President Carter to get U.S. troops out of South Korea no matter what, May 23, 1977:

The central question is not whether South Korea can or cannot survive without our ground forces. The central question is this: Are the people of the United States willing to send more American men to die in another land war in Asia in defense of another corrupt and repressive dictatorship? . . .

If we are not, and I am not, we must pull our ground forces out as quickly as possible. If we fail to do this, we may find ourselves trapped into a war we do not want . . .

Do we want another Vietnam or do we not? This, not the military balance in Korea, is the question we must face.[75]

(In DOWNEY's entire 250-word House statement, there's no mention of the government to the North, and no recognition that the cause of another Korean War could be other than assumed provocation by the U.S.)

TOM DOWNEY on the last non-communist government of South Vietnam, March 25, 1975:

I come before this committee today [and ask]: My God, why are we still financing the almost inconceivable suffering that the people of Vietnam have endured . . . In addition to the military situation, we now see the final degradation of the society in Vietnam. The people of South Vietnam suffer as much from cruelty, stupidity and greed of their own government as they do from the war. President Thieu is a dying man surviving on the oxygen of the American dollars . . . Our military aid is not saving these people, it is murdering them.[76]

(In DOWNEY's entire 1,200-word statement to the House Appropriations Committee, there's not one critical mention of North Vietnam, the Vietcong or the Soviet Union.)

TOM DOWNEY, March 12, 1975, on Cambodia just before the Khymer Rouge launched a program that caused the deaths of one-fifth of the population:

In recent weeks the Lon Nol regime has proven itself to be corrupt and incompetent. Cambodian army officers can be seen relaxing around plush hotels while rebels storm the countryside. The wealthy of Phnom Penh continue to give lavish dinner parties while in the poorer quarters of the city parents and children beg for food. The government has shown favoritism in the distribution of rice, while prices in the marketplace have risen 20% . . .

We must not prolong the agony which $1.75 billion of U.S. funds has aided over the past 5 years. It is time that we allow the peaceful people of Cambodia to rebuild their nation . . . (T)he Administration has warned that if we leave there will be a "bloodbath." But to warn of a new bloodbath is no justification for extending the current bloodbath.[77]

(In DOWNEY's entire 1,000-word statement there's not one critical mention of the Khymer Rouge insurgents.)

The radical Democrats are consistent; one could predict down to the phrase what they'd say if Guatemala, the Philippines, Mexico or Malaysia were approaching civil strife with one of the sides Marxist. The radical Democrats' view of the world seems clear enough. They apply it every place U.S. interests are at stake, and they make predictions, as do other Democrats.

Their assumptions and predictions were tested in Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Angola and Nicaragua, but not in El Salvador or Grenada.

PART TWO: THE WORLD AS IT IS

VIETNAM

Tho it might seem otherwise, this monograph doesn't aim to refight the Indochina War or blame anyone but the Communists themselves for the things that happened when the U.S. called it quits in 1975. The Vietnam experience, broadly defined, was the most destructive thing to affect the U.S. since the Civil War. The pro-war elements in the U.S., both military and political, made mistakes and miscalculations that can't be written off just because their hearts were in the right place.[1]

I also don't seek to give a skewed version of what happened in Congress 1973-75. Radicalized Democrats weren't then strong enough to force a bombing and funds cutoff for Indochina on President Ford. They did it only with the help of moderate Democrats and a large chunk of House and Senate Republicans.

America by spring 1975 was fed up with the U.S. effort in Indochina. No argument by Gerald Ford or Henry Kissinger could've surmounted that attitude. Class of '74 Democrats were, at that time, in policy terms, squarely on the side of the majority.

But, nine years later, the assumptions and predictions of those rising Democrats can be looked at again. They are fair game, especially with the rethinking of the Vietnam experience that began around 1979. Academics, military strategists, and others not at the time obsessed with endorsing or destroying the policies of the moment now calmly study what America did right and what it did wrong.

Here's a composite sketch of America in Vietnam and Vietnam in American politics and society:

(1) The U.S. government never had clear objectives in Southeast Asia. John Kennedy wanted to stop Red Chinese expansion, Lyndon Johnson wanted to democratize the place and build TVAs on the Mekong, and Richard Nixon focused on "peace with honor" to maintain U.S. credibility around the world. All three Presidents acted as if the job could be done on the cheap. As a result, $130 billion was spent foolishly, if not wasted, the U.S. economy was dislocated, and 50,000 Americans lost their lives for little if any gain.

(2) American politics polarized, and containment was ruptured. The Cold War consensus that began eroding in 1965 was dead by 1969. With the start of the Nixon Administration, two opposing forces sought, and failed, to dominate U.S. foreign policy.

One was a retreating Cold War establishment, nominally led by Republicans because Nixon was perceived as in charge; it also included Democrats still loyal to Truman-Kennedy-Johnson realism. This group usually had the "silent" majority, which backed Nixon's aggressive withdrawal approach in Vietnam by majorities of up to 65%. Teddy White wrote: "If it was kill or surrender, the American people would back their president on the kill side."[2]

The other force was the disillusioned segment of the post-World War II establishment personified by Clark Clifford, Robert MacNamara and Cyrus Vance. These erstwhile hawks came to think America made fatal mistakes, not just about Vietnam but about the way the world worked. Their change-of-mind as the Johnson administration waned helped a majority of elected Democrats stake out anti-Vietnam stances after Nixon came in.

In so doing, Democrats made common cause with millions of Americans in universities and upper-income "New Class" professions (we didn't have the term "Yumpies" then), who would man the ramparts in Congress and the media after Nixon's mistakes produced the 1974 repudiation.

The first group wanted to end direct U.S. involvement in Indochina in a way that would keep the region non-Communist. The second group wanted out, either immediately or by a "date certain," as the phrase went. They believed the entire Vietnam experience a lost cause; some lacerated their country for "immoral" actions.

The 1972 presidential election was a textbook clash of these two forces, Richard Nixon for the retreating Cold War establishment and George McGovern for a growing anti-Vietnam, New Class, deeply skeptical coalition nominally headed by a band of traumatized elder statesmen.

(3) The clash of these two political forces plus Nixon's self-inflicted wounds produced a hybrid foreign policy during 1969-76 that everyone could disclaim parentage of. The policy that resulted kept the world guessing about the nature of America's commitment to "freedom" (meaning national independence under non-Communist regimes) in Southeast Asia. That's how a democracy handles issues that split the national will.

(4) Some progress was made in South Vietnam "nation-building" after the Vietcong's 1968 setback, tho the Thieu regime could not by any stretch of the imagination be called democratic. The country's military was in good shape by the end of 1972, just before the U.S.-North Vietnam peace accords were signed. Laos was making progress toward stable, non-Communist government. Cambodia was not; the Lon Nol regime was the weakest, most inept of America's regional allies. Congress forced President Nixon to stop bombing in support of Lon Nol in the summer of 1973, a move backed by public opinion.

(5) After getting most of its POWs back in March 1973, the U.S. lost interest in Indochina, and was encouraged by the media to focus on the burgeoning Watergate scandal. The 93rd Congress was reasserting prerogatives, investigating the scandal, reclaiming war powers, cutting defense and foreign aid to sustain new social welfare add-ons. Fox Butterworth writes:

American military aid to South Vietnam and Laos dropped from about $2.5 billion in 1973 to $1.6 billion in 1974 and then plunged further to a projected $700 million in 1975, half of it covering shipping costs. When Hanoi's attacks came [in March 1975, the first Northern offensive since April 1972], South Vietnam's armed forces were receiving only 2 percent of the funds and supplies American soldiers had gotten in 1968 or 1969, according to Maj. Gen. John E. Murray, the chief military administrator in Saigon in 1974 . . . .[3]

(6) In any case, the South's military was never a safe bet against the totalitarian elan of its opposite number in North, and the pro-West elements in Cambodia were even worse off. For many reasons, both American allies succumbed to Communist forces in spring 1975, while Laos was doing the same thing in a much less dramatic way.

(7) North Vietnam treated the Vietcong survivors as pesky office-seekers and unified North and South by fiat in 1976. Cambodia fell under the terror of Pol Pot and Khymer Rouge, losing perhaps two million of its population and being "rescued," in a relative sense, by Vietnam's 1979 invasion. Vietnam now had the world's third largest army (in per capita manpower) and felt strong enough, despite a collapsing economy, to taunt Red China in border skirmishes.

There was no democracy or prosperity in Laos, Cambodia or Vietnam with Americans gone. But out of sight was out of mind. The travails of America's Vietnam experience were, surprisingly, not an issue in the 1976 or 1980 elections.

Most objective students of America and its 1961-1975 Southeast Asia doings shouldn't find too much fault with the preceding sketch. No one comes out looking good, but some groups and forecasts look worse than others. It is here because this monograph needs a Vietnam framework to analyze what happened to the Democrats on the way from Truman and Kennedy to McGovern and Mondale.

□ 2000

It's also here in response to a 1982 observation by Kevin Phillips:

American public opinion toward the war was two-edged from the beginning: "Win or get out" probably summed up the feelings of the majority in 1965 and 1966. By the early 1970s, when victory no longer seemed possible, majority preference swung to a respectable egress, as represented in 1972 by Richard Nixon.

Only well after the negotiated U.S. withdrawal in January 1973, as the debris of Watergate began to accumulate, can it be said that public opinion swung (briefly, I think) and blamed Nixon, the military and conservatives for the debacle.

Here Richard Whalen and others were percipient in calling Watergate a disguised political civil war to allocate blame for the failure in Southeast Asia. It was, and from 1974 to 1976, Watergate did.

But the preliminary allocation was not permanent, and the question now is whether we can expect a reassessment . . . (O)ur political history suggests that our country's wars do not end—not their final national impact—until they've been refought in the political arena, and the refighting can go on for more than a decade.[4]

It's been ten years since those 75 Democrats entered the House thru the post-Vietnam 1974 political warp. The military debate over what worked and didn't work in Vietnam started years ago. Where's the political debate Phillips says American historical trends call for? How kind has history been to the early- and mid-70s notions of the forces that began with Nixon's collapse to take over the Democratic Party?

THEY WERE WRONG

Early adherents of the Radical worldview did make the Cold War establishment better explain what it was doing in Southeast Asia; the explanations changed all the time but at least more thought was given to them. Radicalized Democrats were asking some of what Peter Drucker calls "the right questions," because they weren't concerned with defending existing foreign policy.

But their basic assumptions were that:

Indochina would be prosperous and peaceful once the United States got out;

The situation in South Vietnam was a genuine civil war dominated by the popular and indigenous Vietcong, with only marginal aid from the North;

Area Communists were social reformers who wouldn't persecute the Buddhists and others that balked at American-backed governments there;

There would be no "bloodbath" in Cambodia or South Vietnam;

The Soviets would ultimately ditch their Vietnamese clients because they'd be too poor or strategically insignificant to sustain with foreign aid;

Hanoi would come clean about U.S. MIA's once hostilities were over.

All of these look astonishing in hindsight.

And it was to be stressed that most "hawks," from President Johnson rightward, predicted from 1965 on that these assumptions would be shredded if Communist elements ever gained absolute power.[5] In that sense the centrist establishment's worldview was vindicated by what happened in Southeast Asia, even as its bungling operations obscured its intellectual victory.[6]

But the basic assumptions of anti-Vietnam Democrats wither under the historian's microscope.

It was supposed to be different. In the spring of 1975, just as 75 Democrats were learning to work the House and the U.S. position in Southeast Asia crumbled, a piece called "Apes on a Treadmill" appeared in the New York quarterly Foreign Policy. Written by Paul Warnke, "Apes" was a paint-by-the-numbers portrait of what Vietnam should teach the U.S. about—well, about everything. Warnke's piece dispassionately sought to mummify every element of the already-gangrenous Cold War consensus.

His 1975 work sounds like a sourcebook for Democratic speeches in 1984:

I think we are spending too much on military arms and manpower and that to continue to do so worsens our economic position and jeopardizes our true national security.

Realistic recognition that we need not and cannot be the world's policeman is now quite general. But this discredited notion still has major impact on our defense policy.

Our armed forces still are tailored for use in wars of all varieties in any and all places. . . . Contemporary experience should indicate that most of the world wants none of our military intervention.

Neither we nor any other outsiders are wise enough to decide for another people the course to which their aspirations should lead them. The continuing penumbra of the illusion that somehow we know best can only blur a sound perception of our true foreign policy interests.

Today's electorate should be sophisticated enough to understand that no foreign country is ours to win or lose.

(T)he injection of American firepower into a local conflict is rarely compatible with our foreign policy interests. At a minimum, it will exponentially increase the devastation. A matching imprudence on the part of the other military superpower could engulf the world.

Vaunting rhetoric about our peacekeeping role, our worldwide commitments, the morale of our allies, control of the seas, and our indispensable leadership of the free world now awakens as much derision as respect.[7]

Maybe, but Warnke was one of the chief deriders. He spoke in 1975 as an ex-Cold Warrior anxious to launch a new consensus. He did, for the Democrats. It was based on limited involvement in the world, guilt, disarmament, contempt for imperfect allies, the hoarding of blame and the endlessly repeated notion that the U.S. is its own worst enemy.

The "apes" on the Warnke "treadmill" were the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. As in British Labor Party analyses of Britain and Germany in the mid-1930's, there was no difference between them; they were obsessed with weapons and security and the U.S. (or Britain) as the most mature of the apes could leap off the treadmill and set a positive example for the Soviets (or German Nazis).

In all other ways Warnke's expectations were quite low.

Did the American Left, broadly defined, learn anything from post-1975 events in and around Vietnam? By mid-1979 painful second thoughts were running thru parts of it.

The New Republic featured a symposium on "Vietnam—Were We Wrong?" (The contributors tended to doubt it, but at least the right question was heard.) More significantly, antiwar activist Joan Baez and 83 others ran a full-page ad in major newspapers in May 1979 that said:

People disappear and never return. People are shipped to "reeducation centers," fed a starvation diet of stale rice, forced to squat bound wrist to ankle suffocated in connex boxes. People are used as human mine detectors, clearing live mine fields with their hands and feet. For many, life is hell and death is prayed for . . .

Baez said that fall:

I've remained totally consistent in what I've said and done—and done—loudly—for over 20 years. I opposed human-rights violations in Vietnam when the United States was there, and I oppose it now under a communist Vietnamese government. I don't have any stock in the government of Vietnam, and never did—and that's very hard for people to understand . . .

The Vietnamese government is extremely clever and has done brilliant public-relations work—even getting people from our Congress to go in and come back saying, "Hanoi's doing everything it can to stop the flow of refugees." That's very, very clever. But I hate to think what happens to the people still in Vietnam who would like to have been refugees . . .

Many Vietnamese are undergoing torture, for example. We're learning more about it from the boat people who have managed to escape from Vietnam. It gets harder and harder for people in this country to deny what's happening, but some still try to deny it . . .

The left wing doesn't want to think about it, the right wing is not human-rights oriented, and lots of people have just really had it with the word Vietnam.[8]

The year 1979 was critical in the deidealization of the Vietnamese Communists. The (precarious) existence of the boat people clouded certain fantasies. There seemed no defense for a government that would force "ethnically impure" nationals out into the South China seas to face death on rickety boats. The small portion that were saved came to the U.S. and began to tell of life under the cohorts and proteges of Ho Chi Minh.

Some of these new Americans have been Vietcong partisans, like Mrs. Hue-Tam Ho Tai. Her father founded a Trotskyite party in Vietnam and, in 1977, was put by the government in a camp to starve to death. Her aunt was a senior official in the Vietcong's makeshift government when such a front was still useful to the planners in the North. Now a history teacher at Harvard, Mrs. Ho Tai told Fox Butterfield two years ago:

During the war, people looked at the Communists and said they were dedicated, driven and omnicompetent. Now we see them as corrupt and incompetent. It was fashionable to think that a guerrilla movement needed popular support to succeed, and that if the Vietcong survived, therefore they must have popular support. You can see how wrong it was now, because the Communist certainly aren't popular in the South.[9]

Not everyone saw how wrong it was. Most elected Democrats didn't do any public rethinking.

With the uncharacteristic exception of George McGovern's 1978 call for a U.N. force to overthrow Pol Pot in Cambodia, there was little comment by prominent Democrats on the hellishness of Communist Indochina. No one apologized for being wrong. The elect Paul Warnke and his elected admirers kept drawing conclusions from Vietnam, but not from anything that happened there after the spring of 1975.

There were exceptions. TOM DOWNEY, in a House statement April 11, 1978, blamed Communist atrocities on America:

No one can deny that our involvement in Southeast Asia is a blot on our history. This is a direct result of a series of bad judgements. Bad judgement from those who got us involved. Bad judgement from those who misconceived exactly what our mission was and how to complete it once we were involved. Finally, bad judgement from those who engineered the evacuation.

(No bad judgments were attributed to anyone besides Americans.)

We are all familiar . . . with the atrocities taking place in Cambodia. Reports from refugees are continually pouring out of that country. . . . The media is reluctant to cover these reports and, despite its stance, the administration virtually ignores the horrors of Cambodia.

There seems to be a concerted effort to keep the collective American conscience guilt free. . . . (T)he United States is at least indirectly responsible for the situation of the Indochinese people. [emphasis added][10]

DOWNEY's daily labors would keep America guilt-ridden. How the U.S. is guilty for what Pol Pot's Marxists did isn't explained. DOWNEY says the U.S. must take steps to end the carnage in Cambodia. These steps turn out to be urging Red China to pressure the Khymer Rouge and having President Carter urge them to abide by the U.N. Declaration on Human Rights. This kind of thing has become Democratic diplomacy at its toughest.

The skeptical Democrats who came to Congress in 1974 or later, and had post-1974 Southeast Asia to draw conclusions from, don't appear to be skeptics about the orthodoxy of a decade ago. They do not have the intellectual consistency of Joan Baez.

The Bonkers and the Dodds spent the late 1970's inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD condemnations of Soviet persecution of individual dissidents. In this they were diligent, but Southeast Asia was off limits. They either fit Pol Pot's terror and Vietnam's poverty into their anti-U.S. framework—things wouldn't be that bad if only the U.S. has stayed out—or else they ignored it.

To reexamine what happened after the U.S. left was to question the very foundation of their worldview and purpose in political life. That was too risky.

□ 2010

In fact, the radical Democrats have taken the same arguments and moved them from Southeast Asia to Central America. They warn that America is a bumbling, evil-prone force there. They assert with conviction that the people of the region will work things out nicely if America withdraws support from its allied military forces (in and around Nicaragua, the insurrectionaries; in El Salvador, the democratically elected government). They don't see Daniel Ortega or Fidel Castro as agents of totalitarianism or of Soviet expansion (indeed, they try not to see them at all). They believe America's allies in the region are the real threat to peace and freedom.

As politicians get older, as statesmen get more seasoned, they learn from their inevitable mistakes. Too many Democrats aren't learning anything from their foreign policy mistakes; they don't seem to think they made any.

Someone asked Winston Churchill in 1940 why the British were fighting so hard against the Nazis. He said, "If we stop, you'll find out." Today's Democrats have found out little but what they don't know isn't hurting them.

NICARAGUA

In a June 1979 piece entitled "Echoes of Cuba In Nicaragua," writer Constantine Menges said:

Last August when the Sandinistas began open war against the Somoza government, an American journalist reported that the guerrillas were busy removing all the Communist literature and insignia from their hideouts . . . (T)he defeat of the Somoza army by the Sandinistas will be followed by a Cuban-type process from which the pro-Castro guerrilla leaders will emerge as the only group with real power. At present, they alone have the guns, unity and experience.[11]

This was a minority view in press and government circles. The Carter administration figured anything would be preferable to continued embarrassment by Anastasio Somoza's regime. A few weeks after the Sandinistas took power. Stephen Kinzer in the New Republic expressed the standard hopes of most liberals and Democrats have for nascent communist regimes:

The Nicaraguan movement that overthrew the government of General Anastasio Somoza was as broad a coalition as can be imagined . . . In mid-June, still in exile outside of Nicaragua, the junta issued a document promising . . . a "regime of genuine democracy, justice, and social progress that fully guarantees the rights of all Nicaraguans to political participation . . ." [The junta will probably rule from 2-4 years, then] there are supposed to be elections for a constituent assembly. That assembly will write a new constitution that probably will be based on a presidential system similar to that used in the United States . . . In foreign affairs, the junta has pledged to follow "an independent and non-aligned" policy . . .[12]

It would be almost cruel to go on quoting from the Kinzer piece, which contained not one mention of the Soviets or of Fidel Castro. There are not that many quotable comments by elected Democrats from this period. Unlike the Southeast Asia and Angolan situations, a conservative President was not in power; it was not as easy to blame America for what was happening. Dozens of Democrats put anti-Somoza statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD thru 1978 and the first half of 1979, but they were largely satisfied with the diplomacy of Jimmy Carter, Andrew Young and Cyrus Vance, who came to see the Sandinistas as inevitable and better than what they would replace.

Kinzer in the New Republic probably spoke for the (quiet) expectations of many elected Democrats, and of President Carter. This time, they thought, a right-to-left and wrong-to-right transition had occurred and the American government was not on the losing side of progressive, historical forces.

Still, there were perfectionists. On November 1, 1979, then-Congressman CHRIS DODD put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an amazing piece by Max Holland. Holland said the Sandinistas didn't have enough sympathizers in the American press and called comparisons by the Time reporter of Nicaragua in 1979 to Cuba in 1959 ridiculous. He even chided the Washington Post for using "pejorative buzzwords" Like "Marxist government" to describe Sandinista goals. Representative DODD called Holland's analysis "enlightening and useful."[13]

Like DODD, the Carter-Mondale Administration was sympathetic to the Nicaraguan Communists their first 18 months in power. President Carter used up dwindling political capital to get an aid package thru Congress.

In the first ten weeks of the regime, the U.S. gave Nicaragua $26.5 million in emergency food and financial help. By January 1981 the figure grew to $118 million in direct bilateral aid plus a lot more thru multilateral institutions. Carter Administration statements about Nicaragua were reassuring and non-threatening.

In 1979 Representative OBEY set the standard for Radical analysis when he attacked a House minority willing to restrict Jimmy Carter's ability to get aid to Nicaragua: "The best friends the Communists and Marxists in Nicaragua have are the people in this country who are trying systematically to dismantle the President's authority to deal with that issue in a rational way." No Democrat said OBEY might be practicing a bit of McCarthyism.[14]

Reassurance also came from the House Democratic leadership. Under extreme pressure from President Carter and Majority Leader WRIGHT, the House voted 243-144 against an amendment deleting $25 million in economic aid for Nicaragua from H.R. 6942 (the FY 1981 foreign aid authorization bill). Democrats split 212-to-28 for this aid. The vote was June 5, 1980.[15]

Nicaraguan junta member Arturo Cruz Porras visited Washington the day before and made a deep impression on WRIGHT and Speaker O'NEILL. O'NEILL told the House, "Dr. Cruz was truly eloquent and convincing that the United States should not fear that Nicaragua wishes to align itself with the Soviet Union or Cuba." [16]

WRIGHT, leaving for Nicaragua in a few days, told the House June 5:

I believe that nation is capable of being saved. Let me, I appeal to you, have the tools by which I can help salvage their friendship . . .[17]

WRIGHT got his favorable vote and went to Nicaragua; Mr. OBEY had triumphed against Communism's "best friends" among the House GOP. Would the Radical world view be redeemed this time around?

THEY WERE WRONG

It didn't seem so. In 1982-83 it became fashionable for anti-Reagan Democrats to blame U.S. toughness for communizing Sandinista aspirations. They forget the Carter interlude, the U.S. aid package, and the fact that the Reagan Administration kept it going into 1982.[18] They forget what the new rulers of Nicaragua did before 1981.

It was in 1977, before they even came to power, that Sandinistas with PLO help defaced the Managua synagogue with anti-Jewish and anti-Israeli slogans.[19]

It was in summer 1979, before Reagan, that, according to one of their former intelligence agents, the Sandinistas killed 5,000 of their countrymen and forced Jews to leave the country.[20]

It was in 1979, before Reagan, that Nicaragua started conscription and began a 4-year increase in military manpower that would total 700%.

It was in late 1979, before Reagan, that Nicaragua was playing host to 200 Cuban military and security personnel.

It was in late 1979, following the traditional Marxist-Leninist pattern, that the Sandinistas made themselves more Communist than Sandinista by systematically driving the moderate, pro-West and accommodationist forces out of the coalition that had ousted Somoza.[21]

It was in summer 1980, before Reagan, that a government spokesmen said elections would have to wait until 1985, and that they'd be only to "ratify the revolution."

It's true the Reagan people came into power without high hopes for any Communist regime. What's more relevant here is that Nicaragua was giving them little hope even if they'd been of a mind to have some.

Some 15,000 Miskito Indians have been forcibly relocated, 39 of their villages destroyed by the government. Stories intended for LA PRENSA, the only open opposition paper during Somoza's last days, must go thru Sandinista censors seven hours before printing. Managua prisons are run with KGB methods, interrogators trained by Cubans with at least five years experience in the U.S.S.R. Captured counter-revolutionaries are taken to their nearest village and "vest-cut"—their arms and legs severed, causing them to bleed to death as an example to terrified townspeople. The Foreign Secretary's office in Honduras released documentation in August 1982 of over 30 attacks by Nicaraguan military personnel and agents against Honduran nationals and property in less than seven months.[22]

U.S. refugee officials talked to Nicaraguans who fled to Tilaran in Costa Rica. These refugees said this about the Nicaraguan Communist:

GARBIEL: In San Miguelito a woman, mother of two children, who attended Catholic masses, was taken from her house at midnight. They shaved her hair and cut her. All the soldiers raped her and then they cut her throat. Everyone who attends Mass is persecuted.

FIDELINA: They put my brother in his house and killed him in his own house. They left him buried in the patio of the house.

ROFINA: They killed my two sons and cut off their fingers and toes. Then they pulled their bodies behind a horse.

CECILIO: Anyone who makes an accusation is tortured and disappears together with his family. I am frightened because of this information I am giving.

EMILIA: When they arrived at my house, they made zanganadas (rude remarks). They robbed, everything, hit people, tortured. The children 12 to 15 years old were taken away, forced to join them. Those that refused had their hands destroyed one by one so that they would tell where their parents were. Then they cut their throats; they don't waste bullets on children.[23]

On July 28, 1983, four years and 29 days after his floor statement predicting "a truly democratic and representative government" after Somoza, Representative TOM HARKIN was blasting as unworthy allies the 10,000-strong "Contras," backed by the U.S. and raiding Nicaragua from outlying areas. TOM DOWNEY dubbed them "thugs, brigands, and thieves."

□ 2020

HARKIN, who by 1984 would seem the Nicaraguan Communists' firmest supporter in the House, preferred to recall the atrocities of Somoza—it's his rote response to criticism of today's Nicaragua. In his 1,000-word statement there wasn't one harsh word for the Sandinistas; Cuba and the Soviet Union weren't mentioned.

And Congressman HARKIN said this: "Now, those who say the Sandinistas are not Boy Scouts, I agree, they are not Boy Scouts. But compared to the Contras, whom we are supporting, they are Eagle Scouts." [24]

This comment came in the heat of an effort by House Democrats to cut off direct U.S. aid to insurgent Nicaraguans. An amendment to that effect by Majority Leader JIM WRIGHT was attached by voice vote (an immediate motion to recommit failing by 234–189) to the FY 1983 intelligence Authorization Act. Tho not sustained by the Senate, passing this amendment was a milestone for the Radical worldview. Samples from the Democratic side of the debate:

Representative BILL ALEXANDER:

I have heard [Republican] Members . . . defend Mr. Reagan's war in Central America. I could not help but be impressed by the perception that the ghost of Somoza walks very heavily in this Chamber. Today we are paying the price for [supporting him] and today we are trying to repeat a similar policy of militarism that would impress upon a people the will of the United States.[25]

Representative ROBERT GARCIA:

I just wonder who gives us the right to tell the people of Central America what to do and what not to do. It is not ours to win or lose. Central America belongs to the Central Americans. . . . (I)t is important that we do debate this issue, because today we may just be starting the next world war.[26]

Representative HOWARD WOLPE:

(W)e have supported time and time again rightwing dictatorships that have been violative of the rights of the people, that have been protective of a few land-owning families maintained in power with the support of rightwing military groups. In Chile, in Guatemala, in El Salvador, that has been the pattern of American response. . . .[27]

Representative RON DELLUMS:

The Reagan Administration's covert war against the government of Nicaragua is clearly illegal. It is yet another example of the cowboy mentality of the President and the CIA.[28]

Representative DON BONKER:

Twenty-five years ago, we Americans experienced considerable discomfort with Castro coming to power and the installation of a Communist government next to our borders. Did that in itself threaten our security? Castro has failed miserably in seeking to export his revolution in the intervening years.[29]

Representative NORM MINETA (D-Calif.):

How did we get so enmeshed in the Vietnam War? The answer is that the political leadership of both parties failed this country. Let us not fail the American people again. If Congress fails to stop the President, we will share responsibility for this new, open-ended, and unnecessary war. Let us avoid deceiving ourselves again.[30]

Representative JAMES OBERSTAR (D-Minn.) recounted human rights violations by El Salvador's government, ignoring the free elections that produced it and calling it one of "colonels." Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR (D-Ohio) hinted that her son, soon to turn 18, would not serve in the much-feared, oft-predicted and perpetually-unlikely U.S. invasion of Nicaragua. Representative BILL RATCHFORD (D-Conn.) of Connecticut blamed U.S. policies for everything wrong in the region.[31]

With the exception of chief deputy majority whip ALEXANDER, elected in 1968, all these Congressman came to Washington in 1974 or later. In foreign policy debates, they lead the Democratic advance against policies of the realistic center. The tone differed but the key themes were all there on July 28, 1983:

The U.S. is to blame for the sins of both right-wing and left-wing governments. This is another Vietnam we're getting into. Existing Communist governments in the region pose no effective threat to us. We are playing God with peaceful people who'd work things out harmoniously if we would only leave. Our allies in El Salvador are horrible people who don't deserve our support, and the Communists in Nicaragua are trying to do some good things.

"The Vietnamese Communists are not a group of idealistic bare-foot peasants fighting with rudimentary home-made weapons to free Vietnam from foreign domination, or lovers of peace reluctantly forced into using violence against corrupt compatriots, sustained by American dollars, who are oppressing the Vietnamese nation . . .

"They are an aggressive expansionist movement who already control North Vietnam and the greater portion of the three neighboring states of Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam. They are the Prussians of the Southeast Asia who, despite their strictures on the South Vietnamese for accepting American aid, themselves depend wholly on Russia, China and the rest of the Communist bloc for military and economic supplies.

"They subject the North Vietnamese people to one of the lowest living standards in the world so that their armies may engage in military conquest abroad . . ."

ISSUES INVOLVED IN FOREIGN AID AUTHORIZATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful before I begin to explain to those who might be watching at this point on C-SPAN that what happens from time to time in this House is that Members who are perhaps more interested in making a political point than speaking truth decide to follow an approach which brings into question not only Members' judgment but their patriotism.

I think the oldest of philosophies in the world, the oldest of political philosophies and the sickest, is that the end justifies the means. And I suppose that today's modern descendants of Joe McCarthy may be a little bit prettier and a little bit more skilled in the use of television; they are certainly no less comfortable in the use of innuendo than was the late Senator from my own State.

I think the most constructive thing that can be done of the night before we get into consideration in earnest of the foreign aid bill which will determine what the policy of this country ought to be toward Central America and Nicaragua, is to simply discuss what kind of issues we are going to be dealing with this week, trying to do so not in a partisan fashion with a bloodlust aimed at the next election, but simply aimed at what I hope will be a thoughtful analysis of how we defend the interests of this country in Central America.

There are two issues that we will deal with this week. One is what is the validity of their country's policy toward Central America and especially toward El Salvador and Nicaragua? And, second, what is the best and most constructive manner in which Congress can affect the conduct and the content of that policy?

The issue is not as some perpetual sophomores in this House would have you believe, not as some fervent ideologues would have you believe; the issue is not whether the United States should be defending our interests in Central America; the issue is how we best and most skillfully defend those interests.

Do we do it in ways that will be effective or do we do it in ways that will backfire and make it easier for Marxists to take over and expand their influence in the region?

I, for one, recognize that there can be only one foreign policy at a time and that is the policy which is enunciated by the administration, whichever administration happens to be in power, under the laws enacted by the Congress.

And that is the key phrase, "Under the laws enacted by the Congress," because we elect Presidents not to be kings; we elect Presidents to faithfully follow the laws that are passed by the U.S. Congress.

Some in the administration feel that the proper role of Congress is simply to speak out if you support the administration's policy and be silent if you do not. That will never happen in this country and I would suggest that it never has.

Members of Congress have a right and a duty to discuss their views openly; not only about domestic questions but about foreign policy questions as well.

George Washington stated it best when he stated as follows:

> If men are to be precluded from offering their sentiments on a matter which may involve the most alarming and serious consequences that can invite the consideration of mankind, reason is then of no use to us; then freedom of speech may be taken away and dark and silent we may be led like sheep to the slaughter.

We will be asked this week to authorize for further appropriations $1.04 billion for economic and military assistance to Central America, more than $420 million of this is for military and economic aid to El Salvador.

There will be essentially three options before us on the issue of aid to Central America. A number of us who have opposed the administration's policy on Central America have made it quite clear that money, itself, is not the issue. We of course do not want to waste money on anything. But if we thought that the funds were going to support a policy which had a reasonable chance of success, reasonable chance of working, we would be foolish not to support it.

There are a number of problems, however, in working your way toward support for the administration's present policy.

No. 1 is that you have to be a double genius to figure out what that administration policy really is.

The administration implies, for instance, that change in reform have continued in El Salvador since the coup of 1979. The recent election is evidently the high point in this continuous strain of progress. But those who have been following El Salvador for a number of years—and I have for the over 10 years that I have served on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee—seen a somewhat different situation.

Many of the original reformers in the El Salvadoran Government are gone. The reform officers are no longer in power. People like Viera, who headed the land reform program, are now dead and there is little chance that his killers, who also killed two U.S. labor advisers, will be brought to justice, despite Mr. Duarte's victory.

I want to say that I have tremendous respect for Mr. Duarte. I think he does have guts and courage and I think he does have the right instinct. But despite his victory, it is the army and the security forces who up until now are the ones who have held real power, regardless of who has occupied various political offices in El Salvador.

Military officers like Mr. Carranza, head of the Treasury police. His removal some years ago was regarded as a sign of progress. He is now back in a higher position than before and yet we are told that the continuum of progress continues.

The real question that has to be asked is this: Can we expect change and reform from the very people in El Salvador who made change and reform necessary in the first place and who are most influential in opposing the kind of constructive change that would give democratic forces in El Salvador a real opportunity to survive?

The administration says it is serious about putting an end to the death squads. And yet at the end of last year, Vice President Bush gave a proper and I thought very useful speech on that subject in El Salvador. And Ambassador Pickering carried the same message to El Salvadoran authorities.

Yet, the same time, President Reagan publicly expressed doubt that the death squads were related to the rightwing and speculated that they in fact were connected elsewhere, despite significant testimony given to the countrary to our committee and others.

You cannot speak with one voice in El Salvador and another voice here and expect to be believed if you are running the foreign policy of the United States. And yet that has been the case with this administration in the case of that issue.

On the subject of negotiations. The administration claims it supports the efforts of the Contadora countries who are seeking diplomatic solutions to the crises in Central America.

But veteran observers, including Mr. Sol Linowitz, whose patriotism, I trust, is without question, who has represented this district in a number of forums with great expertise and great distinction over the years in both the Middle East and Central America, Mr. Linowitz told our subcommittee 2 weeks ago that:

> Leaders in Central America believe we are only giving Contadora lip service. That we are saying the right things, but not undertaking the right actions.

The second problem we have in trying to weave our way toward support of administration policy is that we believe that the administration is relying on the most optimistic assumptions possible about our ability to influence the outcome of that problem through military means without a concurrent effective and equally strong and equally strongly pursued policy on the negotiation side. I have no idea whether the rebels in El Salvador would negotiate. I suspect that many, perhaps even most of them, would not. I suspect some of them would if they had their druthers.

But the important thing for our national interests is that we put them to the test. If negotiations lead nowhere, if negotiations prove impossible to pursue, I want history's record to show that it was not the United States who was responsible in any way for the failure of those negotiations. I want the responsibility to be squarely on the back of the rebels.

Unless we actively pursue a policy of negotiations, history will not show that fact.

People raise human rights issues. They raise the nuns' case. They raise land reform. I am concerned about all of those. But, very frankly, in the last analysis in terms of our ability to defend this nation's interests, none of those are as important as making clear to the world that the United States is not just mouthing, but is also actively seeking efforts to achieve a negotiation with whomever would negotiate on the subject.

We are strongly handicapped by 80 years of bad history and bad policy in that part of the world. And if our policy appears to be a continuation of that history where we continue to simply prop up governments, no matter how ineffectual they prove to be, or no matter how oppressive they prove to be, simply because they are friendly to us in the short term, we will lose in the long term. And that means that we have to avoid putting ourselves in the position where we can be pictured as opponents of negotiation.

We also have a problem when we are told that our commitment to a diplomatic solution is in doubt. As Mr. Linowitz again told the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, leaders in Latin America and Central America do not believe that the United States is committed to the Contadora countries. They will say publicly because they are polite people, Mr. Linowitz said, that we are pursuing that policy, but privately they will indicate their strong concerns otherwise.

No realistic person believes, at least I hope not, that a policy of negotiations alone has a chance of working. We need both a military strategy, an economic strategy, and concurrently a political and negotiations strategy to go along with it. But a policy of reliance, first and foremost, on military and economic aid and only second on negotiations will not work either.

So the question arises: What is the proper way for Members of Congress who disagree with the administration policy to deal with this issue?

I personally believe it is a bad idea for Congress to try to administer foreign policy from Capitol Hill. I simply do not think it can be done.

I know too many Members in this Chamber well enough to believe that they would make intelligent Secretaries of State. But the fact is that no President can run foreign policy on a controversial issue for any significant length of time without having the assent and the active support of a broad-based philosophical coalition among both the American people and the Congress itself.

What we need to do is try to find a way to achieve that coalition through definition of policy which will make it easier for that coalition to form so that whatever policy is followed by any administration it is sustainable not through just one administration, but through a number of administrations, be they Republican or Democrat.

I hate the idea of Congress trying to establish conditions under which the President will be allowed to grant aid. But if there are basic differences between the branches of Government, the Congress has no choice but to try and impose those conditions.

And the test of an administration is how skillfully it can create a coalition before bills like this are voted on so that the need to establish those conditions is eliminated or reduced.

□ 2040

If Congress does object or does have great misgivings about where the administration's policy will lead in terms of security and good fortune of this country, the question is how we express that in the most constructive way.

What this country needs is for the administration—any administration—to put together that broad-based coalition before the fact. Leaders of various factions of the Congress need to be brought together with the administration to work out a strategy which can be sustained long term. It is not possible and it is not smart for an administration to simply think they can get by by appointing mostly like-minded—not all, but mostly like-minded—people to a commission which you know would give you the results which you were looking for in the first place. You have to do more than simply find enough ideological soulmates on the opposite side of the aisle who will go along with your policy. What you have to do is try to work out a more broad-based policy than that. That is what is missing, and that is why Congress is stuck with the miserable and regrettable job of trying to decide under what conditions it will provide money that the President may send to Central America.

I intend to support the committee's version of aid to Central America and their conditions for Central America, but I am frankly very uncomfortable with the committee approach. It is appropriate, although regrettable, for the committee to set out conditions which Congress feels would define the elements of a successful policy and upon which future appropriations would be based. However, I must say that I have grave doubts about the long-term wisdom of going one step further and saying that after the administration has certified that those conditions exist that the Congress must pass another resolution verifying that the President has been honest.

I understand why that has come into being, I understand why the committee has produced those conditions. The Congress has no choice but to require conditions when they have lost trust in the willingness of the administration to carry out policy which is broadly understood and broadly supported.

So I understand why the committee has produced those conditions. But I nonetheless think that it may cause problems down the line. I frankly think it would be preferable to deal with the issue through the power of the purse. Rather than spelling out conditions, I would personally prefer that the Congress would simply make a collective judgment about whether or not the administration's policy contains the required elements for success. If it does not, in my judgment Congress ought to deny all funds for that policy until it changes so that it does have a reasonable opportunity for success. That is a drastic last step that should only be taken if you are convinced that the administration's policy is disastrous for this country and ill-serves our interest over the long term, and I believe we are at that point today.

But the committee has acted in a different way, and so we have these three choices before us this week.

The major alternative to the committee choice is the Broomfield amendment which, in my judgment, presents worse problems even than the committee proposal because what that proposal really says is that there will be no effective direction at all from this Congress and no effective limits at all on administration or Presidential policy in Central America.

We would be giving almost all of the money based on mere certification, even though it has been demonstrated that the certification process itself has been virtually ineffective.

So given what a number of us feel is the absolute certainty of the failure of American policy to effectively defend our national interests, we feel that we cannot in good conscience provide the administration's request, which is what the Broomfield amendment does.

So in my judgment the best thing for us to do at this point would be to pass the committee bill and then use the language in the committee bill as a lever to try to persuade the administration before it is too late to try to work out a truly bipartisan and truly cross philosophy support for its policy in that region of the world. If we do not reach that point, then it seems to me that Congress ought to deal with the issue on the appropriation vehicle which comes before us and refuse all further appropriations beyond the authorized committee amount until such a bipartisan agreement is worked out.

It seems to me that that would be far preferable to giving the administration carte blanche, given the miserable record of success in that part of the world.

I think it is useful to note that in January 1981, shortly before this administration took office, the El Salvadoran rebels began what they referred to as their final offensive. At that time we had provided virtually nothing by way of military aid to the El Salvadoran Government. Today, after we have provided more than a quarter of a billion dollars in military assistance to El Salvador, the rebels are stronger than before, and our chances of success in El Salvador are less than they were at the time that this administration took office.

It seems to me that we ought to follow the committee recommendations on administration policy for the moment, to give us more time to try to work out that bipartisan coalition which the administration says it wants.

I do think it is also useful to take just a moment to analyze the request that has been made by the President and some of his allies for a bipartisan support for the administration's existing policy.

I listened to the words of these new bipartisanites, and I wonder where they were when the previous administration was negotiating a Panama Canal Treaty which was supported by every previous administration before the Carter administration, going back some 20 years. I wonder what those new-born bipartisanites were thinking in the days when they were supporting amendments on the floor of this House which would have prevented, if passed, the administration from negotiating a Panama Canal Treaty.

I note, for instance, that on September 24, 1975, on a motion to recommit the conference report on the State-Justice-Commerce appropriation bill, that we had an amendment prohibiting funds for the State Department even negotiating on the Panama Canal. Some of the same forces who suggest today that the administration's and only the administration's position on negotiations ought to be supported are some of the same forces who were trying to preclude by legislative action any ability of the administration to negotiate the question of the Panama Canal. There were 68 percent of the Republicans who voted against even giving the administration the right to negotiate.

I question whether their new-found bipartisan desires are in fact bipartisan or whether they are underlaid by something else.

□ 2050

I notice a series of other amendments on Zimbabwe on June 28, 1979. There was an amendment to terminate the administration's policy of existing sanctions on Rhodesia and again we had a majority of Republicans supporting that amendment.

President Reagan just visited Communist China, now known politely as the People's Republic of China, I guess. This new-found interest in the People's Republc of China on the part of the President was certainly not in evidence on the Republican side of the aisle when, on March 13, 1979, the Taiwan Relations Act which made it possible for relations to open up with the Mainland Chinese and which, in turn, made it possible for President Reagan to visit that country in the first place, that bill when before us found 98 Republicans opposing it versus 51 on a motion to strike the enacting clause, which guts the bill, including a number of persons who often take special orders to talk at great length about the need for Congress to support the President's policy.

It seems to me that it is important for us to support the President's policy only if it is a conservative President's policy, or only if it is a Republican President's policy.

I do want to say something else. The Broomfield amendment will be before the House tomorrow, and undoubtedly that will receive a good deal of support from the Republican side of the aisle. It seems to me that if that amendment passes, then the Members on this side of the aisle have an obligation to do what they have so rarely done in the past, which is to provide a majority in support of the foreign assistance bill.

It seems to me that if the Broomfield amendment passes, which lays out the priorities as seem on that side of the aisle, then that side of the aisle has the obligation to provide a majority of votes for passage.

I can recall being on this floor time and time again, given my responsibilities as ranking Democrat on the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, trying to achieve passage of foreign assistance bills under both the Ford and the Carter administration. I remember how difficult it was to get some, in fact most, of the Members on the minority side of the aisle to support those initiatives at that time. Today we are told that the foreign aid bill takes only 1½ percent of the Federal budget, and even less of the gross national product, so we ought to support it without question. But when we had a different administration, under different circumstances, I did not see a flock of votes from that side of the aisle to support the administration's foreign aid bill.

If it is true that foreign assistance is just another technique to defend the national interest of the United States, then regardless of how unpopular it is domestically, it seems to me that people have an obligation to support that legislation be there a Republican President or a Democratic President.

So I urge everyone who is considering voting for the Broomfield amendment tomorrow to face the fact that if that passes, they have a leadpipe cinch obligation to then vote to support on final passage the entire bill, because it will mean that their priorities, not the priorities on this side of the aisle, are in fact the priorities spelled out in that bill, and that will require a higher sense of obligation than I have seen evidenced on that side of the aisle, by the majority at least on that side of the aisle, on most occasions on which we have had a foreign aid bill on the floor.

We have had marvelous bipartisan support from some Republicans in this House, but that cannot be said of a majority, and I think that Members ought to remember that before they cast their votes on the Broomfield amendment tomorrow.

CONCERN NOT FOR SELF, BUT FOR OTHERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, April 28, 1984, at the annual dinner of the Sovereign Military Order of Malta, Southern Association, held at the Hall of the Americas in Washington, DC, the Chief of Naval Operations, Adm. James D. Watkins, delivered the principal address. I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives the timely and cogent remarks of Admiral Watkins, which follow:

CONCERN NOT FOR SELF, BUT FOR OTHERS

Let me take you back to a moment in recent history which I shall not soon forget. I want to share with you my feelings about the tragedy which occurred only last fall in Beirut, Lebanon, on Sunday morning, October 23rd—feelings which will continue to guide my life as I attempt to serve both God and world community.

It was on this morning that a terrorist, in a bomb-laden truck, took the lives of two hundred and forty-one brave young Americans, and in so doing reawakened this Nation to the terrible crime of international terrorism; its cost in individual lives, its toll in national suffering.

Events of this tragic day were best summarized, not by official report or investigatory commission, but by one of our rabbi chaplains, Lieutenant Commander Resnicoff, who witnessed not only the darkness and pain of Beirut, but the love and spirit of those sailors and marines to whom he administered there.

Rabbi Resnicoff wrote about a friend of his, a Protestant chaplain, who was pulled from the ruin that was once a concrete-reinforced headquarters building.

And as this young chaplain was pulled from the carnage—after being trapped beneath tons of concrete for over four hours—his body wracked with pain and still unsure of his own condition, his first words were to ask how his clerk was. Like so many of the men saved that day, Rabbi Resnicoff wrote, this survivor asked first about others.

This is the same spirit of love we Knights of Malta have pledged to promote, live and share—the heritage of love and brotherhood we celebrate tonight. This is a legacy of service and devotion rendered by the Sovereign Military Order of Malta for the past nine centuries. This is the hope for our Nation and the free world.

So the Beirut tragedy is not only about fear, or frustration, or death, but can be a symbol of loving spirit and strength; a living testimony to our great potential as Americans with special God-given gifts which can make a difference in a grief-stricken world.

Still, we are constantly asked by others—how can we make a difference? What can we do to influence a world so beset by problems, plagued by fear and hunger and pain and a thousand other maladies of our times?

The answer is already within each of us, as laborers working to extend God's love to those in need. Now we must show the same moral courage and strength as those young men who asked not about themselves, but about the condition of others—we must perform the same work as our order's founder who cared for sick and needy pilgrims reaching the Holy Land. It is this same spirit of love, care and concern which we must apply to difficult problems we face today.

And this will not be easy, for our road is strewn with thorns and pitfalls and barricades—the social litter left by those who espouse evil and treachery.

In the face of such litter, we must display courage—we must act in accordance with our moral convictions. We must not be fashioned by events, but rather shape them for the future good of civilization. We can do this through helping freedom-loving and God-fearing people—who are like those pilgrims struggling toward the Holy Land—whenever and wherever we find them. This is our destiny.

In this regard, we can take comfort in, and are also challenged by, words of our Pontiff, who recently told our new envoy to Rome, "I cannot fail to express my conviction that the condition of today's world depends in great measure on the way the United States exercises her global mission of service to humanity."

In this task, in our exercise of our global mission to humanity, each of us is asked to contribute in our own special way. Yet each of our individual efforts will unite, through our common beliefs, to form a singleness of purpose and spirit. We all share a common goal of doing Christ's work by generously giving of ourselves, our prayers and our toils.

One of my recent contributions was forged out of Lebanon's tragedy. Six days after the bombing in Beirut, I participated in a ceremony at Dover Air Force Base in Delaware which inspired a course change in my life. At barely 7 a.m. on a Saturday morning, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, General Kelley and I stood with families of some of the Beirut fallen. On this sad day we witnessed arrival of the first fifteen bodies of those who had died in Beirut. As I stood before those flag draped coffins, I told those present:

"For anyone to die as the result of a cowardly act of faceless terrorism leaves each of us outraged and diminished. For so many to lose their lives both saddens us and makes us determined to ensure that those brave men did not die in vain. Now I would hope that Americans would strive, on an urgent basis, to build a new and enlightened national strategy, to deal with the insidious * * * practices of individuals, and their supporting governments, that would condone such acts of violence as their principal tool of political persuasion. For the sake of those who died, and those who continue to serve, we must do this."

Later, on a somber helicopter flight back to Washington, I talked with military chaplains who had shared this sad homecoming with me. We talked not only of past events, but of the future of our Nation. We talked about morality, and discussed ways to deal with terrorism within our Christian tradition. We talked about dealing with evil without succumbing to evil ways.

Since then, I have discussed the topic of terrorism with many people—military leaders and civilians, chaplains and lawyers, ethicists and philosophers. I knew I had to come to grips personally with this threat to humanity, so that I could better perform my duties both as a military leader sworn to defend this great nation, and as a man concerned with the proper, moral response to evil. I felt I also had this responsibility, as a fellow knight, and laborer in the name of Christian Ethics.

Again I was reminded of this responsibility, when on Easter Sunday Pope John Paul II, addressing one of the largest crowds ever to fill St. Peter's Square, said that the "universal desire for the dignity of man and for his rights" struggles against "brutal force of arrogance and violence, of oppression of consciences, of torture and terrorism."

But talking about my responsibilities, on this podium, detached from real-world considerations, is easy and doesn't get me any closer to correctly answering my challenge to serve Christ by serving others. I must take my ideals into a world where terrorism flourishes, a world where there are foreign powers who do not share our Nation's zeal to protect as sacred the worth, freedom and dignity of each human being.

So I have found it not to be an easy task; for terrorism—like so many other modern problems—does not lend itself to simplistic "either/or" decisions. It is a complex subject and decisions in the making are less between absolutes of entirely good or dead wrong, than they are between subtle nuances which make up the best possible course of action considering world realities.

In my search for answers to difficult questions, I selected as a starting point the majority's acceptance of the basic right to defend against unjust aggression. I believe as long as evil and danger persists, a people shouldn't be denied the right of lawful self-defense, once all peace efforts have failed. This is a lawful obligation of peace-loving nations.

But lawful rights constitute only one side of the question. For a legal action, even in our society, is not necessarily a moral action. And, what constitutes a proper legal defense against terrorism, is not necessarily a moral response to terrorism. Then these questions are multiplied a hundred fold when we take the terrorism question outside of our own national experience, and put it into an international setting.

The resultant solution is further complicated by the fact that it is difficult, almost impossible, to develop a universal definition of terrorism upon which all can agree. Whereas an American might see terrorism as random acts of violence, or threats of violence, usually committed against innocent victims to evoke fear, and usually undertaken to effect political objectives, a radical Shiite extremist might see terrorism as a justifiable extension of the "war of liberation."

At this point, as a United States military leader, I too, like you, put myself before God and pray for His help and guidance. I then do the best I can with choices at hand.

But I am not without answers; for I believe a Christian upbringing from which my moral conviction springs can help guide the way. In this, I am further guided by words of a great man of our time, newly installed Archbishop of New York John J. O'Conner, who writes that terrorism is one of the offenses against life which is fast becoming accepted as moral behavior.

In his classic work, In Defense of Life, the Archbishop said—"it is impossible for peace to flourish where the safety of life is compromised in this way. Where violence rages, true peace ends."

So it is this compromise of the safety of life, which I consider to be at the core of the most heinous acts of terrorism.

And what then should be our response? Can we attack bases where terrorists' bombs are made? Can we attack the base or country supplying materials and money to the terrorists? What is the moral response to such criminal actions?

From my studies, I believe that in particular circumstances, provided very specific conditions are met, it can be moral to preempt a probable terrorist attack. I say this with all the caveats that must be followed, such as:

We must have just cause to believe we are threatened.

We must base our decision upon competent authority.

If military action is deemed necessary, then it must be one of last resort—we must try all other alternatives to stop the terrorist's act before we revert to a preemptive move.

We must have reasonable hope of success before we take preemptive actions. Otherwise, risk of life involved would not be acceptable.

And we must foresee more good than evil in all our actions.

I believe these principles must be followed in forming a moral response to terrorism. I believe we must take counteraction when threatened and, by so doing, exercise our global mission of service to humanity. We cannot afford to speak in grand terms about morality and Western World leadership if we lack conviction to stand by those words with firm and responsible action. To quote Shakespeare, we cannot "speak in a monstrous little voice," which can only be viewed as a legal course of action, surely not a moral course of action for America.

Put another way, we should work to make terrorist acts so counter-productive and costly, or seem so costly, that potential perpetrators will think twice before conducting, or threatening to conduct, terrorist acts. In fact, a retaliatory act carried out for its deterrent effect may, under carefully controlled circumstances, be moral.

Does that mean we should always take a military response? No! Fight fire with fire if you will? Not at all. We could and should link with our allies and friends to deal with this emerging form of unconventional warfare using diplomatic moves, political pressures, trade barriers and isolation of nations who use, sponsor or condone terrorism. And this is just the beginning.

I say this with great determination—a determination that American force should never be used haphazardly; should never be used without first thinking through and exhausting every other possible action available. In my opinion, we should never adopt principles expounded by those we seek to thwart, that is, to return action to kind for kind. I know our course is sound, for we do not seek to destroy our enemies, but to protect rights and freedoms of peaceful people.

This is the basis for my moral and ethical thoughts about terrorism. I believe I can and must face these difficult questions both as a Knight of Malta, entrusted with the emblem of the cross to prevent spread of man's inhumanity to man; and as a responsible citizen of a nation which has the capability to defend others less fortunate than ourselves.

This is what my oath of office is all about. This is my responsibility to the moral, freedom-loving peoples of the world. This is my responsibility to those brave men who died in Beirut on October 23rd.

So this is the vocation I have chosen for myself to best answer the call we all receive, the call to serve God by serving others. In so doing, perhaps I, too, can be more like those brave young men in Beirut, whose first concern was not for self, but for others.

Again, it was Rabbi Resnicoff who best described this brotherhood of love and devotion when he wrote—"(While) working with the wounded—sometimes comforting, and simply letting them know help was on the way * * *—my kippa was lost. The last I remember it, I had used it to mop someone's brow. Father Pucciarelli, the Catholic chaplain, cut a circle of camouflage cloth out of his only cap, a piece of material which would become my temporary head-covering * * * somehow, we both wanted to shout * * * in a land where people were killing * * * at least partially based on differences in religions * * * that we—we Americans—still believed we could be proud of our particular religions, and yet work side by side when the time came to help others, to comfort, to ease pain."

This is the courage and selfless love which comes naturally to so many, like my brothers in arms, and you in this special fraternity of caring knights.

So, I would hope you can accept me, a military man, as one equally committed to our sovereign order's special mission of service to all mankind, providing comfort to the sick and solace to those suffering the world's pain.

Thank you and God bless.●

LEGISLATION AMENDING THE INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the Indian Self-Determination Act, originally enacted in 1973. This act was passed in order to help Indian tribes achieve self-determination by allowing the tribes to enter into contracts with the United States in order to assume the administration of governmental programs previously administered by the Federal Government for the benefit of Indians.

The successful administration of these programs, however, demands that an adequate amount of funds be spent on indirect or overhead costs. The Indian tribes, lacking adequate means of raising revenues through taxation, have been looking to the United States in order to find the necessary funds to cover these indirect costs.

The act currently states that the amount of funds provided under a contract shall be not less than what would have been provided for the direct operation of the program by the United States. It has become obvious however since the act was passed that a tribe's indirect costs for the operation of a program tend to be generally higher than what the Federal Government's costs would have been in administering the same program.

Because the current language is unclear and somewhat vague, some tribes are afraid that if not enough funds are provided in order to cover these indirect costs, they will have to use direct program moneys in order to do so. In the alternative, tribes in order to not sacrifice much needed program funds may have to cancel the contracts and allow the Federal Government to reassume the administration of these programs. This, of course, would be contrary to the very spirit and intent of the Indian Self-Determination Act.

The legislation I am introducing today will clarify the law and make sure that the tribes are given an adequate and reasonable amount of funds in order to cover the indirect costs associated with these self-determination contracts.●

THE NEED FOR IMMIGRATION REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. MAZZOLI) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, congressional action on the problem of undocumented aliens is clearly in the public interest and H.R. 1510, the Immigration Reform and Control Act, is an effort to carry out this Nation's constitutional responsibility to control its borders.

All public opinion polls clearly demonstrate that the American people are overwhelmingly in support of immigration reform and most polls indicate that employer sanctions are supported by a significant majority of the Hispanic community.

There has been a definite consensus for some time on the part of all policy makers who have closely studied this problem that employer sanctions, coupled with stronger border enforcement, are the most humane and effective way to stem the influx of undocumented aliens.

A recent editorial in the Washington Post suggests that employer sanctions "provide an effective, orderly and dignified alternative to large-scale raids and roundups." In fact, the Supreme Court, which for almost a decade has wrestled with the various civil liberty issues associated with interior apprehension efforts, has on several occasions called on Congress to enact employer sanctions.

While I clearly recognize that H.R. 1510 does not fully satisfy all people, there comes a time when the national interest must outweigh geographical concerns and the parochial, special interests of the various groups lobbying against this legislation.

I wish to insert into the Record following my remarks, a New York Times editorial discussing the Hispanic perspective on this legislation and the Washington Post editorial to which I referred earlier.

[The New York Times, Friday, Apr. 20, 1984]

HISPANIC VOTES VS. PUBLIC INTEREST

Citing their painfully won knowledge of discrimination, Hispanic groups have mobilized against the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration reform bill and the Democratic Presidential candidates have rushed thirstily to their side. What a sad mistake for all concerned.

For one thing, the effort will not help all Hispanics but might well cost a million or more of them something priceless: legal status.

Worse, the effort pits parochial special interest against the general interest—and against fairness. It's fairness, most of all, that's offered by the Simpson-Mazzoli bill, which has twice passed the Senate resoundingly and is almost all the way home in the House. And fairness is the best reason for Congress now to finish the job.

Simpson-Mazzoli represents a carefully balanced political bargain. It would legalize illegal aliens already in this country, freeing them from a cloud of exploitation and fear of discovery, fear so strong some won't call the police even after robbery or rape.

At the same time, Simpson-Mazzoli would finally make it illegal for an employer to hire illegal workers. Thus turning off the economic magnets would probably be the most effective thing America can do to regain control of its borders. Closing the back door would relieve mounting pressure to close the front door to legal immigration. The pressure is so strong that there are now urgent calls in Congress to halve the number of legal immigrants from around the world.

Legalization and employer sanctions can probably only be enacted as a package. Hispanic groups, however, embrace the sweet and scorn the sour. They call for even more generous legalization while denouncing employer sanctions, arguing that these would make employers reluctant to hire anyone who looks Hispanic, legal or not. It's a hard argument to follow. Employers already face labor shortages. Under Simpson-Mazzoli, they'd find it harder, if anything, to locate workers; they'd have every reason not to discriminate.

In place of employer sanctions, the Hispanic groups endorse a bill sponsored by Representative Edward Roybal of California. It calls for hiring many more Border Patrolmen. But that would have pallid enforcement effect compared with employer sanctions, and it's something the Administration proposes doing anyway. The Hispanic alternative is no alternative at all.

More understandable than the public arguments against Simpson-Mazzoli is the not-so-public belief among Hispanics who have made it to the Promised Land that they must not betray those yet to come—indeed, must protect the illegal path. It's a humane, even admirable feeling. Yet it collides with something else humane: equity.

There are millions, all over the world, who also want to enter the Promised Land. Hispanic groups speak passionately for "undocumented workers" yet to come from Mexico. But who speaks for the millions waiting patiently elsewhere? To tolerate a continued illegal tide sorely tries American patience with all foreign migrants.

By any standard of decency, it's wrong to favor migrants from one country at the expense of all others. It's wrong to favor illegal at the expense of legal entrants. Simpson-Mazzoli, this generation's immigration reform bill, would right those wrongs. It serves the general interest, and the Democratic Presidential candidates know it. If they're serious about showing their independence of special interests, here's a gleaming chance for them to do it.

[The Washington Post, Friday, Apr. 20, 1984]

FINDING UNDOCUMENTED WORKERS

This week the Supreme Court validated a method used by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to apprehend illegal aliens working in American factories. In a 7-2 decision in the case of INS v Delgado, the justices upheld the right of government agents to enter a factory with a warrant or the consent of the owner and question all workers who might be in the country illegally. Sixty percent of all illegal aliens apprehended in non-border locations are found in these work-place surveys.

While factory sweeps of this kind may be legal and effective, they are troubling to anyone concerned about the civil liberties of citizens and lawfully admitted aliens who are the repeated, if unintended target of these actions. Four such persons—two native-born Americans and two resident aliens—brought the suit that the court decided this week. All were of Hispanic background and were apparently questioned simply because of their appearance and ethnic origin and their presence in a factory with a history of hiring illegal aliens. These sweeps are, by their nature, directed at one identifiable element in the American population and require those questioned to produce answers and identification of a sort for which other Americans are highly unlikely ever to be asked.

There is a better way, of course, to enforce immigration controls, and it wouldn't involve mass interrogation of an entire factory work force. It is to apply sanctions against employers who hire undocumented workers. That way, the immigration status of every job applicant—not just the ones who appear to be Hispanic—would be checked before hiring, and the boss's records, instead of the employees' appearance, clothes and accent, could be checked. Justices both sides in Delgado said as much. In a footnote to his concurring opinion, Justice Powell points out that "Despite the vast expenditures by the INS and other agencies to prevent illegal immigration and apprehend aliens illegally in the United States, and despite laws making it a crime for them to be here, our law irrationally continues to permit United States employers to hire them." Justice Brennan, who dissented, deplores the fact that "the Immigration Act expressly exempts American businesses that employ undocumented aliens from all criminal sanctions . . . thereby adding to the already powerful incentives for aliens to cross our borders illegally in search of employment".

The solution is at hand. The Simpson-Mazzoli immigration reform bill, which has twice been passed by the Senate, will finally reach the House floor next month. The employer sanctions it would impose provide an effective, orderly and dignified alternative to large-scale raids and roundups. The bill should be passed.●

OPEN LETTER ON GRENADA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CROCKETT) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, on October 25, 1983, the President of the United States ordered American Armed Forces to invade the small but sovereign Caribbean nation of Grenada. This was done without legal or moral justification and without prior notification of the Congress. By once again resorting to the use of military force before other options were fully explored, the Reagan administration demonstrated the low regard that it holds for established procedures for resolving international disputes and threats to peace and security as well as an arrogant view of political processes in the Third World.

I commend my colleagues in this House and to people throughout the United States a letter which was written by the Hon. Dessima M. Williams, former Ambassador from Grenada to the Organization of American States and Deputy Governor to the World Bank during the administration of the late Prime Minister Maurice Bishop. We would do well to read this open letter, and to learn of the dreams and aspirations of the people of Grenada, then as now, for independence, self-determination, and economic prosperity.

Over the last 6 months, events in Central America, the Middle East, Asia, and southern Africa have captured our attention, reminding us of the awesome responsibilities that we, as a great power, have throughout the world.

Often, our great power is projected into areas where our national interests are not directly at stake and we maliciously interfere in the domestic affairs of sovereign nations who have different political ideologies and economic systems. To continue this policy of military confrontation and disregard for international law will only jeopardize this country's longrun economic, political, and security interests and erode America's standing in the world community.

I commend to my colleagues the open letter of Ambassador Williams:

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CONGRESS AND TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES

(By the Honorable Dessima Williams)

On February 7, 1984, Grenada marked ten years of independence from British rule. On July 4, 1984, the United States of America will mark its 208th year from the same colonial power. Your nation will be celebrating more than two centuries of the nation-building experience. For Grenada, whose short decade of "independence" was marred first by the five year dictatorship of Eric Gairy, and then by an invasion and foreign military occupation, the tenth anniversary of "independence" was hollow and ironic indeed.

Like Algeria, the United States of Mexico or Grenada, the United States of America was etched out of the colonial experience, which ended with a national revolutionary struggle, of which 1776 is a milestone date. The Grenada Revolution of 1979, though significantly different in class character than that of the United States, began our own struggle for sovereignty, development and freedom, aimed at national objectives similar to that of the United States Revolution: full sovereign control over all resources and decisions of the nation, and the full and peaceful development of all its people. For Grenada, this objective was even more pressing because in its 475 years of colonial rule by Spain, France and Britian respectively, social inequality, economic underdevelopment, dependency and backwardness was what predominated national life.

At the end of this era, in 1974, Grenada was left with one Government-built secondary school, one early twentieth-century relic of an airport with incredible limitations; an open, fragile and dependent economy based on cash crops for export and on tourism; a population that was fifty five percent functionally illiterate, and some thirty percent unemployed. Eric Williams' "Capitalism and Slavery" had visited Grenada.

But formal separation from Britain in 1974 did not bring a break with the path and policies of the past. From 1974 to 1979, the situation worsened: unemployment climbed from thirty to fifty percent; the food import bill, inflation and budget deficits all soared; the level and intensity of exploitation, social discontent and alienation rose rapidly; malnutrition and gastroenteritis became epidemic; Argentina-styled disappearances emerged. All of this was kept together by a repressive police machinery prepared and secured for Gairy by Chile's Pinochet. Sovereignty for Grenada was a farce.

It was in the second five years of our nationhood, led by Prime Minister Maurice Bishop that Grenada made the greatest social advances and began to secure the nation's sovereignty. The masses of the population rallied together for economic justice, social progress and political power, determining for the first time, that unique path to our development and independence. To the people of this small island state, sovereignty began to have meaning: the right to popular participation, the right to jobs and improved consumer conditions and the right to fashion a revolutionary foreign policy. Patriotism, pride, dignity and justice marked this fruitful struggle of building real independence and real democracy.

Unemployment fell to 13% in four years; and similar to that as envisioned in the Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment Bill, unemployment was to be completely wiped out by 1987. Grenada's economic development policies received a rare "clean bill of health" from the World Bank in 1982. She was warmly received and supported by all sober, forward-thinking and democratic Governments. The development strategy, employing a democratic thrust, brought equal pay for equal work for men and women alike; free education, health and dental care were attained as well as profit-sharing for Government-owned plantation workers. In symbolic and real terms, the construction of a new international airport, 75% completed at the time of the invasion, was an unprecedented achievement.

Grenada. They represented a most blatantly anti-democratic force, and demonstrated contempt for and ignorance about people and society. Yet the tragic and monumental error and folly of these men can never be the justification for foreign intervention in the internal affairs of a sovereign and independent nation, such as Grenada was in October 1983. As one Grenadian woman told me:

"We dealt with Gairy and his Mongoose Gang, and we would have dealt with this RMC gang. What America come for?"

She is a farm worker who has not studied the international political meaning of sovereignty, but she understands its very essence and is prepared to defend it.

There is a return to democracy now, we are told. In reality we know differently, the experience is different. Democracy cannot be purchased in the United States and imported into Grenada. "Made in U.S.A." democracy is, at a minimum, neo-colonialism for Grenada which has now been accepted as a participant-recipient in the Caribbean Basin Initiative. As one small businessman told me in December:

"Dey preparing Grenada for the full penetration of American big corporation. Wha' will happen to me? Ah really can't take wha' Seaga givin' Jamaica."

It is encouraging to observe that there is a sizeable cross-section of public opinion in this country which believes that the United States invasion of Grenada is wrong, illegal and harmful to the national interest. (One hundred and six nations voted against the U.S. invasion in the United Nations.) Just as you, 208 years later are still conducting your national search for your system of democracy, so we too, only ten years old, were building our system, creatively combining old and new to fashion a unique Grenadian democracy. Your search goes on, punctuated with difficulty, but making progress. Ours was pounced upon and aborted by your government at one of the most vulnerable moments in our nation's history.

The people of the United States should have no difficulty understanding the problems of nation-building. Over these two hundred years your own history has been one of a persistent struggle to attain the full promise of your democracy, and to maintain law and order amid domestic conflict. Rifts within your nation have been deep and fierce, threatening at times to wrench your domestic order apart. The murders of President Lincoln, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and President John F. Kennedy were indeed occasions of deep national stress and disorientation comparable to the period in Grenada immediately following the assassination of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and others in October 1983. As an independent and sovereign nation you would not be expected to want or to welcome any invasion by a foreign military power, especially one of incomparable superior might. So why should we in Grenada? Sovereignty is not negotiable; indeed it carries its own risks. The process of nation-building has its hard and difficult periods. But invasions are never part of the legitimate growing pains of any nation.

The invasion of Grenada by the United States armed forces was an assault on and has resulted in the loss of Grenada's sovereignty. Essentially, the United States has created a colony out of Grenada. I assert this based on international legal opinion and on long-standing and well-recognized international and diplomatic fact and practices. Further, the conduct of the United States Government in Grenada since the invasion has made this very clear. In real terms, the invasion of Grenada and the continuing occupation remains a fundamental negation of Grenada's sovereignty. In defense of your nation's proud history, you cannot allow this unjustified and illegal invasion of a nation of 110,000 people and 133 sq. miles to pass as a "victory for democracy". Any patriot, Grenadian or American, cannot accept military occupation in exchange for freedom.

The reasons given by President Reagan to justify the invasion are completely invalid and unacceptable. (To rescue U.S. citizens, restore 'law and order' and honor a Caribbean Treaty request.) The invasion plans were in the making and were rehearsed long before the three now infamous reasons were found. The group of "militarists and anarchists", as Maurice Bishop branded Coard and company hours before his callous and cowardly assassination, opened the door for the U.S. military adventure into Grenada.

As a citizen of Grenada who favours democracy and sovereignty, I am reflecting on this situation and invite you to do so with me. All Grenadians will have to analyze the assault on our sovereignty and find a way to end the occupation and restore the territorial and intrinsic integrity of our homeland. The United States Congress and people must realize that a wrong has been done to a people and their infant democracy. Responsibility must be taken for this act as well as for its future implications. Any and every new policy towards Grenada must reckon with one basic reality: that Grenada's right of self-determination, independence and sovereignty are indisputable.●

INTRODUCTION OF SOIL CONSERVATION INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT BILL

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, Congress has been demonstrating its concern over soil erosion in the country by undertaking action to prohibit Federal payments for those who plow up fragile soil. Action in this direction is important, however it will not solve the whole problem.

Today, I am introducing legislation which would complement these efforts to provide a more comprehensive approach, and I take this opportunity to share with you some information about this proposal.

The measure I am introducing is similar to S. 2180 introduced in the other body, with one major difference. S. 2180 increases the investment tax credit by 10 percent—for a total of 20 percent—for certain soil and water conservation practices and equipment expenditures. During hearings in the other body on S. 2180, several agricultural organizations testified in favor of the creation of investment tax credits for farmers who are willing to make soil and water conservation expenditures because such expenditures are regarded as expenses which do not increase output and which can not be passed along in the marketing chain. As well, the point was raised that the tax credit, as opposed to a tax deduction, is far more beneficial to individuals in the lower income brackets—those less able to employ conservation practices due to cost considerations.

However, these same organizations also testified that the unrestricted investment tax credit has proven attractive to investors seeking tax shelters and that it contributes to the "sodbusting" of fragile lands, not to mention its expense to the Treasury.

It was therefore recommended that the investment tax credit for soil and water conservation expenditures be targeted to those most in need, and those likely to employ it in the most beneficial manner. Thus, the legislation I am introducing today will allow an investment tax credit for soil and water conservation practices and equipment expenditures for those highly erodible acres—classes IVe-VIII—currently under cultivation, and the measure will be limited to only those practices which are conducive to good land management practices for such fragile acres.

This legislation specifically lists those practices and types of equipment which will assist in diverting fragile acres from row-cropping and into cover crops, for example.

Testimony before Congress has suggested that tax incentives can play a sound and legitimate role in a comprehensive program for the reduction of soil erosion if they are conditioned in ways that assure they will induce corrective action where it is most needed. Also suggested was the tying of this kind of legislation to the "sodbuster" proposal.

This is exactly what we have done in introducing this legislation today. The sodbuster legislation which we are now contemplating will address those new fragile acres brought under production, by removing the incentive of Government payments. My proposal will further encourage producers to retire from production and treat those fragile acres already under cultivation by allowing producers an additional 10 percent investment tax credit to help them foot the cost.

This concept, in its original form, enjoyed broad support, and refining the proposal, as I have done in this measure, should receive even broader support. Not only does it make sense from an environmental—and business—standpoint, but it makes much more sense from the standpoint of its impact upon the Federal Treasury.

Finally, my introduction of this legislation is in conjunction with H.R. 5200. The National Agricultural Soil Protection Act, which I introduced on March 20, 1984. Both measures are based on many months of research and discussion with various members of the agricultural community on how best to address our Nation's soil erosion problems, and both measures will complement the legislation referred to as the "sodbuster" proposal currently under consideration in the House. Your interest and support on this important matter are most welcome.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 5119

By Mr. BEREUTER:

(Amendment to title IX of H.R. 5421 (Amendment in the nature of a substitute).) —Insert the following new section and renumber accordingly

FACILITATING INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE THROUGH MEXICO

SEC. 914. Recognizing that increased levels of balanced international trade are an essential component in an economic development program for the region and that the United States has traditionally been the most important trading partner for each of the nations of Latin America, it is the sense of Congress that current procedures and laws of the Government of Mexico, and practices of its officials constitute a significant impediment to the transit of vehicles carrying the commodities of international trade through Mexican territory. As the Government of Mexico has played a valuable role in assisting and encouraging the economic and political development of the region, and in offering advice to the United States as to constructive policies this nation might pursue with respect to peace and prosperity in the Secretary of State, acting independently or with representatives of other Latin America nations, shall initiate negotiations with the Government of Mexico aimed at eliminating or reducing those impediments to international trade. The agenda for such negotiations should include discussions to encourage the Government of Mexico to accede to existing international custom conventions on international in-transit shipments. Such actions are to be taken in concert with the institution by the United States and the nations of the region where the transiting shipments originate, of appropriate and cooperative steps to make sealed-truck, no-inspection transit administratively acceptable to the Government of Mexico and other transited countries. Similar unilateral or multilateral negotiations by the Secretary of State with nations respecting the same international customs conventions is also encouraged. The Secretary of State shall report the status of these negotiations to Congress by January 1, 1985.

CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS

SEC. 914. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) evidence accumulated by the United States, France, Canada, and other nations, and by the United Nations and other international organizations, indicates that chemical and biological weapons have been employed in the current war between Iran and Iraq and in past and present conflicts in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan;

(2) such evidence also indicates that the Soviet Union employs chemical and biological weapons in Afghanistan and supplies such weapons to its allies in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia;

(3) such activities by the Soviet Union and other nations contravene arms control agreements which have been ratified by such nations; and

(4) exposure to chemical and biological weapons often causes slow and agonizing death, and few antidotes are available to treat exposure to such weapons.

(b) Therefore, it is the sense of Congress that the use and the supplying of chemical and biological weapons are inhumane and pose grave theats to humanity and that the United States should (1) increase its investigations of suspected instances of chemical and biological warfare, (2) encourage the development of antidotes for chemical and biological weapons, especially for the mycotoxin commonly referred to as "yellow rain", (3) urge other nations to investigate suspected instances of chemical and biological warfare, (4) help United Nations investigators gain access to areas where chemical and biological warfare is or has been suspected, and (5) negotiate with the Soviet Union and other nations to strengthen existing agreements and treaties regarding chemical and biological warfare by establishing effective means to ensure compliance with such agreements and treaties.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF HARRY S. TRUMAN

HON. PETE WILSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is an honor for me to join with the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of California in recognizing the 100th anniversary of Harry S. Truman, former President of the United States and a Freemason who cherished his Masonic affiliation.

The Masons of California are justifiably proud of the Masonic heritage left by President Truman. His life stands in tribute to the Masonic principles of fellowship and brotherly love which guided his Presidency and his work.

Today, as all Americans celebrate the 100th birthday of our former President, let it not be forgotten that there are none more proud to recognize President Truman's Masonic background and his contributions to the United States and humanity than the membership of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of California.●

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, we have some unfinished business in the arena of auto safety. When Congress enacted the National Traffic Motor Vehicle Safety Act 18 years ago there was a critical omission from that legislation—there was no effective penalty to deter automobile manufacturers from withholding information about dangerous defects in their products.

At that time Members of both the House and Senate introduced amendments establishing criminal sanctions against officers, directors, and agents of auto manufacturers who knowingly and willfully withheld information about hazards in the vehicles.

Spokesmen from the auto industry assured Congress that these criminal penalties were unnecessary to gain their compliance with the law, and as the issue was debated, it became a question of their honor. Congress was persuaded that the Motor Vehicle Safety Act should contain only civil penalties, levied only against the corporation, at $1,000 per violation or $400,000 for any related series of violations—a limit raised to $800,000 in 1974.

This is scarcely a slap on the wrist in an industry where, in good years, a firm may profit in the billions. General Motors, for instance, had profits of $3.7 billion in 1983, the same year that the U.S. Justice Department filed a $4 million lawsuit, charging GM with giving false information and obstructing the Government's investigation of the 1980 X-car braking system.

Since the Government agency charged with enforcing the Motor Vehicle Safety Act is largely dependent on information provided by automakers, giving false information is an infraction of major significance. Yet the penalty in this instance would be hardly more than 1/1,000th of a year's profits, the net proceeds from about 2 hours' production for this industrial giant.

The X-car case is in trial right now, and it will likely be several years before we get a final determination from the courts. But we should not wait for a judicial decision to enact legislation to prevent such a situation from arising in the future.

Today I am introducing a bill to provide what the Congress was dissuaded from in 1966—criminal sanctions for deliberately withholding information on potentially dangerous defects in motor vehicles. The bill would not levy a special penalty on the auto industry. The legislation I am proposing would only put automakers on a parity with the other producers and distributors of potentially dangerous consumer products.

The penalties provided by this bill are a $50,000 fine and/or 1 year's imprisonment—the same penalties outlined for knowing and willful violation of the Consumer Product Safety Act and essentially the same penalties provided in the Flammable Fabrics Act, the Refrigerator Safety Act, the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, and the Federal Hazardous Substances Act, which are all defined as criminal misdemeanors.

In environmental protection, another regulatory area that affects businesses, there are no fewer than 23 Federal statutes with criminal provisions for knowing violations. Such laws as the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Deepwater Port Act, the Rivers and Harbors Act, all address corporate malfeasance, at least in part, by holding the agents accountable for noncompliance.

Given the devastating impact of defective automobiles on human life and well-being, it is time that we bring the Auto Safety Code in line with the rest of our regulatory laws.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be in Washington, DC, on May 2 and 3 due to official business. During this time I was unable to vote on rollcalls Nos. 125 through 130. Had I been present, I would have voted as follows:

Rollcall No. 125, approval of the Journal, "yea."

Rollcall No. 126, motion to instruct House managers of House Joint Resolution 492, "yea."

Rollcall No. 127, on agreeing to conference report on S. 64, Irish Wilderness Act of 1984, "no."

Rollcall No. 128, approval of the Journal, "yea."

Rollcall No. 129, amendment to auction off Hoover Dam electricity at market rates, "yea."

Rollcall No. 130, final passage of H.R. 4275, "no."●

CONGREGATION SHA'AR ZAHAV OF SAN FRANCISCO

HON. SALA BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 20, 1984, Congregation Sha'ar Zahav of San Francisco will have a very special celebration.

The celebration will mark the conclusion of a weekend of dedication of the congregation's first permanent synagogue. It represents a great triumph for the young congregation as well as an appropriate moment to reflect on its many services and accomplishments.

Congregation Sha'ar Zahav was founded in 1977 and has grown to more than 200 members. It was established for a very special reason—to respond to the needs of San Francisco's large lesbian and gay Jewish population.

Congregation Sha'ar Zahav became a member of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations in 1982. Its High Holy Day services are attended by over 1,000 people, and it is actively involved not only in the gay community but also with senior citizens, the Jewish Welfare Federation, Israel Independence Day, and on behalf of oppressed Ethiopian and Soviet Jewry.

Congregation Sha'ar Zahav reflects the pride and sense of accomplishment of its members, and it continues and reaffirms a long tradition of social concern.

We in San Francisco are proud of Sha'ar Zahav.

Last year I had the privilege of joining hundreds of others at the congregation's high holy day services. I was very deeply moved at the beauty and sincerity of the service, which members of the congregation had developed as a blend of traditional Jewish liturgy with new material designed to reflect the realities of their lives.

My experience at this service crystallized my belief that Congregation Sh'ar Zahav represents more than a welcome and needed center for gay and lesbian Jews; it represents the finest traditions of community pride in diversity, of caring and social concern, and of building on what is best in the old to create something new—of the city which I am proud to represent in this Congress.

On behalf of all San Franciscans, I offer my heartfelt congratulations and my best wishes to Congregation Sha'ar Zahav on the occasion of dedicating a home of its own.●

TRIO TAKES ICY POTOMAC PLUNGE

HON. LARRY WINN, JR.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard it said that young people today do not have enough role models—that there just are not any heroes after which they can pattern their lives. While this may be true, perhaps the problem is not that there are not any good people in this world, but rather, that we do not often hear about them. Most of the time the heroic deeds of good people go unnoticed as they selflessly live their lives with high regard for the needs of others.

The Alexandria Gazette took the opportunity during April to bring to light the heroic deeds of four county firefighters who selflessly, and skillfully, braved the chilly waters of the Potomac River to rescue three drowning victims.

Today I submit that article to your attention—so that both young and old may be inspired by the courageous acts of these four men on behalf of others.

The article follows:

TRIO TAKES ICY POTOMAC PLUNGE

(By Mark Bergin)

Three people were saved from drowning in the Potomac River by county firefighters who dived into the chilling water and pushed a rescue boat out to save them.

The firemen's first rescue attempt failed when they were unable to propel their canoe with a shovel, the only paddle at hand.

The three victims, a Smithsonian Institution archaeologist and his two Mexican house guests, were canoeing Tuesday morning near Herbert Springs, south of Alexandria, when their canoe capsized in wind and rough water about 150 feet from shore.

They were not wearing life vests and were unable to grab flotation cushions, firemen said, but clung for life to the half-submerged canoe until their cries for help were heard by a carpenter working in a nearby house.

When firemen arrived about 11:20 a.m., 30 minutes after the victims entered the water, the three "were nearly gone, they were cold and hanging on," said Capt. R. C. Bragg, Jr.

Firemen said the swamped canoe was barely able to keep all three above water and that two of the men were unable to swim.

The men were identified as archaeologist Robert Laughlin, 49, of Mount Vernon and Laughlin's house guests, Mariano Lopez Mendez, 33, and Sebastian Ramirez Intzin, 20, both Mexican nationals unable to speak English.

All three were treated for hypothermia and exposure at Mount Vernon Hospital and released. Firemen estimated the water temperature at less than 40 degrees.

When rescuers arrived and saw how far the victims were from shore, four Mount Vernon firemen commandeered a canoe from a nearby home. With only a fire shovel for a paddle, they were unable to make headway against a stiff northerly wind.

Two firemen jumped into the river and swam next to the canoe to push it out to the victims.

"It was a do-or-die type situation. We had to just get out there," said Capt. Hugh Wood. He said they "didn't think about" the danger of succumbing to the cold water.

Wood and Firefighter David Ludeker pushed the canoe approximately 600 feet along the shore line and out to the foundering canoe. Firefighter Walter Brown was aboard the canoe.

When they reached the capsized canoe, the firemen pulled the victims to the side of their canoe and held them alongside, unable to pull them aboard for fear of capsizing their own boat. One of the victims, apparently gripped with fear and cold, almost had to be dragged from the capsized canoe, Brown said.

"Fear, cold and a communications gap," said Brown of the problems in rescuing this victim.

Firefighter Buddy Cronk stood at the shoreline holding a 150-foot safety line with one end tied to the rescue canoe. Cronk said by the time the canoe reached the stricken three, the rope was completely played out. Once all three victims were safely against the canoe, Cronk and a nearby resident pulled them to shore.

Once ashore, they were covered with blankets and firemen's coats until rescue personnel decided they were warm enough to be moved.

Saving three stricken men from drowning in the chilling Potomac River was a feat that four Mount Vernon firemen took in stride.

"Do you think what we did was all that special? No, seriously, it's just what we do. We just did it," said Firefighter Buddy Cronk, 34, a 12-year veteran of the Fairfax County Fire Department.

Cronk held a lifeline for Capt. Hugh Woods and Firefighter David Ludeker, 29, who kicked their legs to push a rescue canoe into the river Tuesday morning, risking death in the chilling river.

Woods, a 14-year member of the department, said the decision to dive in was a simple one, despite the danger.

"It was pretty much a quick decision and it had to be made," Woods said. Warm and dry back at Company 9, the Mount Vernon fire station, Woods looked around at his men and said, "There was no hesitancy on these guys' parts. They knew they were being 'jeopardized,' they knew the water was cold."

Woods seemed to emphasize the word "jeopardized" to down play the stunning impact the cold water had on him and the others—it was the kind of paralyzing cold that could easily have made the men weaken, cramp or faint in the water and drown.

Ludeker said Woods has a swimming pool and had just measured its water temperature at 42 degrees. The Potomac, Woods said, was colder.

Ludeker a nine-year veteran who has served seven years at Mount Vernon, and Firefighter Walter Brown, 28, in his fourth year with the department, had already attempted to save the men by paddling their canoe and had themselves capsized once near shore. Their only paddle was a fire shovel, and they could make no headway against a strong wind and current.

"When the shovel didn't work, we had to try it (swimming). It was a last-ditch effort," said Ludeker. Brown rode in the canoe to help hold the victims against the side when the canoe was pulled ashore.

Later Tuesday, the four extinguished several bush fires believed started by children.

They took that is stride, too.

"Pretty exciting stuff, huh?" Brown said as he sprayed water from a metal tank strapped to his back on spreading flames in a field full of smoke.

Ludeker batted the flames down using the same shovel he had paddled the canoe with that morning.●

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

HON. ALAN WHEAT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Volunteer Week, set aside to honor the thousands of men and women who serve the needs of others throughout the world. In conjunction with that, the Peace Corps is honoring James B. Quinn at a luncheon today. Mr. Quinn, a resident of Kansas City, MO, along with five other volunteers is being named as Outstanding Peace Corps Volunteer of 1984.

The spirit of Peace Corps volunteers—unique and dedicated Americans working in countries around the globe in many distinctive kinds of programs—is exemplified by Mr. Quinn and the other recipients of the award. These are outstanding disabled volunteers and volunteers working in special education projects.

Mr. Quinn, who is deaf, has done a magnificent job in the Philippines where he has served these past 3½ years. He has been a deaf education instructor at a school for the deaf. He has also begun a program of community outreach teaching deaf awareness and signing to members of his community. Quinn has also worked with the deaf community by creating a drama program for his students.

He has been a role model for his deaf Filipino students by fully participating in the adult, hearing world. Through his work he hopes to provide his students with the incentive to develop their skills and function within the hearing world.

As one of 5,000 volunteers in the Peace Corps, Mr. Quinn's accomplishments stand out as a tribute to his abilities and his drive. I am honored to be able to share in his achievements today.●

HOME COMPUTERS: "TIME HAS COME"

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, last year I introduced H.R. 2531, a bill which would amend the Internal Revenue Service Tax Code to provide a credit against income tax for people who purchase a home computer for educational, professional, or other essentially nonrecreational use.

Even today, computers are still too expensive for many people. Because they cannot afford a computer, they are being denied the advantages that their use could bring. By providing a $100 tax credit each year for each family member when that family buys a computer, we can help families who want to learn and work at home.

The opportunities of the information age we are entering should not be just for the well-to-do. H.R. 2531 would allow the average family to learn the skills they will need as America moves into the 21st century. The following editorial from the Clayton News Daily sums up the need for H.R. 2531 to be made into law.

[From the Clayton News Daily, Mar. 30, 1984]

TIME HAS COME

Several years ago, Sixth District Congressman Newt Gingrich (R-Jonesboro) introduced legislation which would have given a credit on a person's income taxes for the purchase of home computer systems.

At the time he introduced the legislation, many people made negative comments about his priorities of talking about giving tax credits to people on their income tax forms for the purchase of such "luxury" items when the real issue that needed addressing was creating jobs for the many persons who were out of work.

And, we concurred with those critics of Congressman Gingrich. After all, home computers were not that common in Sixth District homes at the time and we were far more concerned with high unemployment than we were with giving tax credits to the relatively affluent.

However, over the past few years, home computers have become more and more common in homes throughout the Sixth District and throughout this nation.

But, the fact that home computers have become popular is not a good enough reason to consider giving tax credits to people who buy them.

The fact of the matter is that home computers have proven their value to the average American family in many ways—helping children with their homework, assisting Mom and Dad make ends meet, and providing a recreational outlet for the entire family.

Most people do not purchase home computers because they are just another expensive toy: they do so because these machines can help make life easier for all of us.

We think Congressman Gingrich's idea which many laughed at when he first introduced it, is making more and more sense.

Giving tax credits for the purchase of home computers is an idea whose time has come, we now believe.●

RECENT RESEARCH ON PLANT CLOSINGS

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention some recent research on an issue of growing concern to millions of Americans—plant closings and economic dislocation. Because the Federal Government does not keep track of how many factories and other workplaces are permanently shut down each year, nor of what the consequences are for the millions of Americans who lose their jobs, we are indebted to the small group of scholars and researchers who have been investigating these problems.

In December 1983, the Brookings Institution reported research by Candee S. Harris which reveals truly alarming statistics about the wave of plant closings that has smashed through our communities in recent years. According to Ms. Harris' report, over 900,000 manufacturing jobs were lost each year from 1978 to 1982 due to plant closings in firms with 100 or more employees. Over 900,000 jobs a year just in the largest firms and just in manufacturing.

The total number of jobs lost—permanently—because of establishment closings in all industries and in firms of all sizes from 1980 to 1982 was over 7 million.

From 1980 to 1982, 1 of every 14 people in the U.S. work force lost his or her job in an establishment closing.

Ms. Harris' research indicates that no region has been spared the disruptions and trauma caused by plant closings. The rates of manufacturing job loss in every region of the country exceeded 10 percent during the years 1980 to 1982. Moreover, the Nation as a whole replaced only 9 manufacturing jobs for each 10 lost in plant closings at large manufacturing firms between 1976 and 1982.

Among many other important findings, Ms. Harris' work for Brookings reveals that subsidiary or branch manufacturing plants are far more likely to close than independent plants. "Within the same firm size classes, closing rates range from two to five times higher for the subordinate establishments." This finding confirms the conclusion reached by Representative BERKLEY BEDELL's Small Business Subcommittee on Antitrust in its 1980 report on conglomerates and their effects on small business and local communities: Absentee corporate ownership of resources important to a community, and especially conglomerate ownership of mature local subsidiaries, can have serious adverse impacts on the community and tends to inhibit the long-term growth of the local economy.

A second research effort I want to share with my colleagues was undertaken by Prof. Charles Craypo of Cornell University. Professor Craypo studied 27 facility closings between 1954 and 1983 in the Indiana factory towns of South Bend and Mishawaka. During the period he studied, the South Bend area lost 12 percent of its manufacturing employment. The closings studied resulted in the loss of nearly 40,000 jobs.

Absentee owners closed 23 of the 27 plants; 19 of the plants were relocated elsewhere, and some of the plants were closed for anticompetitive reasons. Locally owned, healthy businesses were acquired by multiplant, absentee owners which shut them down in order to concentrate available market share among fewer producers.

Most Americans believe that plant closings result from business failures and are unavoidable. Professor Craypo's work shows that this is not true. Business failures or bankruptcy were not a factor in 24 of the 27 cases he studied. According to Professor Craypo, the key determinant in the incidence of closings and phasedowns is whether absentee owners continue to invest in local plants.

I would like to quote from Professor Craypo's "Summary and Conclusion:"

These shutdown decisions were for reasons internal to the needs of the companies, but they produced substantial social costs to labor, small businesses, and the community. Those who suffered the consequences, however, had little say in the matter and virtually no influence over either the process or its outcome. Most of the closings had tactical significance relevant to product market shares or labor market costs, or both. Without exception, the reasons were only vaguely communicated to local area residents and organizations.

Divergent objectives and interests leave little room for cooperation in this kind of dislocation. Productive capital was taken from the community in these closings, but the workers stayed behind. They and their factory towns had to make the adjustments, not the people and the organizations that made the decisions. It became a matter of relative control over the economic environment, not a situation in which workers, owners, and community are hapless objects or inexorable market forces and therefore in common predicament and inclined to cooperate. Unions and communities have no control over the plant closing environment when they are of no further use in the production process.

Absentee owners have a great deal more discretion. They alone make the investment choices. Diversified concerns, they do business in a variety of industries, or have the capacity to do so if they choose. Mobility allows them to take advantage of a global situation in which some industries are declining while others are expanding, and some geographic regions are at a stage of industrial development where labor earnings and social wage costs are high while others are in a low-cost stage. The result is that corporations can pick and choose strategically among industries and locations, while workers and communities cannot.

Another research project Professor Craypo reported on recently helps show the urgency of governmental regulation of the process by which corporations shut down major facilities. He studied the effects of the closing of a Drewry's brewery in South Bend on the workers who lost their jobs. His most significant findings: The displaced workers' mortality rate following the closing was 16 times higher than normal for people of their age. Many earlier studies have shown that plant closings have significant adverse health effects on the displaced workers, but Professor Craypo's findings are among the most dramatic.

Researchers in California have shown that the development of an increasingly high-tech economy will not mean the end of plant closings and their adverse consequences. Philip Shapira and Jean Ross at the University of California, Berkeley, have studied the growing high-tech industry in California. They report that between January 1980 and January 1984, at least 47,000 workers in high-technology industries lost their jobs in 147 closures and layoffs. Shapira and Ross emphasize that these are minimum figures, because many closures go unreported. Their report concludes with a warning to communities that intend to tie their future to particular high-technology firms:

In overall terms, it is likely that high technology sectors will grow in California in the future, although some individual sectors may experience absolute decline. But, as important, the high technology sector will be subject to much restructuring and flux, as this study suggests. Research has already demonstrated that much of the high technology sector is already very polarized, with many low-paid, low skill jobs and a dearth of middle-range employment. But all jobs in the industry are increasingly vulnerable to restructuring. Communities looking to increase their high technology employment would be advised to look with a critical eye at the long term prospects for high tech employment to make sure that jobs that are here today are not gone tomorrow.

Shapira and Ross' concerns are echoed by two Stanford University researchers, Russel Rumberger and Henry Levin, who believe that the Federal Government's predictions about high-technology job growth may be overstated. They argue that the increased use of robots and the movement overseas of production jobs—as in the case of Atari's relocation of 1,825 jobs from California to Southeast Asia—threaten job expansion. According to Rumberger and Levin, "Some evidence suggests that more jobs will be destroyed than created by technology change. A recent study of robotics suggests that robots will eliminate 100,000 to 200,000 jobs by 1990, while creating only 32,000 to 64,000 jobs."

Finally, I would like to bring a research project from the other side of the country to the Members' attention. The research was conducted in Maine with the financial support of Bowdoin College by Nancy Folbre, Julia Leighton, and Melissa Roderick. They studied the closing of 107 Maine plants that employed 75 or more workers. The plant closings occurred between January 1971 and June 1981, and resulted in a total direct and indirect loss of nearly 50,000 jobs.

Among the most interesting research findings are the following:

First, bankruptcy was a minor factor in the closings. Only 13 percent were caused by bankruptcy.

Second, nonunion work forces were affected disproportionately. Although 33 percent of Maine's manufacturing labor force was unionized, only 16 percent of the plants closed were unionized.

Third, closings were concentrated in low-wage industries with a disproportionately high percentage of female workers.

Fourth, when companies give advance notice of the plant closing, the resulting unemployment is significantly less severe. If as little as 1 month of advance notice were given the overall unemployment resulting from the closure—both direct and indirect—would decline from 5 worker-months of unemployment to 4, a 20-percent decline.

The last finding seems to me to be the most significant. For many years, I have argued that large firms should be required to give their employees advance notice of plant closings and permanent layoffs. As this new research from Maine confirms, such a requirement would ease the displaced workers' transition from one job to another, reduce the resulting level of unemployment, and reduce the social costs of plant closings, which private corporations now freely transfer onto the backs of the taxpaying public.

I am encouraged by the excellent research that has been undertaken in universities, colleges, and research institutions across the land. With more Federal support, these research efforts could do even more to point the way to a solution to some of the persistent problems of economic dislocation and job loss.

If any of my colleagues would like copies of any of the reports I have described, I would be happy to provide them.●

TRIBUTE TO WALTER FLOWERS

HON. LARRY WINN, JR.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 2, 1984

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a good friend and former colleague, Walter Flowers, whose untimely death at the age of 51 comes as shocking and sorrowful news to those of us who knew him well.

Walter was one of the most widely respected and well liked Members of this body. He was an extremely intelligent person—a Phi Beta Kappa graduate and an astute scholar of the law. I had the great privilege of serving with Walter on the Science and Technology Committee, where he chaired the Fossil, Nuclear Energy Research, Development and Demonstration Subcommittee. He was always knowledgeable, well-prepared, and fair in his approach to the often controversial matters over which the committee presided.

Walter also served on the Judiciary Committee during that Committee's investigation of the Watergate affair. His leadership and courage during that difficult period should still serve as a model for us all.

More important to me, Walter was a good and close friend, as he was to many Members during his time of public service. But even after his return to private life he maintained those friendships. He was always willing to sit down and talk about anything, from legislation, about which he had great knowledge, to sports, about which he had great interest.

Walt was a wonderful person and a true friend. I join with my colleagues in offering my condolences to his dear wife Beverly, and to his family. He will be sorely missed by them and by his friends, both in Congress and out.●

ELECTRIC UTILITY TRANSMISSION REFORM ACT OF 1984

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a bill designed to increase efficiency in the distribution of surplus electric generating capacity and to promote competition in the bulk power supply market. My bill, the Electric Utility Transmission Reform Act of 1984, would amend the Federal Power Act to remove impediments in the existing law and specifically authorize the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to order wheeling—that is, an arrangement whereby one utility is paid to transmit electric energy between two other utilities—on fair and nondiscriminatory terms to all sectors of the industry. This bill would provide lower electric rates for consumers by facilitating the regional distribution of surplus, low-cost power.

This proposal has earlier received support in this Chamber. In 1977, the administration proposed similar amendments to the Federal Power Act as part of a comprehensive National Energy Act. The House passed such legislation, but, in the face of overwhelming opposition by investor-owned utilities, the Senate declined to address the wheeling issue. In conference, a compromise was drafted, which is now part of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978. It contained so many preconditions to the issuance of wheeling orders that those provisions are virtually useless to the wheeling applicant.

Moreover, in a recent case, Southeastern Power Administration against Kentucky Utilities Co., the FERC construed these provisions restrictively and ruled that it lacked authority to order wheeling where the result would be the displacement of power sold by the utilities subject to the wheeling order. Thus, the FERC will not, under PURPA, require large investor-owned utilities to transmit low-cost, surplus power to publicly owned systems which are customers of the private utilities. It is clear, then, that the existing law will not promote competition within the electric utility industry.

Without my proposed amendments, investor-owned utilities will—as they have done routinely in the past—continue peremptorily to deny public power systems access to transmission lines. Competition in the bulk power market is thereby thwarted and potential buyers and sellers are unable to consummate economically attractive deals. My bill will insure that publicly owned utilities have a fair opportunity to compete with investor-owned utilities and that all electric utilities will be able to seek the least expensive power available, thus lowering the cost for the ultimate consumers.

The American Public Power Association, which represents about 1,750 publicly owned electric utilities, surveyed its member systems to determine the extent to which they were experiencing difficulties in obtaining transmission services. The responses reveal numerous problems and bottlenecks. Investor-owned utilities either refuse to wheel or engage in protracted negotiations and insist upon unreasonable terms and prices—thereby effectively refusing to wheel. The publicly owned utilities in my own State of California, for instance, have not been able to obtain access to the Pacific Northwest-Southwest Intertie and other transmission services and, thus, have effectively been denied access to the surplus hydroelectric power now available in the Pacific Northwest and less expensive power in other areas of the country.

The Department of Energy has reported that the regional transfer of electricity could result in substantial savings in electric utility plant investment and energy costs, with corresponding reductions in rates for electric consumers. DOE has identified lack of transmission access as a key to resolving this national problem. Accordingly, this bill would further a sensible, national energy policy.

My proposal would permit FERC, on its own motion or upon application of a State commission, or any electric utility, to order a utility to provide transmission services to another utility under just and reasonable rates, terms, and conditions. FERC would have to issue an order if its effect would be to conserve energy, promote the efficient use of facilities and resources, increase competition in the bulk power supply market, or is otherwise in the public interest.

My proposal also provides that the Commission shall, on its own motion or upon application of a State commission or any electric utility, order an electric utility owning or operating any bulk power tranmission facility to increase the capacity of that facility. Such an order must be issued if its effect is to conserve energy, promote the efficient use of facilities and resources, increase competition, or is otherwise in the public interest. Again, the service to be rendered must be at just and reasonable rates.

This legislation will not impose unfair burdens on the utility subject to the wheeling order. It provides that no order can be issued if it would place an undue burden on a utility, significantly impair the utility's reliability, impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers, or result in the transmission of electricity to an ultimate consumer other than the customers of Federal or State agencies.

These amendments to the Federal Power Act are particularly relevant in light of the recent efforts of the investor-owned utilities to repeal the public preference in the relicensing of hydroelectric projects. In my view, H.R. 4402, introduced by my colleague, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. SHELBY), would reduce competition between public and privately owned utilities, and I am opposed to that bill. The anticompetitive practices of the investor-owned utilities could be curbed by enactment of the antitrust review requirements contained in H.R. 5416, introduced by my colleague from Tennessee (Mr. GORE). But that proposal would require an antitrust review solely in the context of hydroelectric licensing and, in my judgment, further legislation is required. My proposal would be applicable to all electric utilities and would, therefore, deal with this problem on an industrywide basis.

As Federal Power Commissioner Charles Ross observed nearly two decades ago, "It is the parties who control the transmission, the arteries of the industry, that control the destiny of the millions of ratepayers of this Nation." That observation is no less valid today. I hope, therefore, for early consideration of this proposal.●

H.R. 2133—A BILL TO PROMOTE COMPETITION IN FEDERAL PURCHASING

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am making this statement today in an attempt to set the record straight on H.R. 2133. This bill was reported by the Small Business Committee last October and, along with the amendments I plan to offer on behalf of the bill's sponsors, seeks to make competition the rule rather than the exception in Federal procurement practices. The bill is scheduled for House consideration in mid-May.

Some of those opposing H.R. 2133 are the same ones that opposed the small business innovation development bill, Public Law 97-219. Even the Washington Post joined the battle and opposed the SBID bill. It is interesting to see how similar their arguments against the SBID bill and H.R. 2133 are.

Yet, the SBID bill passed, it passed overwhelmingly by a vote of 353 to 57. And it passed intact, the way its sponsors and the small business community wanted it to read. Guess what—the SBID programs are now being implemented by the very Federal agencies that initially opposed its passage. It is one of the most successful, competitive, and highly lauded Federal programs we have.

SPARE PARTS

Let us get back to H.R. 2133. Just what does the bill intend to do? H.R. 2133 has some very strong and important provisions that deal with the way the Federal Government purchases spare and replacement parts. For the first time, H.R. 2133 would legislate criteria to limit the sole-source contracting of spare parts. Only when the head of the buying activity determines that one of the following five exceptions exist may a sole-source contract be let: First, there is only one possible source; second, there is an urgent need for the parts; third, national security reasons make a sole-source award necessary; fourth, only one source has a legitimate proprietary interest; and, fifth, another statute requires a specific source.

In addition, H.R. 2133 contains provisions that deal with rights to proprietary data. The issue of what is a legitimate proprietary interest is a matter of considerable debate. On the one hand, it is a barrier to competition when a company improperly asserts proprietary rights on products that were developed at the public's expense and could be manufactured by a number of potential competitors. On the other hand, an overly restrictive policy toward proprietary rights could cause many private businesses to think twice before selling a product to the Government.

Accordingly, H.R. 2133 directs the administration to issue rules and regulations that specify the status of rights to technical or other data which is developed in whole or in part with Federal funds. These rules shall set out a requirement that a clause pertaining to data rights be a part of the contract for each major systems acquisition. This clause must spell out the Government's right to own, license, use, or otherwise assess this data and the extent, if any, of the proprietary interest maintained by the contractor.

Furthermore, H.R. 2133 requires that the administration direct appropriate purchasing agencies to establish reverse engineering programs designed to give small businesses the opportunity to borrow or purchase spare parts for the purpose of design replication or modification.

I will also offer an amendment to require the Government to catalog, store, and inventory the technical data it owns in a manner to allow its ready access by small business.

These provisions in H.R. 2133 will go a long way to clean up the way the Federal Government purchases spare parts. And there is a lot to clean up. In fiscal year 1982, the military spent $13 billion on spare and replacement parts; $10 billion, or 77 percent, of these parts were purchased through sole-source, noncompetitive contracts. In a June 1983 report, the General Accounting Office said that savings of 30 to 40 percent could be possible if there were more competition on these purchases.

PREQUALIFICATION CRITERIA

H.R. 2133 also takes another very important step in opening up spare parts procurement practices. The bill seeks to limit the anticompetitive effects of prequalification criteria, such as qualified products and bidders lists. These lists are being used as screening devices to deny businesses who are not on the lists the opportunity to even submit bids.

The military maintains that these qualified lists are necessary to preserve quality on critical items. While qualified lists are undoubtedly used to purchase critical items, there are some items that we are presently purchasing off these lists that are clearly not critical: household lights, floor wax, flashlights, spark plugs, loudspeakers for shipboard entertainment systems, automotive grease, filing cabinets, laminated wooden boat paddles, and saw chains.

This screening out by using qualified lists to determine a bidder's responsiveness to a solicitation may lead to instances where the agency actually rejects a perfectly acceptable product at a price lower than it can purchase the product off of the qualified list. Of course, the agency will never know if other than prequalified suppliers can offer similar or superior products at lower prices if they never even review other bids. In cases where the product is vital to the safety and success of a mission, not reviewing a greater universe of sources may indeed be unwise.

H.R. 2133 simply gives businesses the right to submit offers and have them considered without altering the quality standards for any item. In fact, under this provision of H.R. 2133, it is entirely likely that the procuring agency will find sources that will not only supply the product at less expense, but because the bill will not affect quality standards in any way, the procuring agency may actually find superior products. The legislation does not require that an agency must accept a bid if the offered product does not meet its quality standards, or if there is not time for adequate testing prior to needed delivery time. Likewise, any bid can be rejected if the bidder is not considered to be responsible.

THE RULE OF TWO

A provision of H.R. 2133 that has drawn considerable opposition is the "rule of two." This area, perhaps, has been the most misinterpreted and misrepresented provision of the bill. You have probably been told that "virtually all of the Federal procurement contracts will have to go to small business" if this bill is passed.

Let us start with some facts:

Small business makes up approximately 99 percent of all of the businesses in America.

In fiscal year 1983 small business received only 13.75 percent of the value of prime Federal procurement contracts, down from 15.75 percent in fiscal year 1981.

In fiscal year 1983, the top five Department of Defense contractors received more prime contract dollars than the entire small business community.

Small business firms, in winning their paltry share of Federal prime contract dollars, were highly dependent on small business set-asides. In fact, one-half of the prime contract dollars at DOD going to small businesses went through small business set-asides. To small firms interested in Federal procurement, the set-aside program is vital.

Another point to make here is that small business set-asides are made on a competitive basis. These procurements are open for bidding to 99 percent of the business firms in America. In a report to the Congress transmitted last month, President Reagan said:

> Small business set-asides are by definition competitive and should not be confused with the SBA's 8(a) contract program . . .

Small business set-aside procurements are clearly vital to our goal of maintaining a diverse and healthy defense industrial base and to assuring the taxpayers of wise use of the Federal procurement dollar.

In contrast to the small business set-aside program, 60 percent of DOD's procurements are made on a sole-source, noncompetitive basis (according to DOD's own figures). In fact, less than 6 percent of DOD's procurements are even formally advertised for bid. I submit that competition among only 99 percent of the business firms in America is better than no competition at all.

A contracting officer implements a small business set-aside on a procurement he or she feels the criteria of the "rule of two" has been met. These are the criteria for the "rule of two":

The contracting officer determines that there is a reasonable expectation that, first, offers will be obtained from at least two responsible small business concerns offering the products of different small business concerns, and second, awards will be made at reasonable prices.

An important concept of the "rule of two" is that a contracting officer may cancel a small business set-aside if he or she feels the Government is not getting a reasonable price for the goods or services, or if the contract award to a small business concern would not be in the public interest. The proposed award would then be resolicited on an unrestricted basis.

That criteria can be found in section 19.502-1 of the Federal acquisition regulations (FAR). The "rule of two" is current procurement regulation that guides all Federal procurement. There is nothing new about the "rule of two." It has been a formal procurement regulation at the Department of Defense since 1979. NASA also adopted the "rule of two" as their formal procurement policy in 1982. In a slightly different form, this criteria could also be found in the old Federal procurement regulations that were used by civilian agencies prior to the final adoption of the FAR.

Not only do Federal agencies presently use the "rule of two," they fully endorse it. In a letter to David Stockman dated April 18, 1984, Mary Ann Gilleece, the Deputy Under Secretary for Acquisition Management at the Department of Defense said:

> The only mechanism available to carry out this Congressional mandate is through the small business set-aside program which serves as the underpinning of the Federal agencies small business program.
> . . . These have worked effectively for almost thirty years to enhance the opportunities for small business and small disadvantaged business firms who participated in the acquisition of products and services by Federal agencies.
> We would like to note that small business set-asides generally result in more, not less competition. This increase in competition results because of two factors: There are a much greater number of small business firms than big business firms; secondly, the small business community perceives that when procurement is set-aside, it, by definition, cannot be a sole source award and that they will be competing against their peers and therefore stand a realistic chance of winning the contract.

H.R. 2133 seeks to codify the "rule of two" as it appears in the FAR with the addition of one additional criterion—that the delivery of the goods or services will be rendered within the time needs of the procuring agency. Small business set-asides are of such importance to the minute share of prime contract awards that small business presently receives, it is necessary to protect this program with the force of law.

Remember almost half of all Federal prime contract dollars going to small business goes through the set-aside program. At the present time, tremendous pressure is being put on the Office of Management and Budget to withdraw the "rule of two" from the FAR. Organizations that wish to expand the 85 percent of the total procurement prime contract dollars that currently go to the largest 1 percent of the businesses in America are fighting tooth and nail to eliminate the "rule of two" from the FAR. Congress must step in and act before this program that is so vitial to small business competition and our goal of maintaining a diverse and healthy defense industrial base is lost.

You undoubtedly have heard vague critcisms about the small business set-aside procurement program. For example, you have probably heard that H.R. 2133 would require that all or most of Federal procurements will have to go to small businesses, or that small firms will simply get contracts, skim off the profits and then subcontract out all the work to a big company. That is simply not true, and in fact cannot happen when the "rule of two" is properly implemented. Small businesses may only offer the products of small businesses under small business set-asides.

Furthermore, since 60 percent of DOD's work goes out under sole source, noncompetitive awards, the "rule of two" cannot be met in those circumstances because the contracting officer believes there is only one firm eligible to perform. Other procurements have defined elements of responsibility and likewise may not be suitable for small business set-aside awards. For example, when the Government is seeking "the best technical approach available" for a research and development task, the contracting officer may not be able to satisfy his or her expectation that the best approach will be found by using the small business set-aside procedure.

This brings me to another important point. Most of the basic research the Federal Government funds is done through grants and cooperative agreements. The National Institutes of Health, for example, uses approximately 90 percent of their research funds to fund unsolicited basic research grants to universities and other nonprofits. H.R. 2133 only applies to procurement contracts, not grants or cooperative agreements. Thus, it would not affect any of the research grant or cooperative agreement programs operated by Federal agencies.

Finally, I want to put to rest once and for all the notion that small business set-asides lead to shoddy performance by contractors that are merely shady fronts that ripoff the taxpayer. That characterization is plainly insulting and demeaning to small business contractors and procurement officials who are hardworking and constantly in battle with a system that is at odds with what is truly good for America. The "rule of two" clearly states that a potential contractor must be responsible. The FAR sets the standards by which a potential contractor is deemed responsible. A firm must: first, have adequate financial resources; second, be able to comply with delivery and performance schedules; third, have a satisfactory performance record; fourth, have a satisfactory record of integrity and business ethics; fifth, have necessary organization, experience, accounting and operational controls or the ability to obtain them; sixth, have the necessary production, construction and technical equipment and facilities, or the ability to obtain them; and seventh, be otherwise qualified and eligible.

THE "$2 MILLION PRESUMPTION"

While H.R. 2133 adopts a current and time-tested Government policy in the "rule of two," it does require some new documentation with respect to its use.

Under current procurement policy at DOD, whenever that agency prepares solicitation for the acquisition of construction services that will result in a prime contract award for less than $2 million, that solicitation will be presumed to be eligible for a small business set-aside. The Department of Energy has also adopted this policy toward construction services, their threshold is set at $3 million.

H.R. 2133 adopts this policy and applies this presumption to all Federal contracts under $2 million (except where small purchase procurement procedures or reserve programs apply). I will, in addition, offer an amendment to this section that will exempt the procurement of research and development and other professional, technical, and management services from the presumption.

Just what does this presumption mean? I am sure you have heard that the presumption means that all Federal contracts for less than $2 million must now go to small business. Again, this is false.

Under the presumption clause in H.R. 2133, small business set-asides for procurements under $2 million may be lifted if the contracting officer prepares a determinations and findings stating that the criteria for the set-aside will not be met. The intent of this section is to make it administratively easier for the contracting officer to seek competition on contracts under $2 million than it is to sole source or otherwise noncompetitively let the contracts. This provision is vital to the proper implementation of the "rule of two." This provision will help bring the benefits of competition to thousands of procurement actions.

In the fiscal year 1981-83 period, of all procurement contracts going to small business, 67 percent were under $2 million. Overall, small firms received 36 percent of the contracts let by the Government under $2 million in value. Quite obviously, contracts in this range are extremely important to small firms. Hence, this presumption will make contracting officers think twice about obtaining small business competition on contract that otherwise would have gone out on a sole source, or other noncompetitive procedures.

Remember that the majority of Federal construction contracts are already awarded under this system. In addition, my amendment to this section will not affect the procurement of research and development and other professional, technical and management services (this presently includes architects and engineers). This presumption will get to the procurements that we need competition for the most—basic, low skill services and common hardware and tooled items that are not proprietary or patented. If an item is patented or proprietary, the contracting officer may issue a sole-source contract.

I hope this discussion of the major provisions of H.R. 2133 will help you understand the objectives of the legislation. Along with the other provisions of H.R. 2133, which are designed to fine tune existing procurement programs such as the Small Business Administration's certificate of competency program, small business reserve program, and the administration's small business procurement goal-setting procedures, these new legislative proposals seek to open the procurement process to the vast majority of firms in America that find themselves locked out by present procedures.

H.R. 2133 has the support of over 150 small business groups that represent the broad spectrum of businesses in the United States. These groups include the National Federation of Independent Business, the National Small Business Association, Small Business United, the National Machining and Tooling Association, and the Small Business Legislative Council.

ARCHITECTS AND ENGINEERS

On a final note, I want to comment on the opposition to H.R. 2133 that is being carried out by the architects and engineers. I understand that A&E firms have been active in contacting many congressional offices in opposition to H.R. 2133.

First, I must point out that my amendment to exempt professional, management, and technical services from the presumption provision would include exempting the procurement of A&E services from that section. The only part of the bill that still affects them is the "rule of two" and that is current regulation. Thus, nothing in H.R. 2133 changes the current system of procuring A&E services.

It is apparent that the lobbying effort against the bill on the part of the architects and engineers is being orchestrated by the largest 200 firms in the industry. Although these 200 firms make up only 0.07 percent of the 30,000 A&E firms in the country, a DOD report found that these firms receive 32.4 percent of DOD's A&E prime contract dollars. The DOD report from Secretary Weinberger further states that from fiscal year 1982 to fiscal year 1983 these firms increased their receipts from DOD from $71,730,000 to $139,819,000, an increase of 94.9 percent. By contrast, awards to small A&E firms increased only 20.1 percent in the same period.

The DOD report goes on to state that:

1. DOD's current implementation of set-asides in support of small business is statutorily authorized and correctly implemented through the Defense Acquisition Regulation.

2. DOD's implementation of the set-aside program has been supported by the courts and the GAO.

3. Quality performance of our requirements is not jeopardized by our current procedures, nor is mobilization readiness impaired.

Clearly, it appears that the opposition to H.R. 2133 on the part of the large A&E firms is an attempt to further increase their already disproportionate share of Federal A&E expenditures. If they can defeat the "rule of two" and have it removed from Federal procurement policy, they will take a large step toward eliminating competition from the small firms in their industry.

I urge you to stand firm against their effort.●

JAPAN PROBLEM ISN'T BEEF; IT'S HIGH-TECH TRADE

HON. TIMOTHY E. WIRTH

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, in a superb column recently, Hobart Rowen addressed the recent announcement that Japan would increase its imports of U.S.-produced beef and citrus. As Rowen points out, both beef and citrus have assumed a symbolic quality that exceed their importance in the overall scheme of our balance of trade with Japan. We cannot assume that the recent announcement—welcome as it may be—indicates an end to our ongoing trade friction with Japan.

I would caution, however, that we cannot now belittle the recent announcement as meaningless. Both beef and citrus were often cited as examples of restrictive Japanese import policies; imports have now, in some measure, been liberalized. I hope that we appreciate that the recent decision was an act of considerable political will by the Japanese Government, and recognize our role in making beef and citrus the most pressing issues that had to be dealt with. In a sense, the Rowen article provides us with a lesson in the importance of choosing our symbols, and a warning to do a more effective job in the future.

As Rowen points out—correctly, in my view—the big issues for the future lie in those manufactured goods where we enjoy a comparative advantage: computing equipment, telecommunications equipment, and other technology goods. There the next battles will have to be fought. We must concentrate our efforts where we will accomplish the most.

For example, after considerable U.S. pressure, the Japanese Government recently modified a proposal that was submitted to the diet that would have restricted foreign ownership of new value added networks for data transmission. This was a welcome decision; it is in an area where the United States has had extensive experience—and Japanese companies relatively little—and shows that it is possible to work with the Japanese Government without resorting to symbolism.

The NTT Procurement Agreement provides another useful model for reconciling differing approaches to high technology policy. NTT is the Japanese telephones monopoly, which historically has procured all of its equipment needs from four Japanese companies. Late in 1980, the Governments of the United States and Japan reached an agreement under which NTT's procurements would be open to competitive bid by American, as well as Japanese companies. Under the terms of the agreement—which was, incidentally, renewed earlier this year—NTT's procurements from U.S. companies have risen from $20 million per year to more than $140 million.

In addition, NTT has instituted procedures that facilitate the participation of U.S. companies in the Japanese market, and has sent several procurement delegations ot the United States to meet with U.S. manufacturers. While sales have not yet approached the level that I had hoped to see, there has clearly been an improvement, both in actual results and in reconciling differing approaches to the high technology marketplace.

I commend the following article to my colleagues' attention, and hope that we will all learn from the recent relaxation of restrictions on imported beef and citrus.

The article follows:

JAPAN PROBLEM ISN'T BEEF; IT'S HIGH-TECH TRADE

The Japanese are canny: For the past several years, they have kept American trade negotiators off balance, ducking demands for larger sales of American beef and citrus products to Japan. To be sure, as Japanese government officials say, there has been great political pressure from Japanese agriculture lobbies to keep out high-quality beef and citrus products from abroad.

But while all attention was focused on these politically volatile products, little could be done to settle more basic issues, including Japanese resistance to imports of manufactured goods. At the moment, a critical confrontation looms over American efforts to sell satellite and other high-technology products in a growing Japanese market, and to get agreement on licensing computer software, an area where the United States is clearly ahead.

Against an American trade deficit of more than $20 billion a year with Japan, the extra sales of beef, oranges, etc., that will result from a new agreement may amount to a paltry $200 million annually, a mere trickle against the value of other products that the United States would like to sell Japan. As Ford Motor Co. Chairman Philip Caldwell grumbled, "The beef isn't worth more than about 16,000 cars."

But every time U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock appeared before a congressional committee to discuss the whole range of trade issues between the United States and Japan, he heard a familiar chorus from representatives of farm states:

"How about beef and citrus?"

Japan, for its part, protested that a nation that had been on the edge of starvation in the last few years of World War II had to assure itself of a minimum level of domestic agricultural production, even if it could buy cheaper food abroad.

"Japanese consumers are willing to pay the costs," Ambassador Yoshio Okawara told the National Governors Conference in Portland, Me., last year.

Thus the beef/citrus issue gained enormous symbolic and political importance here and in Japan. A Japanese concession on beef and citrus that would have been small in a macroeconomic sense, muting larger issues, was one that the Japanese were unwilling to make.

So Congress began to chatter about a 10 percent import surcharge, and Brock himself bluntly told Japanese officials that beef and citrus quotas would have to be increased substantially, or the United States would take specific measures to restrict imports of Japanese goods.

Last weekend, Japan capitulated, agreeing to nearly double its import quotas for high-quality beef.

Under an expiring five-year agreement on beef and citrus, allowable U.S. exports of high-grade beef to Japan had been increasing by 3,300 metric tons a year, to the present level of 30,800 tons a year. (The American Cattlemen's Association says, however, that counting all grades of beef, total exports to Japan were 60,575 tons, or 65 percent of the U.S. global total of 93,045 tons last year.)

Under the new deal, Japan's high-quality-beef quota will rise to 58,400 metric tons at the end of four years. The citrus quotas will be boosted from 82,000 tons to 126,000 tons, and there will be comparable increases for juice.

Roger Berglund, president of the Cattlemen's Association, who grumbled that "we're still disappointed," fails to mention that American beef, as well as other meat products, are protected by the Meat Import Act. That provides a formula limiting beef imports here if domestic production exceeds demand. It's one of many American devices protecting farmers, including import restrictions on sugar, butter, cheese, peanuts and cotton.

In a telephone interview just before departing for Korea last week, Brock said candidly: "We can be accused of having more import barriers to agricultural products" than Japan does.

Thus, "nobody has a clean slate" on agricultural protectionism, as Brock likes to say.

But the big issues lie elsewhere. America has a "Japan problem" in terms of manufactured goods imported here, because their companies beat us out—with good business management—in consumer products ranging from video recorders to automobiles. Increasingly, the contest will turn to communications technology as both our economies increasingly become service-oriented.

We may have a merchandise trade deficit with Japan, but we still have a substantial surplus in services.

As Brookings economist Lawrence Kraus has pointed out, Japan has a number of real problems to face: a rapidly aging population, and a restrictive economic policy that is retarding domestic growth. In addition, having taken maximum advantage of existing technology, Japan is on the frontier of some of the newer processes where the United States excells, and Japan's ability to adapt the newer stuff is less certain.

In a little-noticed address to the Japan Society in New York after the Williamsburg summit, Prime Minister Nakasone acknowledged that Japan's future economic development should be in the direction "of the electronics and communications technology necessary to sustain an information society . . . The achievement of the information society seems primary, since it goes beyond changes in the production structure and . . . will mean the unfolding of a new and unprecedented stage of development.

"This may take 20 or even 30 years to realize, yet we should not let the long time span deter us."

So, at least, Japan appears to have the big picture in its sights. We've got the beef.●

ELECTIONS AND THE MILITARY VOTE

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that our military personnel, who are serving to defend our Nation, are often unable to get their votes to count in U.S. elections. How ironic that the people who so bravely enlist to defend our right to free elections and our right to vote cannot make their voice heard due to poor election rules. This injustice to American citizens should be stopped and reforms to improve the voting system for military personnel should begin immediately. I am entering a copy of an article that appeared in the Conservative Digest which outlines this problem and the role of Samuel Wright in trying to rectify it.

The article is as follows:

GIVE THE MILITARY A CHANCE TO VOTE!

Approximately 182,000 military personnel who tried to vote in the 1980 presidential election were unable to do so, according to a Department of Defense survey. Reason: they received their absentee ballots too late or not at all.

This figure does not include persons who are not aware that their ballots were not counted, because local election officials received them after the election. The figure also does not include military dependents and overseas civilians.

If all those groups were included, the number of disenfranchised voters would likely approach half a million.

THE BASIC PROBLEM

The basic problem is that regardless of how early the voter applies for an absentee ballot, the local election official probably won't start mailing out ballots until about three weeks before the election, and in 45 states an absentee ballot must be actually received (not just postmarked) by election day.

For many military personnel, especially those at sea or at isolated overseas duty stations, three weeks is insufficient time for the ballot to go from the local election official to the voter and back.

The same is true for many civilians overseas, especially those who live in countries with terrible postal services.

Another problem, particularly for overseas civilians, is cumbersome notarization requirements. About half the states require that either the application for an absentee ballot, or the ballot return envelope, or both, be notarized or otherwise acknowledged by "an official authorized to administer oaths."

In most countries, notaries public are not as inexpenxive or as readily available as they are in this country. In some countries, the system of jurisprudence does not even contain the notion of "an official authorized to administer oaths."

There are cases on record of overseas Americans having to travel up to 75 miles or pay up to $75 to get a single piece of voting material notarized.

PROGRESS BEING MADE

Progress is being made on solving this problem because of the efforts of one Conservative Digest subscriber, Samuel F. Wright. Wright has put together a network of more than 350 volunteers around the country to work for ballot reforms. They encourage state and local elections officials, as well as state lawmakers, to make it easier for military personnel to vote by absentee ballots.

So far, through the efforts of Wright's network and others, reform bills have been enacted in California, Connecticut, Indiana, Maine, Tennessee and Texas.

But Wright says more work is needed in these states as well as most others. In Indiana, for example, the new law solved only the notarization problem for military personnel abroad, not the problems involved in ballot transmission to and from military personnel.

"If we can make it possible for more military personnel to vote," says Wright, "it is likely that more pro-defense congressmen will be elected, and those in Congress will pay more attention to the needs of the military. After all, no one has a greater interest in a strong national defense than military personnel themselves.

"I recognize that the reforms we are seeking," he says, "may create some inconvenience for state and local election officials. But it seems to me that these are small accommodations to make to facilitate the enfranchisement of the brave young men and women who are away from home and prepared to lay down their lives in defense of our country."

"After all," says Wright, "were it not for the sacrifices of military personnel now and in the past, none of us would have the opportunity to vote in free elections."

GETTING INVOLVED

Wright became interested in this issue while serving as voting assistance officer for the Navy's Judge Advocate General during the 1978 election and as absentee voting chairman for the Harris County Republican Party, Houston, Texas during the 1980 campaign.

He will send information upon request to anyone about the kinds of reforms that are necessary in any particular state, along with the names and addresses of his contacts in that state.

Those who wish may write him at the following address: Samuel F. Wright, c/o Americans for a Sound Foreign Policy, 418 C St., N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002.●

ENDING AUTO QUOTAS NOT THE ANSWER

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Columnist William Safire, in an article in the May 7 edition of the New York Times, provides a perceptive analysis of what is behind attempts to abolish import quotas on Japanese auto imports.

Mr. Safire, himself a noted conservative, observes that both the Reagan administration and the American auto companies want an end to Japanese import quotas.

And he suggests that the unconscionable bonuses the Detroit auto executives recently voted themselves and the administration's irate criticism of them are devices to achieve the same end.

I ask that the article be reprinted in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

The article follows:

THOSE "OBSCENE" SALARIES

(By William Safire)

WASHINGTON, May 6—See the obscene auto executive. He is living off the fat of the land: drawing a million-dollar salary, plus a million-dollar bonus, plus rewarding stock options, plus plush perks.

See the irate editorialist. He is writing: Where does this businessman come off, reaping these personal profits? Doesn't he realize that the auto industry's success this year came about because of quotas the U.S. Government imposed on Japanese imports? Doesn't he know that plutocratic compensation is bad public relations, sure to cause politicians to stop protecting the American auto industry from foreign competition?

See the conservative Reagan Administration trade negotiator. He is saying to the naughty businessmen: That's it fellas, we're fed up with your greed. If you are going to line your pockets with profits, I will no longer protect you with quotas.

See the auto union negotiator. He is mounting David Brinkley's podium to say: My people tightened their belts during the recession and suffered more than management did. Now that the bosses are rewarding themselves handsomely, it's only fair that we who bore the brunt of the lean years get the payoff in the fat years.

See the cool economist. He is theorizing: This rush to raise the cost of production is proof that quotas and other forms of protection are wrong. Let the Japanese cars in, and let the American auto worker lower his standard of living.

See the confused auto worker. He is scratching his head and wondering: How come, when the bosses raise their salaries and Washington blows its stack, I'm the one who suffers? The chairman of G.M. gets rich, then the politicians and consumers get mad, then the Japanese get invited in, and then I get laid off.

Sometimes what appears to be dumb is really smart. The decision by many auto executives to flout public opinion by taking what appears to be inordinately high compensation is akin to Br'er Rabbit's cry of "Don't throw me in the briar patch!"

Most auto executives are secretly eager for quotas to end. General Motors has invested capital in Japan to produce cars there, and G.M. would share in the profit from an end to the protection of the U.S. auto worker.

Republican economists are also eager to remove the quotas, on the grounds that the marketplace enforces productivity only if the devil is allowed to take the hindmost.

The irony is in the fire: By getting all red in the face about the executive bonuses, the Reagan men can do what most executives want—that is, to let economic dog eat dog, and to put American capital to work employing cheaper Japanese labor.

We should not be misled, therefore, by the Administration's professed ire at the auto executives' greed. That populist ire clothes a determination to put the squeeze on the too costly American auto worker.

Is this transfer of jobs to Japan in the interest of the American worker, consumer and taxpayer?

I'm for a person's getting as obscene a salary as the market will bear, and I know the catechism: Capitalism harnesses the energy of human greed to the creation of human dignity. The average American worker, who is paid half the wage of the auto worker, should not, when buying a car, have to pay a subsidy to the auto worker. If you can't cut the mustard, step aside for somebody who can; in the long run, protection's kindness is cruelty.

But we have the stick by the wrong end. We should not be beating up on the auto worker for negotiating a high wage, and sending our capital to Japan to hire Japanese; on the contrary, we should be treating our auto worker's achievement as something for other Americans to emulate, and we should be attracting Japanese and other capital here to employ our workers.

Let us stop flagellating ourselves; not everything is our fault. The problem of the U.S. auto industry is less the standard of living of our auto workers and more the uninspired management of many auto executives and, most of all, the standard of unfair competition inflicted on us by the Japanese.

The Government of Japan has been getting away with economic murder. Japan's currency is artifically rigged to make exports cheaper and imports more costly. Japan practices outrageous trade discrimination and pioneered domestic-content legislation. Japan takes our nuclear umbrella for granted and benefits from its tiny investment in defense.

Advocates of free trade in Washington should start pressuring the people in Tokyo, not the people in Detroit. The Reagan administration's promise to end quotas next year is aimed at holding down U.S. wages, not at getting Japan to adopt a free-trade policy.

Maybe we should offer an obscene bonus to the first trade negotiator who comes back with a fairly valued yen and a level playing field.●

QUEENS BOROUGH-WIDE SALUTE TO MUSIC CONCERT

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the many talented young people who performed in the Queens Borough-Wide Salute to Music Concert on Saturday, April 28. More than 200 junior high school students participated in the 26-year-old concert tradition sponsored by the New York City Board of Education.

Each of New York City's five counties has a Borough-wide orchestra, band, and chorus, and offers junior training groups as well. More than 2,500 junior high and intermediate school students participate in the music instruction programs, which give them a unique opportunity to learn music skills and to develop their music appreciation.

This excellent program is supported by a private, non-profit organization called the Friends of Music for Junior High School Pupils of the City of New York, Inc. I applaud the program's executive director, Jerome Parker, for his efforts to discover and develop the musical talents and abilities of the boys and girls in New York City's public high schools. Friends of Music obtains and supplies funds for hiring teachers, purchasing instruments, renting rehearsal and performance facilities, providing scholarships for talented and needy pupils, and defraying other costs incidental to the implementation of the program. Without the support and encouragement of Friends of Music. Many of the students who participated in this year's Borough-Wide Concert would not have been able to pursue their musical talents.

These students were recommended by their junior high and intermediate schools to audition for the Borough-Wide band, orchestra or chorus, in October of last year. Many of these students had never performed publicly before, and welcomed this opportunity to learn and perform great music together for an appreciative audience.

Special credit goes to several participants in the 1984 Queens Concert: Jeffrey Kastin, orchestra conductor; Susan Feldman, orchestra conductor; Fawn Weiner, assistant orchestra conductor; Anne Marie Hudley, choral conductor; Zora M. Clement, associate choral conductor and accompanist; Emelia Pruyn, assistant choral conductor; Gwendolyn Carter, assistant choral conductor; Lorraine Jeffers, assistant choral conductor; Joseph Joffe, band conductor; Donald Feldman, associate band conductor; and James Corwin, assistant band conductor.

I congratulate the students for their superb musical presentation at this year's Queens Concert program, and encourage their interest in music. I ask that the 1984 concert program listing all of the Queens student participants be printed below.

QUEENS PARTICIPANTS

BAND

Flute: Lauren Ackerman, Maria Alexander, Donna Bodine, Felicia Busto, Lori M. De L'Eveille, Karen Greenberger, Ida Lin, Danielle Luttenberg, Julie Mahdy, Jaquima Norris, Rachel Rashes, Lori Robinson, Tina Sgouros, Carol Anne St. Louis, Sheila Storr, Sandy Wang, Lisa Watts, and Ruschell Wilson.[1]

Oboe: Leonor Acevedo.

Bassoon: Cheri McLeod.[1 2]

Clarinet: Pier Blissett, Linda Cheung, Dionne Dixon, Alex Dranovsky, Denise Durant, Tony Eng, Margie Gonzalez, Beth Ann Gordon, Felicia Goulbourne, Tracy Griffin, Lisa Hinds, Dawn Hughes, You Young Kang, Malaika Kashaka,[1] Jennifer Kong, Richard Kuonqui,[3] Tracy Logan, Johnine Mowatt, Harriet Popadopoulos, Mihcele Perlis, Nicole Reed, Rosalinda Salva, Michele Speruta, Steven Sofia, and Bobson Wong.

Bass Clarinet: Dara Paul.

CONCERNS ABOUT WORLD POPULATION EXPLOSION

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, in the past I have spoken out on the need for a greater understanding of the dangers inherent in the world population explosion. Today there are 82 million more people in the world than 1 year ago. Next year will see an increase of 84 million. It is a compounding problem which is the cause of increasing hardship and suffering around the world, and especially in the developing nations of the world.

This August 6–13, in Mexico City, a World Population Conference will be held by the United Nations to consider international measures to address the problem of overpopulation. This week we are discussing the foreign aid reauthorization. Accordingly, I commend to the attention of my colleagues a timely article by Tad Szulc which appeared in the April 29, 1984 edition of Parade magazine. It explores and outlines the problems facing us as a result of continuing overpopulation. In addition, it provides useful data in which to approach the debate over our country's participation in this program.

The article follows:

[From Parade Magazine, Apr. 29, 1984]

ONE PERSON TOO MANY?

(By Tad Szulc)

Short of nuclear annihilation, the greatest threat to humanity is, ironically, its own sheer mass. Global population grows inexorably and at a rate so prodigious that by the year 2000—only 16 years from now—the world, with its added billions, will be unable to provide adequate food and energy, let alone jobs, housing, education and health care. And what could happen by the mid-21st century (when babies born in this decade approach old age) defies imagination—unless acceptable ways are found of curtailing population growth. This is as true in a special way for the United States as it is generally for the developing Third World, which accounts for 75 percent of the world's population.

Overpopulation on the scale currently taking shape will result in new and greater famines, perhaps wars, civil strife and deep social distortions as well as massive malnutrition and disease, vast migrations and a sharp drop in living standards almost everywhere, including this country. Yet no high-priority international strategy exists to cope with these problems. Emergency assistance is essentially all that is being done by the world community.

To the U.S., where the population growth rate has leveled off, the world population explosion represents an enormous pressure on its southern borders, as tens of millions of destitute migrants from Latin America are pushed north in search of a livelihood. It adds up to one of the most serious challenges to American society.

The latest famine in Africa, the result of one of the worst and longest droughts in history, illustrates dramatically the collapse of the delicate balance between population growth and food supply. The drought, which began three years ago, was directly responsible for the famine, of course, but uncontrollable population increases also contribute to mass starvation.

According to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, of the 150 million people who live in the 24 African countries hit by the drought, an estimated 100 million face hunger and as many as 4 million, mainly children, may die this year and next from starvation, malnutrition and related causes. In Mozambique alone, 200,000 may have died in 1983 and at least 100,000 more this year.

Demographers have long warned that massive overpopulation is a time bomb, but in 1983 the point was finally reached when the threat began to become a reality. Recent discussions, with population specialists at the UN, World Bank, U.S. Bureau of the Census and Washington think-tanks reveal this gloomy picture:

The world population rose by 82 million between mid-1982 and mid-1983—an all-time record, making 1983 a demographic turning point—reaching 4.7 billion last September. This is more than twice the global population 20 years ago. The Census Bureau projects an increase of 82.8 million in 1983/84 and 84 million in 1984/85. At this rate, world population will hit 5 billion by 1986 and 6.2 billion by 2000. Try to visualize a new China and a new India—more than six times the population of the U.S.—swelling the ranks of humanity.

The World Bank estimates that only 23 of the 98 Third World nations will reach stationary population—no more absolute growth—toward the middle or end of the next century; the rest will quit growing only sometime during the 22nd century. China, now with 1.06 billion inhabitants and already the most populated nation in the world, should attain the stationary level in 2040, with 1.43 billion. India will have 1.8 billion when it stabilizes in 2140. The U.S., its growth rates slowing down, is expected to move from its present 234 million to 289 million when we reach stationary population in 2040.

Though average annual rates of growth are decreasing in the world, the actual numbers are racing out of hand (because each year the base is larger for figuring percentage increase).

Already, more than half the world's people live in cities that cannot house, feed or support them. Older cities—such as Calcutta, Delhi, Mexico, Sao Paulo and Jakarta—are turning into urban nightmares. Since 1960, there have been 245 additional cities with populations exceeding 500,000. And rural inhabitants keep migrating to cities, where at the same time babies are being born to earlier immigrants.

This worldwide population emergency is tragic where the availability of food, shelter, health services and jobs is concerned.

Lester R. Brown, president of the Washington-based Worldwatch Institute and a leading authority on food economics, says that "the way things are going, it's quite possible that per capita food production at the end of the century will be less than today." World food production, in fact, is already declining in many key sectors compared with annual population growth. Although overall world grain production doubled between 1950 and 1973, since then, Brown points out, the output per person "has barely kept pace with world population growth."

In Africa, for example, per capita food production in 30 countries actually fell in 1979 and 1980, aggravating the famine. When there is starvation on a vast scale, there are no resources, including human energy, to stimulate greater food production. And as births multiply, so does the overall survival problem. Most African nations lack workable systems of food production, distribution and marketing. The UN Food and Agriculture Organization warns that unless 4 million tons of grain are rapidly supplied to 22 African countries with 145 million people, mass starvation may be inevitable.

By the end of the century, the demand for grain in the developing nations will be twice the 437 million tons required in 1980. But experts note that excessive dependence on foreign assistance discourages local food production.

And problems beget other problems. Grain and cattle production, for example, have been hurt by the huge rise in petroleum prices since 1973. Petroleum is used in the production of fertilizers, which fewer and fewer Third World farmers can afford at today's prices. Compounding the problem is worldwide soil erosion, and farmers everywhere are doing little to protect the topsoil.

In terms of nutrition, the situation is appalling throughout most of the Third World. Although physicians offer no standard measurement for required daily caloric intake, it is well below generally accepted levels in the Third World, according to the World Bank.

In addition, medical care is declining. In Ethiopia, there is one doctor per 58,490 inhabitants; in Indonesia, one per 11,530 (in the U.S., it's one for every 520).

Whereas starving Africans have no place to go to find survival, in Latin America and Asia massive migrations are increasingly the solution for the destitute. Illegal migrants from Mexico are entering the U.S. in uncontrollable numbers. During the year ending last Sept. 30, the Immigration and Naturalization Service apprehended 1.03 million illegals crossing the border from Mexico (most were Mexicans, but there were also thousands of Central Americans). And the Service, short-handed along the frontier, doesn't know how many illegal migrants elude its surveillance.

Between 2 million and 3 million illegal immigrants a year remain in the United States, more than the annual natural increase in U.S. population. Approximately 4 million crossed (or attempted to cross) the U.S. border in 1982/1983. But assuming that Mexico's economic situation will not improve markedly, it is possible that nearly 6 million will be crossing the border 15 years from now.

And between 30 million and 40 million Mexicans and Central Americans are likely to enter the U.S. illegally between now and the end of the century. Hispanics now represent an estimated 10 percent of the U.S. population; this percentage may double by the year 2000.

UN Secretary General Javier Pérez de Cuellar commented recently that "if the rapid population growth in developing countries is left unchecked it will evidently undermine all efforts for economic and social development and could easily lead to widespread depletion of each nation's basic resources."

An expert at the Center for International Research of the U.S. Census Bureau put it even more starkly: "Unless international action is undertaken rapidly to control population, I can see systems of governments breaking down."

What is being done? In August in Mexico City, the United Nations will hold its periodic World Population Conference to consider new international measures to keep population down. That the world population jumped by 700 million since the last UN population conference, in 1974, suggests the inadequacy of present world programs.

The opposition of the Roman Catholic Church to most forms of birth control and family planning is a major factor inhibiting population control, especially in Latin America, Africa and Asia. Pope John Paul II has made it clear that he will not depart from this stance, but experts say that increasingly Church views are being ignored, particularly in families suffering less poverty and having more education.

China, using draconian methods to limit families to one child, brought its annual growth rate to 1.06 percent in 1983, one of the lowest in the world. India, with 715 million, has birth-control programs, including voluntary sterilization. There are birth-control clinics in many Third World countries, and contraceptives are sold by street vendors in many Asian cities.

However, the international community—and especially the U.S.—has not faced the urgent need for a coordinated world program that would bring together all aspects of the great population crisis: birth control, food and energy production, health and education.

The UN has a population division with a relatively low priority. The World Bank's efforts are confined to studies and recommendations. The UN Food and Agriculture Organization lacks adequate resources. The Reagan Administration has a Coordinator of Population Affairs—a scarcely visible operation—in the State Department. Also buried in the State Department is a small Directorate for Health and Population in the Agency for International Development.

Lester Brown of the Worldwatch Institute charges that "there is a vacuum of leadership created by the U.S. in the population area." He adds, "There is no intellectual leadership. This Administration has no people with vision to see the future if the United States were to commit itself to these problems."

Meanwhile the population time bomb is ticking. When the explosion comes at the end of this century, the United States will not escape the fallout unless we assume leadership to help our species save itself from its own blindness.●

CONGRESS SHOULD CANCEL THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION'S WORLD COURT DECISION

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, on April 6 the Reagan administration announced that it would not accept the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice on any issue relating to Central America for 2 years. The administration's decision has reduced the United States, a nation founded on the very principle of the rule of law, to the level of an international scofflaw. I am today introducing legislation to declare the administration's action null and void.

The administration's declaration with respect to the nonjurisdiction of the World Court was clearly designed to deflect international criticism of the President's decision to authorize direct CIA involvement in the general campaign to destabilize the Government of Nicaragua. But the declaration has not and will not succeed in its goal of escaping responsibility. Rather, it will simply reduce the credibility of the United States in the eyes of the law and the eyes of the international community. Worse yet, it abandons our historic commitment to the rule of law, which has been the very foundation of our Nation.

The Reagan administration has made much lately of Soviet cheating on arms control agreements, and of Soviet disregard for international agreements. How ironic that, while denouncing the Russians for allegedly violating the spirit of bilateral and international agreements, the administration would so cavalierly decide that we are simply not going to accept the jurisdiction of the World Court for 2 years. This decision was made notwithstanding the fact that our actions appear to be in clear and direct violation of the declaration of August 2, 1946 accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

The Senate resolution consenting to the declaration of World Court jurisdiction included three specific reservations. The first provides that the declaration shall not apply to—

Disputes the solution of which the parties shall entrust to other tribunals * * *

No other tribunal has been entrusted with deciding Nicaragua's complaint against the United States, so it seems clear that the first reservation does not apply.

The second reservation—the so-called Connally Reservation—rejects World Court jurisdiction in—

Disputes with regard to matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States.

Certainly it would be some straining of the facts to argue that the decision to give military assistance to the Contras amounts to an internal domestic policy matter even if it is determined that it involves the right of the United States to self-defense. The right to self-defense is rooted in international law, and the carrying out of a self-defense claim—itself a tortured reading of our Nicaragua policy—is clearly a matter of international law.

The third reservation denies World Court jurisdiction in—

Disputes arising under a multilateral treaty, unless (1) all parties to the treaty affected by the decision are also parties to the case before the court, or (2) the United States specially agrees to jurisdiction.

Certainly Nicaragua and the United States are both parties to the case, and the Contras are not parties to the treaty. Further, the Court's own statutes specifically provide that the decision in any particular case has no binding force except between the parties and in respect to the particular case in question. So a contention that any rendering by the Court in this case will have a precedential bearing on other future actions and therefore provides grounds for a rejection of Court jurisdiction under the third reservation is also contravened by the Court's own statutes.

Thus the United States is bound to accept the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court in Nicaragua's case, unless the United States lawfully terminates the existing declaration, which can only be effective upon 6 months notification. Such notice has not been given. The Reagan administration is, in effect, saying that it will abide by this or that agreement or treaty so long as it pleases, but any time an agreement may prove a hindrance it will not abide by it, or abide by it only selectively.

The administration asserts in one breath that our foes are violating agreements or international law and in the next decides unilaterally that the United States will not abide by international law or international agreements when to do so conflicts with administration policy. What kind of image does that create for America, the Nation that since its founding has championed respect for the rule of law by all nations?

Mr. Speaker, the action of the administration, even though it is legally ineffective, is ill-advised and unworthy of our country. Accordingly, I am today introducing legislation declaring that the action of the Secretary of State on April 6, 1984, in attempting to withdraw for 2 years the acceptance by the United States of the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court is null and void. Since the administration seems determined to play fast and loose with the World Court declaration, the Congress has an obligation to the Nation and the world to see to it that the administration is overruled. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.●

SANDERS' GRADUATION CEREMONY REMARKS

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like the following remarks made by James C. Sanders, Administrator of the Small Business Administration, to be included in the RECORD. Mr. Sanders made these remarks on May 3, 1984, at the graduation ceremony of Gulf Coast Community College in Panama City, FL. His remarks are quite inspiring, as you will see.

THE SUMMIT OF YEARS FOUR SCORE

(By Samuel Ullman)

Youth is not a time of life. It's a state of mind. It's a temper of the will, a quality of the imagination,

A vigor of the emotions, a predominance of courage over timidity, of the appetite for adventure over love of ease.

Nobody grows old by merely living a number of years. People grow old only by deserting their ideals.

Years wrinkle the skin, but to give up enthusiasm wrinkles the soul.

Worry, doubt, self-distrust, fear and despair—these bow the head and turn the growing spirit to dust.

Whether 60 or 16, there is in every being's heart the love of wonder, the sheer amazement at the stars and the starlike things and thoughts,

The undaunted challenge of events, the unfailing childlike appetite for what-next, and the joy of the game of living.

You are as young as your faith, as old as your doubt;

As young as your self-confidence, as old as your fear;

As young as your hope, as old as your despair.

So long as your heart receives messages of beauty, cheer, courage, grandeur and power from the earth, from man and from the infinite, so long are you young.

When the wires are all down, and all the central places of your heart are covered with the snows of pessimism and the ice of cynicism,

Then, and only then, are you grown old indeed, and may God have mercy on your soul.

Live every day of your life as though you expect to live forever.

As I look out over your suntanned faces today, I have the sense of the youth and life that this poem describes. It is fitting that your graduation from Gulf Coast Community College occurs during the heart of springtime, when growth, development, and maturation actually can be felt with the hands, seen with the eyes, and smelled in the air. I see and feel this exuberance of life within you.

All of the best emotions of the heart and soul of America are evident today at this special occasion. Within the graduates, of course, there is a feeling of relief—the papers have been turned in and the tests have been completed. With your academic burdens behind, life looms ahead of you like a blank slate. Certainly this must be a time of great satisfaction as many of you can bask in the glow of a job well done. Within parents, there is a pride that is contagious as they see a fulfillment of their dreams, but beyond this personal satisfaction, you are exhibiting the hope for a better future that one generation desires for its offspring, with one generation sweating for the betterment of the new. Your hopes are not only of educating your children, but of maintaining the tradition of economic freedom and prosperity that exists in this country. In a sense, a torch is being passed from one generation to another with the charge to you graduates to continue to kindle the fire that has been so graciously laid before you. Our hope is to ignite your souls with desire to carry out our dreams in sustaining and improving this great land by setting and reaching loftier goals than we were able to attain.

Here in the United States, this spirit of growth and progress seems to be more intense than any other place throughout the world. We see it in the early patriots' vision of America as a city set on a hill, the scene of the penniless Ben Franklin, entering the streets of Philadelphia personifying the rags to riches dream so inherently American.

Alexis de Toqueville visited this country in the 1830's and travelled throughout the young democracy to see what drove the American people, what made them tick. He was constantly amazed at the determination of our entrepreneurs. In "Democracy in America" Toqueville compares the American to the European merchant. In this case he mentions sea traders, but I think this comparison applies across the board.

"The European sailor navigates with prudence; he sets sail only when the weather is favorable; if an unforeseen accident befalls him, he puts into port; at night he 1 furls a portion of his canvas; and when the whitening billows intimate the vicinity of land, he checks his course and takes an observation of the Sun.

The American neglects these precautions and braves these dangers. He weighs anchor before the tempest is over; by night and by day he spreads his sails to the wind; such damage as his vessel may have sustained from the storm, he repairs as he goes along; and when he at last approaches the end of his voyage, he darts onward to the shore as if he already descried a port.

"I cannot better explain my meaning," Tocqueville says, "than by saying that the Americans show a sort of heroism in their manner of trading. The American does not follow calculation, but an impulse of his nature."

This American spirit of progress is able to flourish because genuine freedom of choice really exists. Nowhere else in the world can an entrepreneur identify a need, choose a type of business, implement a strategy for success, and develop goals within his own grasp. We hear of wonderful systems in countries such as Japan and Great Britain, but even these educational and vocational choices are made for you at an early age. In the United States, we alone decide what we will do with our lives. This complete freedom, coupled with an intense spirit, have made this country as great as it is today.

Americans have always had a drive for a richer and fuller life. Edward A. Filene described our pathway to prosperity when he said, "The keynote of progress, we should remember, is not doing away with what is bad; it is replacing the best with something better." A perfect example of this American brand of initiative is the fast food industry. In both the hamburger chain business and the fried chicken business, Americans could have looked at both McDonalds and Kentucky Fried Chicken and said, "These are successful, so no one will be able to successfully compete." It is a good thing that opinion is not mentioned in the boardrooms of Burger King, Wendy's Popeyes, Church's, and Roy Rogers. These takers, or as I call them, pioneers of the last frontier, are constantly expanding opportunities by building free markets that ignite dynamic investment and development.

Until recently, an unhealthy environment for entrepreneurs and small business existed. High taxes, high interest rates, and high inflation which were masking economic realities for years finally began to take their toll on the economy of the world. The result was poor purchasing power, lack of investment incentives and consequently high unemployment and low productivity.

Now this downswing has been turned around, and as the recent President's report on small business indicates, small business is at the cutting edge of recovery. As the Administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration, I feel that I have the best job in Washington. In 1983, small business provided 50 percent of the work force, two out of three new jobs, 42 percent of sales, 38 percent of the gross national product, over 600,000 new incorporations and a 19 percent growth in business proprietorships and partnerships. Even during the recession period of 1982 when big business lost 1.5 million jobs, small business created 2.5 million jobs. Small business thus created all of the 1 million net jobs in 1983, accentuating small businesses ability for success during poor economic times and the fact that small business spearheaded our current recovery. Although small businesses were more productive during the recession period than big business, absolute growth occurs only when economic conditions encourage expansion and investment. Small business is surely the biggest business in America.

This past week I have had the difficult task of choosing the Small Business Person of the Year. It was a tough job because there are so many worthy winners who have seen the opportunities available to them and have worked toward fulfilling their dreams. One of my favorite stories is the rise to success of Ginnie Johnasen, Inc. The business started in 1978 while Ginnie was in college. She needed a belt to wear with casual slacks and nothing she saw was striking enough. After making and wearing several of her own creations, fellow students wanted to buy them.

Ginnie began her business with $1,500 in orders. Now 24 years old and president of a company which grosses over $7 million in sales, her company manufactures 57 different accessory products lines, and employs 65 people, most of whom happen to be women.

Another interesting story is the growth of R & D Machine of Aston, Pa. Andy Ruszkay and Michael Draviczky escaped from Communist Hungary under a hail of Russian gunfire in 1957. Upon arriving in America, their first adverse business condition to overcome was that neither of them could speak, read, or write English. They were determined to succeed, however and were hired as machinists in a shop. In 1965, Andy and Mike formed a partnership and started their own machine shop. Just as the business started to flourish, their shop, which had grown from 4 to 40 people, was hit by a flood. Even though the water reached the ceiling and the damage was devastating, these entrepreneurs never gave up. From a business that was started out of a garage and trailer, they are now a firm that has completed over 200 Government contracts, the last being for $1 million to the Department of the Navy.

An interesting sidelight to this success story occurred when I toured their plant last month. After seeing all of the computerized systems and machines, I commented on how intelligent one had to be to run such a healthy business. Mike turned toward me and said, "I will tell you just how smart we are. Soon after arriving in America, we received our first paycheck and went to the grocery store. Since neither of us could read English, we decided that some of the best items seemed to be the large blue cans with cherry pie and fried chicken on the label. We were so smart that we bought twelve large cans of this bargain so we could have dinner and dessert. Unfortunately for us, they were twelve cans of Crisco."

All citizens have the right to partake of the American dream in their own fashion. The opportunities in the business sector for the adventurous are limitless. Successful entrepreneurs possess courage, strong character, initiative, the desire to work long and hard, and the ability to be flexible—qualities that most college students are well acquainted with. There are no real short cuts to success, however. Potential small business owners must have a product that is in demand, a knowledge of fundamental business practices, imagination, besides being prepared for hard work. Too often we hear stories of bad breaks; in successful small business you make your own breaks. To paraphrase President Eisenhower, "If you want to stay in the game, you must be willing to play with the cards you were dealt."

There is no doubt that economic and political freedom are inseparably tied to each other. Real individual freedom exists when people are able to build free markets to create a flowering of economic growth. When countries look for leadership in attaining freedom, they look to the United States. We still are and will continue to be the real hope of the world for free enterprise. It is our responsibility to spread the good news of economic freedom. This road of responsibility is not an easy one, but it is the right and only one. Small business is the wave of the future and the opportunities are available for those who seek them. As Theodore Roosevelt said: "Far better it is to dare mighty things to win glorious triumphs, even though checkered by failure, than to take rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much, because they live in the gray twilight that knows not victory nor defeat."●

SIEGMUND SPIEGEL: AN OUTSTANDING AMERICAN

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues an individual whose impressive record of accomplishments in his chosen profession is surpassed only by his dedication and commitment to serving the needs of his fellow man. I refer to Mr. Siegmund Spiegel whose life embodies the humanitarian principles and standards of excellence to which many men aspire, but few achieve.

The United Jewish Appeal and the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies (UJA/Federation) will pay tribute to this outstanding citizen at a special breakfast in his honor on May 20. I can think of no person more deserving of this honor.

As a child and young man in Nazi Germany, Sig Spiegel developed a strong sense of survival and unity of spirit with his fellow Jews, which has directed his life ever since. He escaped the horrors of Hitler's destruction of the Jewish people during the war and arrived a refugee in the United States.

With great determination and talent, overcoming many obstacles, Sig became a licensed architect known and respected for his professional abilities. His many achievements in his chosen profession have won Sig the respect and admiration of his colleagues, and have earned him leadership positions in the architectural field. He is past director of the Long Island Chapter, American Institute of Architects; a member of the Long Island Builders Institute and an honorary life member of its board of directors; an associate member of the Building Inspectors Association of Nassau County; and a member of the Nassau County Rent Guidelines Board.

Despite the time and effort Sig puts into his daily professional responsibilities, he works tirelessly for the benefit of his fellow man. Sig's record of service to the community is long and distinguished. He was chiefly responsible for the organization 13 years ago of the architects, engineers, builders, and real estate division of the UJA/Federation and has remained an active member and significant influence ever since. He is a former president of the Central Nassau Unit of the American Cancer Society; a member of the Kiwanis; and past president of the chamber of commerce. Sig's unselfish commitment to the service of the handicapped, emotionally disturbed children, and the elderly is worthy of the highest commendation.

An esteemed and involved member of the Jewish community as well, Sig serves as executive vice president of the Long Island Regional Board of the Anti-Defamation League; as an Associate of Hadassah; and as a member of the UJA/Federation Cabinet, Long Island.

As one who has been privileged to enjoy Sig's friendship, I would like to express my deepest personal gratitude for his years of outstanding public service to the community, and congratulate him on his many, many personal and professional achievements. I extend to Sig my warmest wishes for happiness and fulfillment in the years ahead. He is in the truest sense an outstanding American.●

BILL POTHOFF: FINE ATHLETE—INCOMPARABLE COACH

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, Bill Pothoff, a Harbor City resident, is retiring from teaching and coaching after an eventful career spanning 36 years with area public schools. A dinner will be held in his honor Thursday evening, May 10, at Nizetich's, an elegant restaurant in San Pedro. In anticipation of the upcoming evening's main event, I would like to make a few remarks about the honored guest.

Bill is a graduate of San Pedro High School and the University of Southern California. As a high school and university student, he proved an exceptional athlete, setting high school records in track for the 1,320 yard and the mile distances, and participating on the track teams at Compton Junior College and USC. His coaching career marks a noteworthy extension of Bill's own successes as an athlete.

He has served as track coach at Jordan, WA, and Banning High Schools. Each of his teams captured city track championships: Jordan High School in 1955, Washington High School in 1965, and Banning High School in 1976. He also coached Banning's sophomore cross-country team to the city championship in that same year. Some of the young athletes Bill coached include 1980 Olympian Toni Campbell; USC and Oakland Raider great Clarence Davis; NCAA champion Paul Kerry; and Daniel Everage, the first city resident to put the shot beyond 60 feet.

But Bill's achievements are not limited to athletics. He has been a fine teacher, father, and civic leader. He has three children—Clark, Susan, and Wendy—and a grandchild, Forrest Benson. Within the community, Bill is active with the American Legion—the School Master's Post—the USC Alumni Association—the Trojan Club—the Trojan Coaches Club, and the U.S. Marine Corps Association. He also serves as the director of the Lido Isle Yacht Club's youth sailing program; as assistant scoutmaster for Newport Beach's Boy Scout Troop 449, and as a volunteer for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. He is a veteran who served in the Marine Corps during World War II and the Korean conflict and held the rank of major when he left the Marine Reserve.

Mr. Speaker, my wife, Lee, and I would like to wish Bill Pothoff the very best during the years ahead. We hope Thursday evening's celebration marks but the midpoint of his many contributions and accomplishments.●

TRIBUTE TO PAUL LAKE

HON. CLARENCE D. LONG

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to honor a very special constituent. A respected civic leader and close personal friend, Paul Lake, is now retiring after three decades working for Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

Thirty-one years ago, Paul Lake began working for Metropolitan Life, as their agent in the small town of Lookout, MD. In February 1970, he was promoted to the Perry district and since 1980 has had responsibility for the Belmar district. It is no wonder that now, upon his retirement, Metropolitan Life honors Paul Lake as an exemplary model of a private sector employee who has contributed to his community.

And the contributions are many.

For over 25 years, Paul Lake has been a Boy Scout leader and has also served as Boy Scout commissioner. Among his other civic responsibilities are his service on the Harford County Board of Appeals, the Harford County Planning and Zoning Commission, and the State of Maryland Crime Commission. He has also served as both State and Federal chairman of the Life Underwriters' Association. While doing all this, Paul has still found time to serve as administrative chairman of his church, St. Paul's Lutheran.

Deeply committed to improving his community through direct civic action, Paul has been a leader in local politics. I first came to know him in 1966, when we both served on the Non-partisan Committee to Defeat the Parallel Bay Bridge. I was later present when he was inaugurated as president of the First District Democratic Club. In 1968, Paul and I began our close relationship when he agreed to serve as vice chairman of my reelection campaign. Later, he took on the position of treasurer, a critical position of responsibility which he has handled flawlessly over the years. Perhaps more than any other member of the community, I owe Paul Lake a debt of gratitude.

Today, I want to share with the Members of Congress, what the citizens of the Second Congressional District of Maryland, as well as the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., have known for years: The invaluable contributions of Paul Lake, husband and father, businessman and citizen, and above all, good friend. In all my career, rarely have I ever known anyone who gave so much and demanded so little in return. I join all of Paul's fellow workers at Metropolitan Life, as well as his wife and children, in honoring him at this milestone in his career, and look forward to his continued involvement with the public life of his community.●

STANDARDIZED LIFEVESTS SHOULD BE A REQUIREMENT ON AIRPLANES

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, recently, I introduced legislation, H.R. 5518, that imposes a safety standard on the commercial aviation industry.

This bill will require our commercial airline fleet to carry FAA-approved lifevests. As you may know, much of the overwater emergency equipment in use today is old and out of date and resembles the design of a safety device manufactured in the 1930's and 1940's. Even worse, is the fact that the regulations governing overwater operations have remained virtually unchanged for over 40 years.

Today, FAA regulations require lifevests only for those flights that fly 50 nautical miles beyond the shoreline. This regulation makes no sense when one takes into consideration that 215 air terminal airports in the United States have large bodies of water surrounding their approach and departure areas. In fact, approximately 70 percent of all daily flights in the United States either land or depart over water. However, it is estimated that 75 percent of these planes are flying without life-preserving vests.

I might add that one of the major faults of the present FAA regulations is that there is no requirement for a single standardized lifevest. As a matter of fact, there are three lifevests presently in use, each of which requires a different procedure for use. Even worse, two of the types have extremely low floating capacity.

During this, my first term in Congress, and as a member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, I have become increasingly more alarmed and concerned about the FAA's refusal to accept or even acknowledge the dire need for a strong Federal policy that will insure the highest degree of protection for air travelers, in the event there is an overwater accident. Test after test has proven that flotation cushions dependability is highly questionable and in many areas, useless.

What makes this matter further outrageous, is that these flotation devices could easily be replaced by effective, low cost vests. A one time cost to purchase these standardized vests would add only 5 cents to the cost of every airline ticket purchased, for the first year only. The new modern vest, has a 10-year service life, and maintenance is estimated at an additional 3 cents per passenger per year. A cost this low could easily be absorbed into a ticket price.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you to allow consideration of this bill as soon as possible. I believe the Members of this body will agree that we should not wait until a catastrophic accident occurs before we take a serious look at the situation.●

BAUDER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL STUDENTS RAISE MONEY TO RESTORE OUR NATION'S SYMBOL OF LIBERTY AND FREEDOM

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the Statue of Liberty stands at the entrance to New York Harbor as a symbol of freedom for the world. For the millions of immigrants who have entered our Nation through New York, the statue is a sign of hope that their dreams will someday be realized in their new homeland.

Now 98 years old, the Statue of Liberty is badly in need of repair. Our Nation's schoolchildren have taken up the cause and begun a campaign to raise a large part of the $30 million needed to restore this great national landmark. I am proud to say that students from Bauder Elementary School in Seminole, FL, which I represent, have raised $11,700 for this cause, the largest amount of any school in the Nation.

Friday morning, I had the honor of receiving a check from the students at Bauder on behalf of the Statue of Liberty Ellis Island Foundation. The check was the culmination of many hours of hard work by the students who raised the money through numerous projects.

It is most symbolic that our Nation's students are leading the campaign to restore the Statue of Liberty. More than a century ago, children raised a large portion of the $270,000 necessary to build a base for the statue, which was presented as a gift to our Nation by the people of France. I am confident that the same resourcefulness and energy shown by our Nation's children 100 years ago will make the current campaign a success.

Just as the Statue of Liberty stands with her torch of freedom and hope, the spirit and enthusiasm of our children is our Nation's source of hope for the future. I was proud to be with the students at Bauder Elementary School Friday because their expression of patriotism and belief in our Nation is a sign that the future of the United States will be in strong and able hands.●

NATIONAL RAISIN WEEK

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, Mr. RICK LEHMAN, Mr. "CHIP" PASHAYAN, Mr. BILL THOMAS, and myself, I would like to salute National Raisin Week which will be held from April 27 to May 8.

It is during this week that we celebrate the achievements of the California raisin industry which has worked to put maximum emphasis on the promotion of its products. The California raisin industry has continued to fight to counter the loss of almost one-half of its export markets to subsidized international competitors. In light of the greatest market challenges ever faced in its history, we give special recognition to this agricultural industry.

In the United States, an average of more than 250,000 tons of raisins are produced in a normal crop year within a radius of 125 miles of Fresno, CA. In a big crop year, total production often exceeds 300,000 tons. California produces virtually all of the U.S. raisin supply and nearly one-third of the world's raisins.

The success of the raisin industry is of great significance to the economic welfare of many thousands of U.S. residents who are involved in the production, processing, and marketing of this product. Raisins are purchased by millions of consumers to be used in a variety of ways from eating out of hand as a nutritious snack food, to use in cooking and bakery products, to a special addition to cereal, as well as a multitude of other enjoyable culinary uses.

The healthful characteristics of California raisins are emphasized by the recognition accorded this high-energy product by the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.

Special recognition is being given to the California Raisin Advisory Board (Calrab) for its aggressive advertising, promotion, and research activities. Utilizing funds provided by participating producer and processor members, Calrab carries on its program of advertising and promotion both in the United States and in 17 countries throughout the world, all in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Foreign Agricultural Service.

High commendation is due also to the Raisin Bargaining Association, which has brought growers and packers together in a concerted and successful effort to give them a better voice in marketing. All raisin growers and packers deserve a great deal of credit for their efforts on behalf of this vital industry.

Also meriting special commendation in the raisin industry is the work of the Federal Raisin Advisory Board and the Federal Raisin Administrative Committee, who operate under a Federal marketing order. They have done so much to bring about the orderly marketing of raisin crops and have been highly instrumental in development of export markets.

The raisin industry, which effectively utilizes the self-help tools of sales promotion and advertising in the best American tradition, deserves a special salute during National Raisin Week.●

SAFETY OF FOOD ADDITIVES

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, with over 60,000 manmade chemicals in use in the United States today, we certainly have a continuing duty to identify those few that threaten human health—especially those which might cause cancer. The public has a right to be protected from hazardous substances in the general living environment.

On the other hand, our Nation has become increasingly fearful of exposure to insignificant traces of chemicals—a perception which is unreasonable and unnecessary. Moreover, certain elements of the consumer protection movement have become adept at building emotional momentum against the use of chemical substances in general—even at parts per billion.

One aspect of the problem is the nebulus language of the Delaney clause in the Food Additives Amendment of 1958 to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act which mandates that:

> No additive shall be deemed to be safe if it is found to induce cancer when ingested by man or animal, or if it is found, after tests which are appropriate for the evaluation of the safety of food additives, to induce cancer in man or animals * * *"

For example, under the Delaney clause, the Department of Health and Human Services is considering banning the continued use of FD&C red No. 3, a color additive used in foods such as maraschino cherries for over 75 years. This prohibition would be based on a single, controversial study where laboratory animals—male rats which gulped down ridiculous quantities of red No. 3 at the highest dose level of 4 percent of the diet—developed thyroid adenomas—benign tumors. In and of itself, such evidence is not appropriate for evaluating the safety of red No. 3. In fact, for a 157-pound man to equal this feeding level, he would have to consume over 700,000 No. 2½, 20 ounce cans of fruit cocktail—containing red cherries—every day of his life. Furthermore, many notable scientific experts have reviewed the available data on this coloring and believe it safe, stating that the thyroid effect is directly related to the excessive dosage administered to the animals.

While I believe that the Federal Government should maintain its diligence in banning dangerous carcinogens, we should not prohibit the continued use of beneficial substances which do not threaten human health in the normal course of daily living. Premature or unreasonable regulatory action will only devastate vital U.S. industries and hurt consumers. In other words, let us not throw out the baby with the bathwater.

Last month, an article concerning microchemophobia—the fear of trace amounts of chemicals—appeared in Newsweek. The author, Mr. Keith Barrons, underscores the absurdity of this attitude. I commend the article to my colleagues' attention.

NOT TOO MUCH PEPPER, THANK YOU

(By Keith C. Barrons)

For dinner last evening my wife and I had sautéed shrimp with mushrooms. In addition to the arsenic that came with the shellfish, the mushrooms provided us with hydrazine, the baked potato with solanine and the celery with furocoumarin. All three compounds are carcinogenic.

The carrots in our mixed vegetables contained carotene, which converts to vitamin A in the body. This vitamin, essential in the amounts we ordinarily ingest, is a teratogen and harmful to the liver at highly excessive levels. The alfalfa-sprout topping on our salad contained canavanine, which is associated with defects in the immune system. The black pepper carried the mutagen safrole. Chocolate cake provided theobromine, which can activate various carcinogens, and in addition to caffeine, the coffee contained about 250 milligrams per cup of the mutagen chlorogenic acid.

The world around us abounds in nature's toxic substances, and our food is no exception. The scientific literature lists many natural components of foods that are known to be harmful to laboratory animals, but only at dietary levels considerably in excess of likely human intake.

Nonetheless, many Americans have succumbed to a new fear—and one that could in the long run lead to an ever-lowering quality of life. I refer to the current epidemic of "microchemophobia," or the fear of minute traces of chemicals.

GRAINS AND NUTS

In defining a poison my old biochemistry teacher told his classes, "a poison is too much." Yet my wife and I have not consumed too much of nature's chemical oddities. How, pray tell, have we each passed three score and ten while ingesting a myriad of natural toxins, including alfatoxin, an exceedingly potent carcinogen sometimes found in grains and nuts as well as nitrosamines formed in the curing of meats? The answer: our natural defense mechanisms. Were if not for these remarkable biochemical systems we would long since have succumbed.

In tests with laboratory animals some of nature's toxic substances have proven more poisonous than any man-made chemical, and their concentrations in food are generally much greater than the synthetic impurities that have generated so much fear. In a notable paper in Science, Dr. Bruce N. Ames, chairman of the biochemistry department at the University of California at Berkeley, concludes that our intake of natural toxins is ". . . probably at least 10,000 times higher than the dietary intake of man-made pesticides."

If our built-in defense mechanisms can handle relatively large amounts of toxic chemicals that happen to be synthesized by the most accomplished chemist of all, a living plant, there is every reason to believe we can cope with the far lesser amounts of man-made compounds, traces of which occasionally find their way into our food. Our fears should be quelled by the fact of our ever-increasing longevity—now more than 74 years compared with 50 years or less before chemicals were used to help assure an abundance of food.

Microchemophobia has multiple origins. There is the antichemical "lobby" that nurtures and magnifies each report of a real or speculative risk. Parts per billion are often equated with an imminent hazard regardless of the magnitude required to harm laboratory animals. There is never a reminder of the minuscule nature of one part per billion.

A recent example of an overblown pesticide episode contributing to microchemophobia was the flap over EDB residues in grain. Today's knowledge of the carcinogenicity of this compound may well support the cessation of its use as an insecticide. Some food samples analyzed exceeded current safety guidelines, but the destruction of foodstuffs because they contained lesser amounts was uncalled for. With few exceptions, the contaminated samples had less than one thousandth the level of EDB that was found to cause cancer in rats. Add to this margin of safety the fact that grain-derived foods are only a portion of the human diet, and further, that much of any EDB present would be reduced on cooking or baking, and the risk fades into insignificance.

Also contributing to the fear of minute traces of chemicals is an overly cautious interpretation of the so-called Delaney clause in the law dealing with safety of foods. It states that no substance will be permitted in food ". . . if it is found after tests which are appropriate for the evaluation of the safety of food additives, to induce cancer in man or animals . . ." Note the word appropriate. Is it not appropriate to consider safety margins or the spread between likely human exposure and the amount required to induce cancer in the laboratory when analysts interpret toxicological data?

POTATO BLIGHT

If we are to avoid pest-induced food shortages and vector-transmitted diseases, mankind must defend itself by one means or another. In spite of much progress with nonchemical controls, pesticides are still vital to most integrated pest-management programs and, indeed, are often our first line of defense. For example: we can control potato late-blight, the same disease that caused the great Irish potato famine of the 1840s.

We will continue to ingest nature's toxins, including, no doubt, many yet to be discovered in our everyday foods. But if we are to continue to have the abundance we have been blessed with in recent decades, traces of man-made chemicals will certainly find a way into our food—from pest control, packaging, protection in storage and other sources. Given today's highly sophisticated analytical techniques, these minuscule amounts can be detected, even at the parts-per-trillion level.

The only sensible course is to follow the recommendations of authorities and eat a varied diet with less fat than is now commonly consumed and include plenty of fruits, vegetables and fiber-rich cereal products. I would also put some faith in our laws and our regulators. On the whole I think they have served us well. Remember, never have people lived as long and amid such abundance as in the technically advanced world of 1984.●

SAN JACINTO JUNIOR COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS GIVEN AT PASADENA, TX, MAY 5, 1984

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on May 5, 1984, I had the honor of addressing the graduating class of San Jacinto Junior College in Pasadena, TX. In my remarks I urged the students to prepare for the future while considering the importance of our history and heritage as Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I am impressed that the students of today are seriously accepting this challenge and am optimistic about America's future because of their ambition and spirit. In recognition of these fine young men and women I offer my remarks for the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

Thank you. President Blue, distinguished guests, faculty, friends, and graduates, it is a very special honor to be with you at San Jacinto Junior College this commencement night. As always, I am grateful for the chance to be back at home here in the 25th District. I am proud of this academic community and I thank you for letting me share in such a memorable occasion.

San Jacinto Junior College, both in name and spirit embodies a vital part of our heritage. Not far from here is the great San Jacinto Battle Field, where less than 150 years ago a small army of Texans defeated a Mexican army numbering over a thousand. General Sam Houston, "The Raven", led that valiant fight to secure the independence of the Republic of Texas. We still have fighting "Ravens" at San Jacinto—Coach Ronnie Arrows and his winning basketball squad who recently took their second National Junior Basketball Championship. These modern-day Ravens are truly representative of the fighting spirit which makes all of Texas a wonderful place to live and work.

As we gather here to celebrate this, the 23rd commencement of San Jacinto Junior College, let us be aware of all that this occasion means to you as graduates, and to those of us assembled in your honor. First, We celebrate a turning point in your lives as students who have worked so diligently. We celebrate also the contributions of your friends and families, the dedication of your teachers, and their inspiration and patience in leading you to this point. Yet, on a greater scale, I believe we are celebrating the future and the promises that it holds for all of us.

The Philosopher Victor Hugo once said, "The future has many names. For the weak, it is impossible. For the faint-hearted, it is the unknown. For the thoughtful and the valiant, it is ideal. The challenge is urgent, the task is large, the time is now."

You are completing a phase of life's education . . . believe me learning never really ends. You will now go on to more classes or out into the working world. All of us may look forward to a better people and a brighter future because we have men and women such as you to help solve the problems of our society, in the 80's and beyond.

Higher education is one of the strongest vehicles you can have for entering society. Treasure your experiences here at San Jacinto and make them work for you. Be aware of your great heritage and set goals for the future. Your college degree has equipped you to better enjoy the freedoms of life in America while contributing to our growth as a people.

Our history is constantly building. 1984 will be remembered as an important and exciting year. We are witnessing great changes in America and exciting opportunities. The most visible sign of this is the presidential election this year. Tonight, thousands of would-be delegates are caucusing across Texas to show their support for one of the three Democratic presidential contenders. The Texas caucuses are a critical step in the 1984 race to the White House. Texas, tonight and this fall, will be an important factor in the election. No President since 1845 has been elected who did not carry Texas.

In a major election year, those of us who work for the electorate are scrutinized, sought out by friends and foes alike, examined, rejuvenated and invigorated. One of the necessary evils of holding elected public office is that of defending one's rights to be there in an election year. Speaking as one who ran several tough races in getting to Capitol Hill, I am no stranger to disappointments. I assure you that the joys of my finally getting to Congress far outweigh any frustrations I may have felt along the way. There are times, however, as a Freshman on the Hill, when I realize the struggle never ends.

President Eisenhower once said that "Politics should be the part-time profession of every citizen." I believe this is as true today as ever before. As you go on with your lives, many of you will enter business, some law, some medicine, others religion and social work. As you do so do not leave public affairs to others. Take this opportunity and become a participant in the public life of your community, your state and your nation.

We are blessed to be a part of one of America's most dynamic areas. From the suburbs to the industrial belt along our ship channel, we live in the most ethnically, economically, and politically diverse area in Texas. The time is now for each of you to become involved in this area's future. Resolve yourselves to give a high measure of public service and public support.

In addressing a group of university students in 1960, (then) Senator John F. Kennedy urged those young people to realize the vital role they had to play in America's future. He said, "We want students and graduates to recognize that this college and all the rest, have not been built up, have not been developed, merely to advance the private economic interest of its graduates. They have a greater purpose in mind. No college graduate can go out from any college today without being a man of his nation and a man of his time without pursuing in his own life, not only his private interest, but the welfare of this country."

This is our challenge, today. Our test, as political people involved in our community, is to focus on the fundamental problems which confront us. We must arm ourselves with the facts and with an historical knowledge upon which to gauge our future actions. The great statesman, the late Senator Henry Jackson once lamented, "the real tragedy is that Americans have failed to do their homework in history." Jackson believed that troubles are predictable and can be better handled if we Americans would study our past while looking ahead to our future.

Indeed nowhere is it easier to sustain that belief than in Houston. From certain angles, the downtown Houston skyline betrays not the smallest hint that it was created longer ago than yesterday. Who, looking at it, would not feel immune to history?

The irony is that among the nations of the earth, we are among the closest, chronogically, to the well springs of our history. Jefferson died when Lincoln was 17. Lincoln died when Woodrow Wilson was 8. Wilson died when Ronald Reagan was 13. To apply the same sort of calculation to Texas history, Susannah Dickenson, who was present at the Battle of the Alamo, died the year Sam Rayburn was born and Rayburn died in 1961, the year many of you were born.

In the space of barely more than two lifetimes, Texas, and less dramatically, the nation, has undergone more than one complete metamorphosis. More than once, men and women of vision and energy have recognized and seized on social and economic trends to reshape the world in which we live. It is our inheritance and our task not ony to recaputre this reward, but to reinvent it once again. If there is one lesson that the Texas experience teaches us, it is that in this sprawling, bountiful land, change is as certain as it is dramatic. America has never been a society frozen in the ice of conformity or stillness. As the 18th century Frenchman Jacques Maritain wrote, "Wait a moment, another current will appear and bring the first one to naught. A great country with as many windshifts as the sea."

Some of you may become involved in solving our area's mass transit problems. You may devote yourself to pollution control along the ship channel or to finding new ways to control flooding along our bayous. Perhaps you will fly aboard the Space Shuttle or be a part of our Johnson Space Center's development of the manned space station which is to be launched in 1991. Maybe you will enter politics and bring your talents to the councils of government. Your horizons are endless and the challenges you face are great. Celebrate the limitless possibilities that the future holds for you.

There is an ancient saying that, "In every age, there comes a time when leadership suddenly comes forth to meet the needs of the hour. And so there is no person who does not find his or her time, and there is no hour that does not have its leader." Each of you will have your time to lead—be active, be aware and eager in all that you do and all that you believe in. Build on your experiences here so that when the time comes for you to lead you will be ready.

Look inward. Find all that is of value and quality in your human spirit—the truth, faith and courage which comprise your individuality. I encourage you also to ask questions—do not merely accept what is told to you. A healthy skepticism tempered with reason will help you discern which course your actions should take. Make your education here your bridge into society's larger challenges and in turn a bridge to human progress. Your respect for your heritage, your vision of a brighter future and your individual achievements will help build a stronger Texas and a greater America for tomorrow.

Good luck to you all and thanks once again for inviting me to this special celebration.●

CONGRATULATIONS, MR. DUARTE

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my congratulations to Jose Napoleon Duarte. According to the unofficial count, he was victorious in the Salvadoran presidential elections. After a hard-fought campaign, the democratic process triumphed. Now, we should help him.

Today is a joyous and historic occasion for the people of El Salvador. They chose their President through a free and open democratic process. They faced guerrilla threats to exercise their right to vote. Mr. Duarte is El Salvador's first popularly elected civilian President in half a century. The democratic process worked.

Mr. Duarte is committed to social reform. He believes in the reconciliation of all Salvadorans interested in peace and social stability.

Obviously, Mr. Duarte needs our help if he is to accomplish these goals. We have delayed long enough on the issue of helping El Salvador. As a Washington Post editorial writer noted, we have run out of reasons for "nickel-and-diming" El Salvador. El Salvador now has a good and fairly elected President. Now, we in the Congress should focus on how we can help him shoulder the burden. As the Washington Post said today, he is a "President to bet on." His challenge is our challenge. The time, my friends, is now.●

MARLIN PINNELL—DEDICATED EDUCATOR

HON. GENE TAYLOR

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1984, Marlin Pinnell will retire after 41 years of truly dedicated service to the Diamond, MO, school system.

Marlin started as the coach, moved on to become principal, and for the past 27 years has been the superintendent of the Diamond R-IV School District.

Under his very able leadership the school system has grown and prospered providing thousands of young people with a quality education and a good start in life.

Marlin has been a dedicated educator and an outstanding administrator. He has provided leadership as a member of numerous education associations, as well as being a vigorous participant in civic activities and his church.

It is a considerable pleasure for me to extend my best wishes to Marlin and Jean Pinnell as they close one chapter of their life and begin another. May their future be as rewarding as their past.●

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO HON. WILLIAM H. RISSER OF OAKLAND, NJ, ESTEEMED SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS AND OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY LEADER

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 11, the residents of Oakland, officials of the State of New Jersey, fellow educators, relatives, and friends will join together in testimony to a distinguished citizen, esteemed educator, outstanding school administrator, and good friend—the Honorable William H. Risser—who is retiring from his high office of public trust as superintendent of schools of Oakland, NJ. His standards of excellence in education and exemplary public service have brought area-wide recognition to Oakland through its excellent schools and the quality of its educational program. The results of good education reach far into the future and such outstanding public service is applauded by all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you and our colleagues here in the Congress will want to join with me in extending our deepest of appreciation to Superintendent Risser and share the pride of his good wife, Barbara; daughters Gail, Jill, and Kim; sons-in-law, Dr. Henry A. Budd, Jr., Dwight A. Healy, and Jan P. Lower; and grandchildren, Henry A. Budd III, Jeffrey W. Budd, Stephanie G. Budd, Elizabeth B. Healy, Amanda K. Healy, and Kyra L. Lower upon this milestone of achievement in their family endeavors. Gail is a New Jersey certified registered nurse, Jill is a New Jersey and New York certified teacher, and Kim is a Michigan certified special education and elementary teacher with an endorsement as a learning disabilities teacher consultant.

Mr. Speaker, when you reflect upon the fact that the cultural, historical, and economic achievements—even the basic health, well being and longevity of a State and Nation—depend in large measure upon how well we educate each generation charged with the trust of carrying out its responsibilities and traditions, we can indeed be proud of Bill Risser's outstanding contribution to the quality of life and way of life for all of our people.

There is much that can be said of Superintendent Risser and his 31 years of service in Oakland, NJ, plus 9 years as a teacher in Ho-Ho-Kus, N.J., and 3 years of service in our Armed Forces during World War II. Sincerity, dedication, and a persistence in striving to achieve improvements in education have been evident throughout his career. He also has served as a library board trustee in Oakland and was elected president for three terms. Superintendent Risser was a member of the Oakland Rotary and a past president of the club, a charter member of the Oakland Elks and a charter member of the board of the Educational Foundation for Human Sexuality at Montclair State College. He is a 22-year member of New Jersey Schoolmasters and a member of the County Superintendents Association legislative committee.

Superintendent Risser has indeed earned the highest respect and esteem of all of us and we are especially proud of three special honors that were extended to him. In 1964 the Oakland Teachers Association held a dinner in his honor and presented him with a signed scroll and an engraved watch as, "A small token of the high esteem in which we hold you as an educator, a superintendent and a friend." In 1969, he was nominated by COGS—Citizens of Oakland for Good Schools—and was named Oakland's Outstanding Citizen of the Year, the Oak Leaf Award presented by the Oakland JayCees. In 1972 William Paterson College in Wayne recognized William H. Risser as an outstanding alumnus of the college.

Bill Risser came from a modest background, the youngest of six children of Ernest and Jessie Risser. Four sisters and a brother shared the family residence on the west side of Paterson, NJ. The family weathered the Depression except for Bill's father who passed away in 1934. In 1937, after graduating from Paterson Central High School, with the urging and support of his mother, Bill entered Paterson State Teachers College, graduating with a B.S. in education in 1941. He was elected president of the senior class in college and was editor of the college newspaper, The Beacon. His teaching career began in September 1941 in the Ho-Ho-Kus public school and was interrupted in January 1943 by the President's call to military service in World War II.

On April 1, 1944, Bill married Barbara Hendry, then a teacher in Ho-Ho-Kus, and their first child, Gail, was born in June 1945. After serving overseas for a year, in February 1946 he returned to civilian life and Ho-Ho-Kus school as a teacher and director of an adult education program. Graduate study followed and by 1948 he earned his master's degree in education from Teachers College, Columbia University. By 1955, Bill completed the graduate work necessary for a professional diploma in administration.

In 1953 he was appointed administrative principal of the 11-room Oakland Public School, with approximately 300 children plus 70 high school students who attended Pompton Lakes High School. In 1955 an eight-room addition to the school was completed and occupied. In the same year, Franklin Lakes, Oakland, and Wyckoff voted to form a regional high school district, now called the Ramapo Indian Hills Regional High School District, for grades 9 to 12.

Oakland continued to grow rapidly and in 1957 a second school was planned. Heights School was completed in 1959. A third school was needed plus an addition to Heights School and both were approved in 1959. The nine-room addition to Heights School was completed in 1960, and Manito School was completed and fully occupied in the fall of 1961. Growth continued and a fourth school was approved in 1963. Dogwood Hill School was occupied in the fall of 1965 and was fully utilized that school year.

In 1968 the large Valley Middle School unit adjacent to the original building was approved and completed by 1970. The last school building project was approved and completed in 1972, which was the Manito School multipurpose area, including an auditorium, kitchen, and cafeteria, and a two-station physical education unit.

From 1952 to 1972 the school district expanded from 300 to 3,000 students. In 1955 a 4-year regional high school district was formed. Between 1954 and 1972, four schools and three additions were built in Oakland for the K–8 program. What had been a small "rural" school district in 1950 is now an all-inclusive school system, with an up-to-date 9-year, comprehensive program plus pre-kindergarten classes for handicapped children. Foreign languages, health/drug education and coping, plus computer education and an Algebra I course are some of the special offerings at the Valley Middle School that have been developed in the last decade.

Oakland's comprehensive educational program compares favorably with any school district in the country and has evolved and expanded under the supervision and guidance of our honoree, Bill Risser.

Mr. Speaker, Superintendent Risser has truly inspired and enriched the lives of many of our people in his educational endeavors of vital importance to the dynamics of our destiny and the quality of life for all of us. As he retires his official leadership position as superintendent of schools dedicated to the education and welfare of Oakland's children, we do indeed salute a distinguished citizen and great American—the Honorable William H. Risser of Oakland, NJ.●

MILITARY APPRECIATION WEEK

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, this week is a very important one for a certain county in Maryland's First District. On May 5, Harford County began celebrating Military Appreciation Week, a well-deserved annual tribute to one of the county's greatest assets, a military installation located in Aberdeen.

This installation, the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, is not only an economic mainstay of the county but also plays a vital role in maintaining strong national defense. These contributions are the reason that the Harford County Chamber of Commerce decided, 7 years ago, to sponsor the county's first Military Appreciation Week.

The members of the chamber deserve our special praise for sponsoring such a worthwhile event. Military Appreciation Week is both a well-deserved salute to the Proving Grounds and a celebration of the very special relationship between the county and the base. That relationship grows stronger every year. And this year, county residents have even more reason to honor APG for its many contributions to the county's financial and employment picture.

In fiscal 1983, the Aberdeen Proving Grounds had a total financial impact on Harford County of about $260 million. Local contractors will be involved in about 50 million dollars' worth of new construction at APG for which I obtained funding from Congress last year. That new construction includes a new weapons training facility, a medical research lab, new barracks and family housing units, and a new gas filter system.

Since President Wilson opened the Proving Grounds by Presidential proclamation in 1917, the base has developed into one of the most diverse military installations in the country and is instrumental in keeping our national security strong.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to pay special tribute to the man who has continued that tradition of excellence for the past 5 years. Gen. John J. Koehler, Jr., arrived at APG in November of 1979 and proved an excellent leader and administrator. As you know, the general is retiring after serving as Commander of the U.S. Army's Test and Evaluation Command longer than anyone in the command's 22-year history. Since you once met General Koehler yourself when you visited APG with me in 1981, I know you will join me in wishing him the very best in his retirement.

My sincerest appreciation also goes to the 12,000 military and civilian employees at APG who are involved in testing crucial pieces of equipment like the M–9 Ace vehicle, the 120-mm. gun on the M–1 tank, the Sergeant York air-defense gun system and the bulk of the Army's new family of military tactical vehicles. These testing activities are just a few examples of the crucial services these men and women perform.

I have every hope that this year's celebration of Military Appreciation Week will be the best ever and I would like to say again how proud I am of the Harford County Chamber of Commerce for establishing this very significant county salute to the Aberdeen Proving Grounds. I am certain that the unique bond between Harford County and the Aberdeen Proving Grounds will continue to grow stronger over the years.●

A CUSTOMS DISTRICT THAT MAKES SENSE

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be joined by my Pacific Northwest colleagues, Mr. FOLEY, Mr. AUCOIN, Mr. BONKER, Mr. LOWRY, Mr. MORRISON of Washington, Mr. ROBERT F. SMITH, and Mr. CRAIG in introducing legislation that will cost the Government next to nothing, but which will help stimulate international trade and create jobs in our area of the country.

We are introducing legislation today that will create a Columbia-Snake Customs District, which would be headquartered in Portland, OR.

We are taking this action because we believe our region has the potential to create many more opportunities for international trade and commerce if our shippers, brokers, freight forwarders, and others have the opportunity to work through just one customs office.

At present, the Customs Service has carved the natural geographic boundaries and the existing cargo routes of the Columbia-Snake River system into three customs districts—Portland, Seattle, and Great Falls, MT.—and two different customs regions—Los Angeles and Chicago.

In fact, to look at the current customs districts map, one would think that parts of the Columbia-Snake River system have no more connection with each other than New York City has with Portland.

For example, today the Port of Lewiston, just over the eastern Washington border in Idaho, reports to the Great Falls, MT, district office and ultimately to the Chicago regional office. Meanwhile, the Port of Clarkston, which is directly opposite Lewiston on the Washington side of the Snake River, reports and answers to the Seattle customs district office.

With the creation of a Columbia-Snake customs district, we can attain several important goals.

First, the legislation can serve as a new marketing tool for exporters seeking to tap Pacific Rim markets and importers working to promote the Columbia-Snake system as an attractive point of entry for imports.

Second, we will be able to communicate to our trading partners that we are a unique trading zone—something our exporters and importers have tried to do for some time—that can be easily accessed through just one customs district office.

Further, it will allow us to increase the cargo volume handled by the system, which is the only shallow-draft waterway handling barged containers in the United States.

The new Columbia-Snake customs district will include the existing Portland customs district—which is comprised of all of Oregon and a portion of southwest Washington—and will be expanded to include all of the counties in southern Washington directly opposite Oregon. It will also include Franklin, Adams, and Whitman Counties in Washington State as well as that part of Idaho south of the 47th parallel, which lies just to the north of Lewiston.

I have worked very closely with members of the Pacific Northwest trade and transportation communities in putting this proposal together, as well as with the Idaho Governor's office. The concept of a Columbia-Snake custom district has already been endorsed by the Pacific Northwest International Trade Association (PNITA), the Columbia River Customs Brokers & Forwarders Association and the Columbia-Snake Marketing Group, which is an organization of 34 ports on the Columbia-Snake River system.

The legislation we are introducing today as a united delegation is a commonsense, low-cost approach that will help us meet the international trade challenges of the future. And when we meet those challenges, jobs will be created, productivity will increase, and our economy will be one step closer to being anchored on solid ground.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE NURSES OF ST. JOHN'S EPISCOPAL HOSPITAL ON NURSE RECOGNITION DAY

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, May 6–12 is National Hospital Week/Nurse Recognition Week and it calls attention to the significant contributions nurses have made to our country's health care profession. It is important that we call attention to these health care professionals because each of us, at sometime or another, has had a personal experience in which we have been helped by a nurse. Often the experience is one that leaves a lasting impression on us, and we never get a chance to thank those who have provided us with their health care services.

May 9 is a particularly significant day in the Rockaways because it is Nurse Recognition Day at St. John's Episcopal Hospital in Far Rockaway, NY. I would like to extend my congratulations to this dedicated nursing staff which is an integral, and vital part of our community.

When I think about nursing, I appreciate the profession because it provides a wide variety of health care services. Nurses do not just observe, assess, and record symptoms, or monitor the reactions and progress of patients. They also administer medications, assist in the rehabilitation of patients, instruct patients and family members in proper health care maintenance. I have found that nurses have one of the most difficult duties in health care; maintaining a physical and emotional environment that promotes recovery. This requires the ability to deal with all the patient's needs, including their family.

The nurses of St. John's Hospital greatly affect the community and provide a stable health care force in the Rockaway's which attracts people to our area. I believe that Nurse Recognition Week and Nurse Recognition Day is important because it calls attention to the contributions of these nurses and helps us reaffirm our commitment to our health care services by continuing to demonstrate an understanding for the duties which are filled by the nursing profession.●

PEACE CORPS VOLUNTEER OF 1984—MARSHA MARTIN

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, in these days of funding cuts for social services, the full measure of contributions from volunteers in American society is being realized. Never before have volunteers, who give their time so selflessly, been so crucial to maintaining American standards of service to those less priviledged than others. This is National Volunteer Week and I am honored to bring to your attention the achievements of a young woman, Ms. Marsha Martin, who resides in my district.

Marsha is being honored today as one of the Outstanding Peace Corps Volunteers of 1984. To be chosen from among more than 5,000 Americans serving overseas is no small accomplishment. However, Marsha is used to great accomplishments. Marsha is a very special Peace Corps volunteer, because she is blind. She has overcome this disability and dedicated herself to helping others who are similarly afflicted.

Marsha is currently serving in Ecuador as an adviser in education for the blind on subjects such as orientation, mobility, daily life skills, and braille. Life in a lesser developed nation is never easy to adjust to yet Marsha has persevered and is providing an exceptional role model to her Ecuadorian counterparts, as well as her fellow Peace Corps volunteers.

Marsha is to be commended for more than her activities in Ecuador. As a student at Fresno State University, Marsha was recognized by many because of her running. She ran up to 20 miles a day without the aid of a dog. Using simply her sharp sense of hearing, Marsha would run all over campus with a running partner. Last year, Marsha decided she wanted to participate in the Fresno Volunteer Bureau's Triathalon. To do so she had to teach herself how to swim. It should come as no surprise by now to learn that Marsha ran all 6.2 miles, biked 26 miles, and swam 400 yards. Marsha placed third and was the only disabled competitor in the race.

Back home in Fresno, Marsha is known for independence and the tireless energy she exhibits teaching other blind individuals braille and mobility skills. She put in long hours at the Disabled Student Studies Center, as well as at the Fresno Volunteer Bureau. The many people I have spoken with in Fresno all miss her and look forward to her return from Ecuador.

Despite the wide variety of Marsha's accomplishments, one thing that everyone has mentioned in speaking of her is the wonderful cookies she makes. I have never tasted these cookies, but they must be good, everyone I spoke to about Marsha remarked on them.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed by the abilities of this young woman and extremely proud to represent in Congress such a remarkable individual. I am sure my colleagues will join with me in commending her perseverance, dedication, selflessness, and hardworking spirit. I would like to echo the quote of a woman who works with Marsha back home in Fresno: "She's a trouper."●

CONGRESS MUST NOT KEEP OUR YOUTH IDLE

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, Congress must not keep our youth idle. Some 3.5 million 16- to 24-year-olds cannot find jobs. The unemployment rate among teenagers approaches 20 percent. Yet the other body refuses to act on the bill to create an American Conservation Corps that the House passed by a vote of 301 to 87 last year. I agree with the following editorial from the New York Times which urges the Senate and the Reagan administration to push this legislation forward.

The editorial follows:

IDLERS, IN THE SENATE

A hundred thousand jobless young people are being held hostage on Capitol Hill. Or at least their jobs are. It's been a year since the House voted to create an American Conservation Corps—a new version of the New Deal's Civilian Conservation Corps. But the Senate dawdles and the Reagan administration gives no help.

There are 3.5 million 16 to 24-year-olds who can't find jobs—40 percent of the unemployed. There are a million fewer than last year, but the decline is small consolation to those still jobless. Despite recovery, their problems persist.

The House version of the conservation corps would spend $300 million a year for six years on summer work and training for 50,000 youths and year-round opportunities for 56,000 others. They'd work in every part of the country, in cities as well as forests, and they'd get schooling after work.

Not even the $1.8 billion in the House bill would make a very big dent in overall youth unemployment. But the Senate proposal would make an even smaller one—spreading only $200 million over three years. An eventual House-Senate compromise would probably raise that amount. The problem is that the Senate hasn't yet voted on its bill.

As chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Senator James McClure of Idaho calls the shots. He has already prevailed in getting the concept scaled down and ringed with restrictions, as if to make certain the forests won't be filled with kids from city slums. Even so, he's made no move for a floor vote. He seems to have been bargaining for something more. Perhaps the breakthrough on wilderness legislation will clear the way for Senate action on the conservation corps.

The Senator feels no heat from the White House, which has opposed the corps mainly on the ground that it would provide only "dead-end" jobs. That's a familiar argument, and one entirely off the point. No one advocates a career corps. Indeed, high turnover is expected. The idea is to give these frustrated young people temporary work and to let them develop work habits, because nothing is so "dead-end" as no job at all.●

NATIONAL CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS WEEK

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, during this week of May 6, our country recognizes an essential, though frequently overlooked, position within our criminal justice system. I speak of the national correctional officer.

It is befiting that we observe National Correctional Officers Week and pay tribute to the men and women responsible for the well-being and safety of not only detainees, but also the general public. As a member of a public safety agency, the correctional officer is charged with insuring the smooth and orderly operation of the prison facility as well as guaranteeing security.

The correctional officer must effectively deal with a diverse segment of America's population. A sense of fairness, diplomacy, and the ability to succinctly judge human nature are just a few of the traits a correctional officer displays on a daily basis.

The role of the correctional officer is a difficult one for it is imperative that he or she exhibit quick and accurate judgment when potentially explosive situations arise. A rare combination of the best qualities of a law enforcement officer and a counselor exist in the correctional officer.

Mr. Speaker, the contribution made by our country's correctional officers to the criminal justice system is extremely valuable and is something we cannot afford to ignore. This week let us not forget this important public servant. Instead, let us remember and honor a dedicated professional.●

SOLIDARITY SUNDAY

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise to pay tribute to the estimated 200,000 people who marched and lined the streets of Manhattan on May 6 for Solidarity Sunday.

This annual human rights rally once again demonstrated that Jews in the Soviet Union seeking permission to emigrate to freedom have not been forgotten. The unified voices of rage sent the clear message to the Soviet Union that no matter what type of propaganda it disseminates, we know better. There are at least 400,000 Soviet Jews awaiting permission to leave. Such denials will not quell their voices in the Soviet Union, or ours here.

The work done by organizers of the rally is deserving of commendation. At Sunday's rally support for the Soviet refuseniks was led by concerned citizens such as Broadway producer Joe Papp, New York Archbishop John O'Connor, and New York Governor Mario Cuomo.

I considered it an honor to participate in the rally on Solidarity Sunday and to speak out for those who cannot. The Soviet Union would do well to take note that such activity, and the demand for freedom will continue.●

TRIBUTE TO RAOUL WALLENBERG

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last week in a moving and wrenching ceremony, a symbolic ground breaking for the Holocaust Museum was held here in Washington. As we remember and commemorate this year the 40th anniversary of the Nazi occupation of Hungary and the beginning of the Holocaust in Hungary, it is significant and appropriate that we take note of Raoul Wallenberg.

Allan Kiron, himself a survivor of Auschwitz and now an American, has proposed a Wallenberg Watch to remember and remind ourselves of the unspeakable horror of that event and the spirit of compassion and humanity exemplified by Raoul Wallenberg.

For the benefit of my colleagues in the House, I place in the RECORD the proposal of Mr. Kiron. It deserves our serious consideration.

THE HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL

The proposal to build a Holocaust museum in our nation's capital faces a difficult challenge. As a survivor of Auschwitz, let me explain. The greatest crimes and atrocities committed against humanity did not occur inside the concentration camps; they occurred outside in the hearts and minds of people who were silent and indifferent.

The tragedy of self-delusion for those who were silent and indifferent was best described by Pastor Martin Niemoller, who wrote:

"In Germany, the Nazis came for the Communists, and I did not speak up because I was not a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak up because I was not a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I did not speak up because I was not a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I did not speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for Me. By that time there was no one to speak up for anyone."

Yes, we suffered from unspeakable atrocities, barbarism and degradation. Even death, the supreme freedom, can be denied under the rule of tyranny. When at one camp my 14-year-old body could no longer bear the hours and work under inhumane conditions, I asked the guard to shoot me. He replied that a bullet was too expensive for me. I was told I must die from exhaustion.

And yet, the bleeding flesh can heal, the broken bone can mend, but the torment of the mind suffering from the silence and indifference of others never heals and never mends. This torment, like a dagger, cut our last means of survival, hope. With no one willing to speak up, hope becomes hopeless; your perception of humanity is shattered and your will to live dies, because there is nothing left to live for. In a concentration camp you first die inside and then the body follows. The silence and indifference of the world at large killed the inside of most victims in the camps. The Nazis just destroyed their bodies. That is the legacy of silence and indifference.

The lessons of the Holocaust must not be limited to the question of memory: whether it is "evil to forget" or "is it necessary to remember"? These are mute questions.

The question of memory is mute because to remember one must first understand what one is remembering. The Holocaust cannot be understood at the present time. To remember without understanding is like painting without a canvas. It does not stick to anything.

The crucial question we must deal with is the understanding of who we are and what we are. The Holocaust, like space-time, revealed a new dimension of human nature: organized madness, unparalleled in the history of mankind. We are faced with a painful and difficult burden to understand and learn to what degree silence and indifference are part of this organized madness.

Goethe once stated, "With only the slightest shift in my character there is no crime that I could not commit".

Is there something in our psyche or genes, which individually or collectively can be triggered to breakdown our ability to judge humanely and reason with compassion?

Is it possible our lofty ideals about man's grandeur spawned and honed for centuries by philosophy and religion, are merely wishful thoughts floating on the sewers of human experience?

During the Nuremberg trials, the French prosecutor, Francois De Menthon asked:

"How can one explain how Germany, fertilized through the centuries by classic antiquity and by Christianity, by the ideals of liberty, equality and social justice, by the common heritage of Western humanism to which she has brought such noble and precious contributions, could have come to this astonishing return to primative barbarism?"

If it could happen in Germany what country is immune to suffer another Holocaust?

Only recently has the public been informed of the gruesome atrocities committed during World War II by Japan's Devils Brigade, which almost rivals the bestiality of the Nazi medical experiments.

Here, too, we have a nation steeped in culture and tradition fertilized by centuries of Shintoism, Bhuddism and Confucianism; and yet capable of organizing and employing a scientific community to carry out the most bestial medical experiments on innocent victims. How is this possible?

It is this universal quest to learn and understand ourselves and past events, more than anything else, which provides the basic legitimacy for establishing the Holocaust museum.

Another lesson of the Holocaust is the question of allocating responsibility. There could be no greater desecration of the memory of those who suffered and died than to blame exclusively the German people, or, even worse, the Nazis. The allocations of responsibility only to the actual perpetrators of crimes against humanity, absolves those who were silent and indifferent. Indeed, it would be a tragedy of Holocaust proportions if we fail to deal with the problems of silence and indifference, its causes and consequence and any possible solutions. Otherwise we would only reap an arid memorial for victims whose only hope before they died was that the lessons of the Holocaust be understood and not forgotten.

We simply cannot afford again to abdicate our responsibility and let silence and indifference stand unaccounted together with the missing elements of simple courage and common decency. Courage and decency are the high flying banners of free and responsible people, who made a covenant to keep and protect the standards of humanity.

Whenever I have a chance to speak up, I always stress the critical importance of fighting silence and indifference. I urge people to live by one single commandment, and all the other ten will follow. My commandment is to alleviate human suffering. The alleviation of human suffering is a universal maxim that encompasses all noble emotions and ideals of the human spirit and leaves little room for excuses. It requires acts and deeds.

For example, to what degree and how can we now marshal our collective voice and effort to temper tyrants and madmen from creating hell on earth?

Suppose periodically on a specific day at 8 p.m., we no longer choose apathy and instead turn off all our lights for 60 seconds, to honor an individual, group or some specific event especially deserving of our support because of enormous injustice or persecution. I believe this darkness would light up the hearts and hopes of those who suffer; and set a precedent for collective concern and responsibility. Perhaps this periodic warning or proclamation could be one of the responsibilities of the proposed new museum or some other institution.

We could call each proclamation the Wallenberg Watch in honor of a man, Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat, who probably saved more lives during the Holocaust than any other human being.

The momentary darkness would be symbolic of the potential threat to mankind. The participation of people and institutions in the dialogue and decisions leading to the proclamation of the Wallenberg Watch would give flesh and bone to Thomas Jefferson's admonition and pledge for "eternal vigilance against all forms of tyranny".

Another benefit provided by the Wallenberg Watch would be some needed lessons in compassion. Our daily media exposure to all kinds of crimes and atrocities places our society in danger of being desensitized to human suffering. Hopefully, the decision making process leading to the Wallenberg Watch would offer enough discussion and participation by the public to make sure that the spirit of compassion does not become estranged and does not die.

There are many other and probably more effective ways we could deal with our collective voice and effort. But the Wallenberg Watch could be a good beginning because it would provide all individuals with a simple means to participate.

Imagine the fantastic power a simple flick of the finger could produce. There is the potential of momentary total darkness throughout the entire world. Like a total eclipse it would have the force and the sobering effect to be observed and noticed by all, especially the leaders of each country. Perhaps we could even measure an area's enlightenment and the effectiveness of our efforts, by the amount of darkness produced on a specific day at 8 p.m. This could be easily done by satellite pictures or a simple reading of any variations in electric power output. With dedication and determination, I am convinced we could succeed in breaking up some of the cartels of despotism throughout the world and prevent future ones from happening again.

No doubt a great deal of thought and work will need to be done by all of us. We may even be called upon to sacrifice some of our thoughts and deeds. But let me remind you that the most precious gift we enjoy in this shining land, is our freedom. And therefore whatever sacrifice we must make for our freedom to endure we shall endure it freely. This is what freedom is all about.

Finally, I would like to suggest that the following inscription be placed at the entrance to the newly proposed Holocaust museum:

Look and ponder, learn and pray
Above all remember well
That silence and indifference
Fuel the fires of living hell●

TRIBUTE TO DR. IRVING A. GLADSTONE—AN EDUCATOR FOR ALL SEASONS

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, on May 31 of this year, I will have the pleasure of attending a ceremony at which Dr. Irving A. Gladstone will be remembered for his lifetime of work on behalf of the schoolchildren of New York City. The school at which he served as principal for over 20 years will, appropriately, be renamed the Dr. Irving A. Gladstone Elementary School in his honor.

This school will serve as a reminder to all future students in Brooklyn of Dr. Gladstone's contribution to their education. For those who knew him and were familiar with his work, or who had the good fortune of attending the schools or classes of which he was in charge, this school will be only one of many lasting reminders of his contribution to the education of America's schoolchildren. Indeed, Dr. Gladstone is one of those rare individuals whose efforts and expertise have contributed to the improvement of his profession—an accomplishment which has universal impact and, hence, from which we all benefit.

Dr. Gladstone started his career as a teacher and ended his career as one. I am told he had a very special talent for teaching. Whether he was serving as instructor for elementary and secondary school students, as he did during the early part of his career, or as a teacher for teachers during the last 20 years of his career, he consistently maintained a standard of excellence.

But to focus on Dr. Gladstone's accomplishments as a teacher only identifies the tip of the iceberg of his legacy. From 1953 until his retirement, Dr. Gladstone served in numerous administrative, supervisory, and advisory roles as part of his effort to improve the quality of education offered for our schoolchildren. Beyond serving as the principal in two schools, he undertook several legal projects for the New York City board of education, was chairman of the New York City Elementary School Principals Association's legal rights committee, and sat on the superintendent's law and license committee. In addition, Dr. Gladstone was past president of the New York City Elementary School Principals Association and a founding member of the American Federation of School Administrators. The list goes on and on. All of his activities, however, were directed toward a single purpose—enhancing the education of our youngsters.

Frequently we have debated in this Chamber the merits of different proposals to improve the quality of education in our Nation. We discuss innovative educational programs, determine what spending levels are necessary for federally funded education projects, and a host of other important matters which affect the quality of education nationally. And through it all, I can not help but think that the most important element of our educational system, dedicated and gifted educators like Dr. Gladstone, is what is most needed. We must be thankful for his dedication today and to this important profession and hope that by honoring him on May 31 we can encourage other talented and idealistic young men and women to follow in his footsteps.●

ASAT AMENDMENT TO FISCAL YEAR 1985 DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, when the Department of Defense fiscal year 1985 authorization bill is considered on the floor next week, I will offer an amendment to limit the U.S. anti-satellite (ASAT) weapon testing program. This test moratorium would continue as long as the Soviets continue to abide by their own declared moratorium, which was cited in the President's March 31, 1984 ASAT report to Congress.

The purpose of the amendment is to provide a window of opportunity to explore a mutual and verifiable ban on Asat's. Until 1979, when negotiations on ASAT's were suspended, the program proceeded on a dual track, entailing research and development, and negotiations. Since then, the research and development program has proceeded, but negotiations have not resumed. This amendment provides the opportunity to resume negotiations on ASAT's before it is too late to avert an expensive and destablizing arms race in space.

Text of amendment to H.R. 5167, Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985:

At the end of title II (page 18, after line 13) add the following new section: Limitation on Funds for Anti-Satellite Weapons.

SEC. 206. No funds appropriated pursuant to authorizations of appropriations in this title may be used for testing of the Space Defense system (anti-satellite weapon) against an object in space unless and until the President certifies to Congress that the Soviet Union has conducted, after the date of enactment of this Act, an equivalent test of any type of dedicated anti-satellite weapon.

Rationale for ASAT amendment:

ASAT AND ARMS CONTROL

The Administration's March 31, 1984 ASAT Report states that the Administration is "searching for limits on such (ASAT) systems which are effectively verifiable . . ." But once flight-testing of the ASAT is complete, verification of a ban on the weapon would be much more difficult. This amendment puts the flight-testing program on "hold", unless the Soviets break their declared moratorium and resume testing, and allows time to pursue negotiations. (The Soviets have not tested their ASAT for two years.)

ASAT'S AND "STAR WARS"

ASATs and "Star Wars" technologies are inextricably linked. If we decide to proceed with ASATs, we will have taken the first step towards an arms race in space. Star Wars, or ballistic missile defense (BMD), would contribute to the nuclear arms race by prompting the Soviets to build more nuclear weapons. This is because they will try to penetrate our BMD "protective shield" with more missiles. Thus, the ASAT will set off an arms race in space which will, in turn, set off a new round in the arms race on earth.

ASAT'S WILL DECREASE NATIONAL SECURITY

ASATs are designed to destroy vital military satellites, including command, control, and communications satellites, as well as satellites used for verification of arms control agreements. These satellites have contributed significantly to stability by denying the element of surprise in a first strike. The U.S. depends more heavily on satellites than does the Soviet Union and has more to gain by limiting the Soviet capability to destroy U.S. satellites.

U.S. ASAT AS BARGAINING CHIP WITH SOVIETS

The Soviets have been working on an ASAT of their own, which, while primitive, is a legitimate cause for concern. Although there are more effective and cheaper ways of negating the Soviet ASAT threat, such as hardening of satellites against attack and increased maneuverability to avoid attack, the U.S. ASAT provides an ideal "bargaining chip" in negotiations because of the U.S. lead in ASAT technology. We should take advantage of this lead and begin negotiations to ban the weapon before the Soviets catch up. (The Soviets have introduced a draft ASAT treaty to the United Nations.)

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.●

A VIEW OF CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, recently a constituent in my district wrote an interesting article on the Central American situation. It is always important to stay in touch with viewpoints outside of the Nation's Capitol. Mr. Hamilton's article reflects his views on how "Realpolitik" and a more idealistic policy of international legality should be synthesized. I commend to my colleagues some excerpts of his article.

BIPARTISAN DEBATE NEEDED ON CENTRAL AMERICA

(By Wm. Alexander Hamilton)

Whether Nicaragua is successful in overthrowing the elected government of its neighbor, El Salvador, depends, in large measure, on the ability of the Nicaraguan communists to maintain a steady flow of arms and ammunition to the communist insurgents in El Salvador.

One of the lessons of the Vietnam War is: once small arms and ammunition hit the shore and get into the jungle they will eventually end up in the hands of the bad guys.

The only effective way to stop the flow of weapons is to keep them from coming ashore. This can be done in three ways: (1) cut them off at the source, (2) cut them off at some intermediate point or (3) impose some sort of blockage on the country sponsoring the insurgency.

To go for the source means a direct confrontation with the Soviets and the Czechs—the makers of the weapons and ammunition. Cuba is often the intermediate transshipment or waypoint. And, of course, Nicaragua is the country sponsoring the guerrilla war against El Salvador. Tough choices.

At this point, maybe we should ask: how did the United States get tagged as the bad guy in all of this?

Three reasons: (1) a certain element in the Congress is determined to play election-year politics with the communist threat to Central America, (2) there is a sincere debate among other members of Congress as to the importance of Central America to our security and (3) the Congress wants to play a larger role in the conduct of our foreign and-military policy—a role larger than that assigned to it by the Constitution.

Sincere debate on the consequences of a communist takeover of Central America is needed. Indeed, the sooner we understand what is at stake, the sooner the U.S. can behave as the Great Power responsible for the security of a region on its hemispheric doorstep.

But, until we come to a national consensus on Central American policy, any Administration in power will find itself having to exert its power through the backdoor. The alternative is to go down in history as the party that "lost Central America."

Mining Nicaraguan harbors is a backdoor operation. Stopping the flow of communist arms is a great idea, but using naval mines, without a declaration of war and warnings to neutrals, is a bad idea because a naval mine cannot tell the difference between a Soviet Bloc ship carrying weapons and a Norwegian ship carrying a cargo of pickled herring.

Congressional condemnation of harbor mining is the right act performed for largely the wrong reasons—not the least of which is partisan politics.

While public support for playing hardball with Nicaragua may be weak, it might be considerably stronger for a quarantine—a la President Kennedy—of Cuba. Since communist-Cuba is the major exporter of death and destruction in the region, that is where the U.S. should be using its muscle—either overt or covert.

As for the World Court, does anyone believe for a minute that Cuba would agree to go before such a tribunal and face almost certain condemnation for serving as the seedbed of death and destruction in our hemisphere?

In 1979, I stood in the dark outside World Court in the Hague and thought: what a marvelous notion—that nations could bring their disputes for settlement in a court of international law. But it remains a mere notion because sovereign nations cannot, and should not, subordinate their vital interests to the will of anyone save their own peoples.

If the World Court ruled Nicaragua should stop exporting revolution into El Salvador, does anyone think Nicaragua would obey? If the World Court told the United States its sphere of influence could no longer include Central America, does anyone think we would withdraw to Fortress America? For those who believe that, I have some nice costume jewelry at bargain prices.●

HON. HAROLD E. FORD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of H.R. 991, a bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide that blind persons may not be employed at less than the applicable minimum wage under that act.

Most of our 40,000 blind workers are employed in the private industry. However, 10,000 blind persons are employed in sheltered workshops around the country. Many of these workshops do not pay these workers minimum wage. This is due to a current law which allows the U.S. Department of Labor to issue an exemption that permits payment of subminimum wage to shelter workshop employees. The justification behind this law is that the production rate among blind workers is lower.

Mr. Speaker, studies have shown that, where in fact the production rate is lower, it is due to antiquated and substandard equipment and machinery. This law, which was passed in the late thirties, was instituted when most blind persons were uneducated, untrained, and lumped together irregardless of their condition. The philosophy underlying this law simply does not apply to today's blind person. The blind of today are better educated, more functional, and much more capable of competitive employment.

Mr. Speaker, all the time we are introducing and passing legislation which insures safety and fairness in the workplace. Why should a blind worker be excluded from this national policy? I think we all want to see blind persons become as independent as possible, and I feel that H.R. 991 can help insure that independence. I commend my colleague's effort with regard to the introduction of this piece of legislation, and will assist in any way to help secure its passage.●

BINDING THE WOUNDS

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, since the end of the Vietnam war 12 years ago, our Nation has had considerable work to do in the area of binding up the wounds of one of the most turbulent periods in American history.

There is still work to be done, but with the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 296, we are moving in the right direction.

The war in Southeast Asia was and remains controversial. However, actions to honor those men who served, fought, and in many cases died in the war, should not be clouded by that controversy.

Memorial Day is a most appropriate time for the remains of the unknown American soldier from the Vietnam war to be honored. House Concurrent Resolution 296, which provides for the use of the Capitol Rotunda for the lying in state of that soldier's remains between May 25 and May 28, 1984, is important to all of those veterans of the Vietnam era, to all of our Nation's veterans, and indeed to all of our Nation.

Clearly, this should not mark the end of our focus on the war; 2,500 Americans are still unaccounted for; their families wait, hope, pray, and count on us to remember their loved ones. With the Arlington National Cemetery interment of the Unknown Soldier from Southeast Asia, this Nation is providing a tangible sign of our support, respect, honor, and dignity for our Vietnam-era veterans.●

ANTHONY "TONY" FAVA, WESTCHESTER VOLUNTEER OF THE YEAR

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extend my congratulations to Mr. Anthony "Tony" Fava, of Mamaroneck, NY, who is being honored as Westchester County Volunteer of the Year by the Volunteer Service Bureau of Westchester County.

Tony Fava, who has been titled Mamaroneck's "Crackerbarrel Statesman" by his neighbors, has successfully led the Washingtonville neighborhood through 8 years of remarkable, effective and recognizable change—all from behind the meat counter at Fava's Market.

Beginning in April 1976, Tony Fava and other leaders in the Washingtonville section of Mamaroneck, my hometown, met with local officials to discuss ways of rehabilitating and preserving the oldest, and, at that time, the most deteriorated section of the village. That meeting resulted in the formation of the Washingtonville Neighborhood Program, Inc.

Tony Fava was the first chairman of the Washingtonville Beautification Committee and has served in that capacity for 4 of the committee's 8 years. Between his terms as chairman, Tony Fava has guided and developed the committee's new leaders.

The once rundown Washingtonville neighborhood can now boast of new sidewalks and curbs; additional and brighter street lights; three new mini-parks; over 100 rehabilitated homes; a master plan for guidance in zoning and business and commercial development; nearly $1 million for traffic channelization and signalization; and many flood control programs—to name but a few achievements in the committee's 8-year history.

The Washingtonville neighborhood story is a true success story. Its success is summed up by its logo: "Growth, Unity and Pride." Perhaps the Washingtonville neighborhood's greatest success has been its "Crackerbarrel Statesman," Tony Fava. As a 6-day-a-week volunteer, Tony Fava has gently persuaded neighbors, business people, civic and religious organizations, municipal leaders, landlords and tenants, and tomorrow's leaders—the neighborhood's youths, toward implementing creative, sound and socially redeeming goals.

The Washingtonville Beautification Committee project is not, however, Tony Fava's only civic contribution. He has been a ruler of the Mamaroneck Elks Lodge 1457; a member of the Rye Neck School Board Selection Committee; a participant in the St. Vito's Parish Council; the G.I. Civic Association and the newly formed finance committee of the Rye Neck/Rye School Study Committee. Mr. Fava has also recently been appointed Mamaroneck's representative to the Westchester County Community Development Advisory Committee.

Through his imagination and dynamic personality, Tony Fava has moved mountains for the good of his friends, his neighbors, and his community.

I ask my distinguished colleagues to join me in honoring Anthony "Tony" Fava as Westchester County's Volunteer of the Year. It is an honor truly deserved.

I would also like to commend four other volunteer group recipients who will be honored by the Westchester County Volunteer bureau.

Miss Devonia Dixon will be honored in the student volunteer category. A junior at White Plains High School, Miss Dixon organized the school's chapter of SADD (Students Against Drunk Driving) which now has a membership of over 35 high school students. The chapter meets each week to plan projects by which to educate the student body.

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) award recipient is Ms. Marie Johnston a volunteer at the Howe Avenue Nursing Home in New Rochelle. The nursing home is on the grounds of the New Rochelle Hospital Medical Center. Ms. Johnston averages 15 hours of volunteer time each week to feed, entertain and comfort patients at the nursing home.

Mrs. Diana Valdes-Owens of Pepsico, Inc., is this year's recipient of the Corporate Award. Mrs. Valdes is the founder and director of the Valdes Striders, a track club consisting of 30 members ranging in age from 7 to 35. Through the program, members are taught positive, success-oriented discipline not only for running, but for studies as well.

Finally, I would like to offer congratulations to the tearoom project of the Sound Shore, this year's group award honorees. This project is funded and staffed by volunteers of the Sound Shore Community Advisory Board for the purpose of aiding recoved psychiatric patients to cook, bake, and serve the public. The project takes place every Tuesday through Saturday in the New Rochelle Public Library.●

MAY—OLDER AMERICANS MONTH

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as May has been designated Older Americans Month, I would like to say a few words today about our Nation's senior citizens and about growing older in our society.

When supporting the passage of the legislation which sets aside this month as Older Americans Month, I hoped it would cause many of us to reflect on the special needs of our older generations as well as cause those of us yet to be considered "older" to set goals for our own later years.

Presently 10.7 percent of the population, or 26 million Americans, are over the age of 60. Over 17.7 percent of the population in my own State of Maine are over 60. Many of these individuals would not consider themselves "elderly," nor should they. But no matter how they feel or how they look, individuals over 60 do have different problems and a different perspective. So will we all when we are in our older years.

We should pay special attention to our elders because, with luck, we all will be among their ranks. As Drs. Skinner and Vaughan remind us in their book, "Enjoy Old Age": "A good time to think about old age is when you are young."

As a ranking minority member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I receive a lot of information regarding our older population, and I will admit I am continuously impressed by the number of elderly people who never planned for their later years. They never thought "it" would happen to them so they did not invest time planning for a steady source of retirement income or health insurance coverage other than perhaps social security and medicare. Nor did many of them plan on what their retirement activities would be.

More than 15 percent of our Nation's elderly population lives on income below the poverty level. That figure represents more than 3.8 million persons 65 or older who are considered poor as their annual income is below $4,626 for an individual and $5,836 for a two-person family. Mr. Speaker, people are very disadvantaged, indeed, who live on only $400 per month in 1984.

We know that in less than 40 years, our older population will double. I think this increase will foster a general acceptance of age. Nevertheless, now is the time for us as individuals to plan ahead, and now is the time for those of us in Congress to look at our Federal programs to determine what services are now helping our retirees, and what are the gaps in those services.

I think we all realize the Federal Government cannot be responsible for all the health and social needs of our older population unless we bankrupt the Treasury. Nevertheless, we should expect the Government to provide an adequate safety net for those less fortunate, less healthy, less able to provide for themselves.

During the past year or two, I believe we in Congress have been attempting to address these very real concerns and plan ahead—both individually and as a society. We have increased funding for research to find the causes and possible cures for the devastating illnesses which affect our older population such as Alzheimer's disease and other neurological disorders. We are adjusting and expanding services as provided under the Older Americans Act, and we are expanding employment programs which allow older persons to augment their incomes if they are able.

Everyone wants to live a long time, but no one wants to be older, or to think about being old. Let us, however, pause a moment this month to reflect on this state of our lives which, although it has its special problems, can be a time of special fulfillment and pleasure. It can be a time we all look forward to if we plan ahead, not forgetting our obligation to those who are older among us and who have already earned our special attention.●

THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO CHINA

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan returned last week from his trip to the Peoples Republic of China. The event was a historic and successful one from many points of view. The trip highlighted the importance of the largest Asian power—and most populous nation on Earth—to the security of the United States and to world peace.

The Lincoln Star has written an excellent editorial on the President's trip which I would commend to my colleagues. The President attempted to further U.S. interests in China in a number of different sectors. In some areas there was widespread agreement, in other areas the two sides agreed to disagree. As the editorial states: "It is not essential that we see things exactly the same in ideological matters." Indeed, what is important is the continuation of dialog with the People's Republic. I have excerpted the Star's article of May 1 for my colleagues.

REAGAN RETURNS HOME WITH SUCCESS IN CHINA

The American people are high on expediency, devoting no end of energy to the task immediately at hand. But in the longer course of events, we are not considered quite so efficient. Thus, it is characteristic that we can go for long periods without a single thought about the People's Republic of China and then spend a week in considerable examination of the subject.

* * * * *

China shares an extensive border with Russian and adjoins, among others, the countries of Afghanistan, Pakistan and India. It is, of course, a key part of all of Asia.

Thus, China is an element in world affairs that impacts upon both European and South Pacific affairs.

Also, China under new leadership is seeking to enter into the modern age of new technology and to open itself to the economic opportunities of Western progress. Thus, Reagan signed an agreement with China for the United States to sell nuclear energy technology, to expand cultural exchanges and for policies to expand trade between the two nations.

But here, too, matters are complex. There are the politically conservative in this country who take strong exception with expanded relations between the United States and China, believing China to be of an ideological nature with which we are at irreconcilable odds.

Also, trade is a two-way street and the garment industry of this nation is disturbed over the United States importing finished clothing products from China's low-wage factories. But China buys a lot of U.S. produced wheat and curtails purchases in that category of goods when we try to limit their export of textiles.

The President, we believe, balanced as well as could be done all the conflicts and possibilities that exist in our relations with China. Reagan has demonstrated the kind of pragmatism in this regard that is needed in today's world.

As he reminded his Chinese hosts, it is not essential that we see things exactly the same in ideological matters for us to exist on relatively friendly terms. We believe the Reagan administration could use more of that realism throughout much of the world.

We are not going to make the world over in our image and we can come to certain common understandings with nations that differ with us politically. Thus, in both a philosophical sense and in the practicalities of international affairs, Reagan's trip to China was a satisfying event for this nation.●

VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

HON. W. J. (BILLY) TAUZIN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, following is the essay by Alfred J. Lamperez, the Louisiana winner of the 1983-84 VFW Voice of Democracy Scholarship Program:

The essay follows:

MY ROLE IN UPHOLDING OUR CONSTITUTION

(By Alfred J. Lamperez)

"On my honor, I will do my best to do my duty to God and my Country. . .

"I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America. . .

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President. . ."

These are the pledges taken by the Boy Scout, the United States citizen, and the President-elect. Each reflects a sense of commitment by the individual to uphold the American ideal as presented by our Constitution.

Did you realize that our United States Constitution is the oldest written constitution in the World? In the years since its adoption Russia has moved from czarism to communism, France has passed through five republics and three monarchies. Countless Asian and African colonies have gone from dependence to independence, changing governments many times over.

The document establishing our government was adopted in 1789. What is my role in upholding and maintaining our Constitution today? Needless to say, I have a duty to vote, to serve on juries, and to pay taxes. I have an obligation to fight, if necessary, to defend my homeland. But most of all, I have the responsibility to make our Constitution apply to present problems, to study the alternatives, and to shape the issues.

Government participation and public service are the ways I fulfill this responsibility. For in my multiple phases of individual government involvement, from the neighborhood and municipal level to the national scene, I bring the 194 year old document to life in 1983—this is my role in upholding our Constitution.

A wealth of literature in the form of essays and editorials has been laid before the public concerning social justice, military preparedness and many other controversial subjects. Topics such as these suggest ideas and programs which groups can promote, but do not dictate specific personal positions. My role—in the spirit of democracy—is to find out, what are the issues? Where do I stand? What can I do about it?

It is in the present situation at home and abroad, accompanied by riddled economic times and brittled international relationships that our Constitution is severely challenged. And my role in strengthening and maintaining it is clearly defined!

Having first carefully studied in this way, my role and obligation then becomes the privilege to be an involved active member of civic clubs and community organizations. I must also participate in government by telling elected representatives that I am in favor of certain legislation or disagree with a specific position. Further, if need be, I must serve on commissions, study groups, or school boards. And if the calling comes, I must seek elected office at whatever level.

In summary, my role is a dual one—first to see how our Constitution applies today, and then to do something about it. And this is not simply my role—it is ours!

In the next 194 years many foreign governments will have come and gone. If each of us plays our role in upholding our Constitution the United States can continue to remain "one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." Our American youth will still be able to "keep physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight." And in 194 years our 80th President will be able to the best of his ability "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."●

CHILD SURVIVAL FUND

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to call attention to a very important provision of the foreign aid authorization bill which has the potential for saving thousands of children's lives—the creation of a child survival fund. This program would make funds available to agencies carrying out child health activities in less developed countries, and I commend my colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Committee for supporting the child survival fund.

The child survival fund has been proposed to deal with one of the greatest tragedies, the unnecessary daily deaths of this world's greatest resource—our children. Forty thousand children die every day; most of them from the effects of malnutrition, infection, and repeated attacks of diarrhea. Many of these deaths easily would be prevented if four simple inexpensive health techniques were made available to parents in poor countries. These techniques are often referred to as GOBI, which stands for growth monitoring, oral rehydration therapy, breastfeeding, and immunization. According to UNICEF's Executive Director James Grant, these techniques have the potential to save half of the child deaths annually.

For example, implementation of a national campaign for immunizing children against polio in Brazil reduced the number of child deaths from that disease by 99 percent in 3 years. In Guatemala, a campaign to distribute oral rehydration salts reduced the number of child deaths from diarrhea by one-half in the first year of the campaign alone.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is an unfortunate fact that too many parents in poor countries continue to lack access to even the most rudimentary forms of health care. For instance, it is estimated that 80 percent of Africa's population has no available health care. The expansion of GOBI—simple, low cost, and easily available methods—is vitally important to improve the quality of life for the desparately poor.

The child survival fund would make funds available to agencies such as the World Health Organization, UNICEF, and AID, as well as private agencies, to carry out measures designed to reduce the large number of unnecessary deaths of children in Third World countries. Authorization for the program has been proposed at an initial level of $25 million. This amount is a reduction from the subcommittee recommendation that $50 million be made available for child health activities.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the child survival fund will prove to be a worthy addition to our foreign aid programs, and that in future years its funding will be increased. This initial authorization is a positive first step in providing adequate health care for the world's children.

Members of Congress have already addressed the importance of child health care by passing Senate Joint Resolution 111, which gave the full support and encouragement of Congress to child health activities. We now have the opportunity to provide funding as well as verbal support. I encourage my distinguished colleagues to support the child survival fund.●

ANSEL ADAMS: A MAN FOR OUR CENTURY

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 1, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend just a minute to wish a fond farewell to a great naturalist, a wonderful artist, and a dear friend of humankind, Ansel Adams,

I came to know Ansel Adams when we served together on the board of directors of the Friends of the Earth. The passion for nature that he exhibited in his photography was clearly evident in his dealings with the issues that we handled on the board.

He was a man of many talents: He was a nature photographer who created the art form, a pianist, a teacher, a humanist, and a writer. He was, in fact, a visionary and the world will mourn the loss of this one bright candle in a world of darkness.

I hope that the family of this great man knows and understands that the Nation, in fact the world, shares their grief because we too have suffered a great loss.●

VIEWS ON EQUAL ACCESS LEGISLATION

HON. FREDERICK C. BOUCHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, because of the possibility that the House will soon consider H.R. 5345, the Equal Access Act, I urge my colleagues to study carefully the issues raised by this legislation.

As a member of both the House Education and Labor Committee, which had jurisdiction over this measure, and the House Judiciary Committee, which is considering similar legislation introduced by Congressman DON EDWARDS, I have supported the concept of equal access to school facilities for student initiated and student managed organizations.

In hearings before the Education and Labor Committee, however, a number of questions were raised concerning the appropriate remedy that should be made available to students who have been improperly denied access to school facilities. Other questions involving the constitutionality of the equal access proposal were also raised. In my additional views provided for the report of the Committee on Education and Labor, I address both the remedy and the establishment clause issues, and I request that my statement from the committee report be reprinted at this point in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. BOUCHER

I supported this legislation, both in Subcommittee and in full Committee, and I intend to vote for its passage on the floor of the House. Two issues concern me greatly, however, and I sincerely hope that these matters will be addressed either through floor amendments or in conference.

ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDY

Section 2 of H.R. 5345 provides for the termination of federal funding to an entire school district if the U.S. Department of Education determines that a student religious group was improperly denied access to school facilities in any single school within the district. This administrative termination of federal funding would, in my view, make it virtually impossible for local school officials to exercise independent judgment to determine whether a student group seeking to use school facilities is a group which meets the requirements of the legislation.

Local school officials are required by the bill to determine whether student groups seeking access are "voluntary" and "student initiated." If a local school administrator decides that membership in the group is not entirely voluntary or that the group was not student initiated, he would run an enormous risk in denying the group access to school facilities. If a reviewing agent in the U.S. Department of Education disagreed with his conclusion, federal funds for the entire school district would be terminated. Then the burden would fall to the local school district to initiate suit for the purpose of litigating the correctness of the fund cutoff decision.

Under these circumstances, I think it is probable that in virtually all cases, even the most flagrant ones, the applying group will be awarded access to school facilities. The pressures of a possible fund cutoff should the school administrator decide to the contrary will prevent him from exercising the kinds of independent and subtle judgments required by the bill.

Local control and local authority is an important principle in America's educational system, and I am of the view that the administrative remedy set forth in this legislation extends the federal reach beyond its traditional limits.

I would greatly prefer that this legislation contain a judicial remedy similar to that provided in Section 2 of S. 815, Senator Hatfield's version of this legislation. While extending full protection to the rights of student religious groups, a judicial remedy would also respect the prerogatives of local school officials and enhance the principle of local control and local responsibility.

The American Association of School Administrators, the National Education Association and the National School Boards' Association have serious concerns about the administrative remedy contained in this measure. These organizations share the view that a judicial remedy according to aggrieved students or student organizations the right to petition federal courts for enforcement of their rights would be a more appropriate approach. I sincerely hope that during further consideration of this measure a judicial remedy will be substituted for the administrative remedy presently contained in the bill.

ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE ISSUES

During Subcommittee markup, the title of this legislation was changed from the "Religious Speech Protection Act" to the "Equal Access Act." The Subcommittee recognized, I believe, the inherent Constitutional issues raised in any Act of Congress singling out religious speech and according to it special treatment. Changing the title of the bill, however, does not address those serious Constitutional questions, and the possible conflict of this legislation with the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment remains.

Constitutional questions are normally examined in the House Judiciary Committee, but it is widely acknowledged that this legislation was carefully drafted so as to avoid the possibility of a referral to that Committee. As a member of both the Education and Labor Committee and the Committee on the Judiciary, I have attempted to arrange for a limited, sequential referral of this measure to the Judiciary Committee. My purpose in this attempt was not to indefinitely delay or prevent consideration of this legislation in the House. Rather, my purpose was to ensure that this measure and the delicate Constitutional questions which are associated with it have the benefit of the thinking of the Committee normally charged with examining those kinds of questions. I continue to believe that a temporary, limited referral of this measure to the Judiciary Committee is appropriate, and I am hopeful that prior to the conclusion of House consideration of the bill the Establishment Clause questions raised by this legislation will be addressed by that Committee.

EQUAL ACCESS A LEGITIMATE CAUSE

I would like to reiterate my support for this legislation. The concept is simple and appealing: if you allow the stamp club or the gymnastics club or some other student organization to meet on school grounds, you should also allow the student Bible club or the religious club to have similar privileges.

This principle represents genuine equal access, and I support it. The difficulty arises, as it so often does, when we attempt to translate an attractive general concept into concise legislative language. It is here that Constitutional questions arise. My desire to examine those questions reflects not an opposition to the concept of equal access but a belief in the responsibility of all members of the House to construct the best legislation of which we are capable.●

LISTENING TO THE VOICE OF SMALL BUSINESS

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, this week, May 6-12, 1984, is Small Business Week. In making this proclamation, President Ronald Reagan declared that "America's strength lies in the ingenuity and perseverance of its people. No other group of Americans better exemplifies these qualities than the Nation's small business owners, who contribute daily to our economic well-being."

Yet these same independent entrepreneurs are being profoundly affected by the administration's current economic policies of high interest rates and tight money, and the massive accumulation of new Government debt. The record number of small business failures suggests that something has gone wrong with this economic policy. More than 98 percent of the businesses filing for bankruptcy during the past 3 years were small, according to information from the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The number of small family farm foreclosures, too, is skyrocketing as our Nation's farmers are being hurt by their inability to compete for credit.

It is time we began listening to the voice of small business—and this is the perfect forum in which to begin.

That voice is telling us, among other things, to make our monetary policy more responsive to the concerns of small business men and women and farmers. That should be among our top priorities.

No sustained economic recovery, in fact, is possible so long as these key sectors, buffeted by tight money problems, remain an object of indifference to our economic planners—particularly, the Federal Reserve Board.

Since 1913, when the Fed was born, the Board members have been primarily economists, not business people. While this has given the Board a high degree of expertise and impartiality, it also has helped create the suspicion in the business and agricultural communities that the Board does not know or even care about the practical consequences of its policies on business men, and women, farmers, and other individuals.

Mr. Paul Volcker, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, recently commented himself that no monetary policy should be pursued without a broad understanding of the objectives and the support from the people whose lives are affected.

A partial solution, then, lies in making the Fed more responsive to the invaluable contributions small business men, and women, and farmers are making to the Nation's economy.

With the aid of my small business task force—a group of small business men and women from the North Shore—I introduced a bill, H.R. 2566, that would place at the earliest openings representatives of small business and agricultural interests on the Federal Reserve Board.

A number of proponents of this idea rallied together and pushed for congressional hearings on H.R. 2566. The House Banking Subcommittee on Domestic Monetary Policy held the hearings at the end of January.

The authors of the Federal Reserve Act did recognize the dangers of the Board becoming too aloof from actual business concerns, and so specified that the members of the Board have knowledge and experience in business, farming, and finance.

As the law now reads, however, the President must merely show due regard for these particular sectors when making his appointment to the Federal Reserve Board. H.R. 2566 would put teeth into the law, mandating that the President must appoint small business and agricultural representatives to the Board at the first two vacancies.

The term of Board member Nancy Hays Teeters expired at the end of January, and a new member has yet to be chosen. I call upon the President, when making his decision, to listen to the voice of the small business and farming communities, and remember what they have to offer our Nation.

A more responsive monetary policy can put us on the road to economic recovery. As the President stated in his Small Business Week proclamation, "we should encourage small business owners by acknowledging their tremendous importance as the mainsprings of continued economic and individual progress for our Nation."

Small Business Week, 1984, is the week to begin.●

DEATH PENALTY IN THE UNITED STATES

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, in light of the ongoing debate over the appropriateness of the death penalty in the United States, I thought that the letter that follows would be of interest to you and my colleagues:

TERRA HAUTE, IN,
March 29, 1984.

Hon. NANCY L. JOHNSON,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

MADAME: The U.S. Senate's vote to expand the death penalty in federal cases, as I understand it, makes it now obligatory upon you to prepare yourself for the House's vote on that legislation.

You will, no doubt, wish to give consideration to the fundamental moral aspects of the death sentence, so I have decided to make my opinion known on this issue to at least one Representative of each of the fifty states. This decision is based on the fact I am a middle-aged man who is at the present time serving a 50-year sentence in the Terra Haute Federal Penitentiary.

The Elizabeth Bouvia Trial in Riverside, California, forced a significant number of Americans to take heed of the fact that there are those amongst us who realize that the hopelessness of their circumstances makes death far more appealing than their present state of wretchedness. This realization should be taken into account by the Congress in its final legislation on the death penalty. I think it is a self-evident truth that death is the only answer for these humans whose lives are one prolonged agony. It would be in harmony with the principles of Christian charity and logic to terminate the lives of such unfortunates.

Warehousing prisoners such as myself for prolonged periods constitutes cruel and unusual punishment in the most literal sense of that phrase. The cost in tax dollars alone is a criminal waste.

Several of us prisoners have made our desire known to interested parties that we would gladly accept death by lethal injection and donate our bodies to medical science in lieu of enduring the interminable degradation that represents human survival in the federal penal system.

Therefore, I appeal to you to either introduce or lend support to legislation that would grant any defendant sentenced to serve over three years imprisonment in the federal penal system the option of a voluntary death sentence.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES CAREY, 15621-008.●

GENERAL GIAP'S VICTORY

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, this article entitled "General Giap's Victory" appeared in the Wall Street Journal. I commend it to my colleagues.

[From the Wall Street Journal, May 7, 1984]

GENERAL GIAP'S VICTORY

Great events are worth recalling, for their lessons as well as their memories. So we don't mind pointing out that today is the 30th anniversary of Vietnam's victory over the French army at Dien Bien Phu. That victory, engineered by Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, was one of the first by communist revolutionaries. It marked the end of French rule in Indochina, and, arguably, led to U.S. involvement there and thus to Gen. Giap's greater triumph in 1975.

What can we learn from Dien Bien Phu? The general himself, still vigorous in his 70s, offered his own nostalgic assessment recently while surveying the historic battle site: "The bell tolled after Dien Bien Phu for the sunset of colonialism and encouraged, inspired other nations to stand up for self-liberation." But an alternative lesson occurred to us after we read a report about life in Vietnam since 1975.

The report, based on visitors' accounts and interviews with 500 emigres, is an extraordinary indictment of life under Gen. Giap's comrades. It was compiled by Ginetta Sagan, an Italian-born human-rights activist who was a prisioner of the Nazis in World War II. Mrs. Sagan, who was once a prominent opponent of President Thieu of South Vietnam, first issued her report a year ago, but has continued interviewing since and concludes that "the situation hasn't changed very much."

That "situation" includes the familiar signposts of communist repression. Religious worship is persecuted and churches have become warehouses. Private shops have mostly been confiscated, of course, with ethnic Chinese shopkeepers favorite victims. The report also provides grisly details about life in the "reeducation camps," where several hundred thousand Vietnamese have spent time and as many as 60,000 people remain. The lucky prisoners dig latrines or plant crops. The unlucky clear minefields. Prisoners eat only a few vegetables and a bowl of rice or two a day; they rarely get protein.

Anyone who rebels against this regimen is quickly punished: Prisoners' arms and legs are bound into contorted positions before they're tossed into metal boxes to bake in the tropical sun. One former prisoner was thrown into an abandoned water well for five days because he sang "Silent Night" on Christmas Eve. The "reeducated" hardly have an easier time upon release. Many are dispatched to New Economic Zones, which are hardscrabble areas where growing even enough food to survive is difficult.

No wonder so many Vietnamese gamble on escaping. Hanoi no longer extorts money by encouraging "boat people." But according to the United Nations, in 1983 alone more than 28,000 Vietnamese risked capture pirates and heavy seas to flee anyway. Some 2,000 more leave each month under the U.S.-sponsored Orderly Departure Program. As Hoang Huu Quynh, a former Communist Party member now in France, puts it: "today if Hanoi allowed the people to freely leave the country, even lampposts would apply to leave. . . . The party has betrayed the people and the promises made to them."

The lesson we draw from Dien Bien Phu, then, is simple: Don't ever lose a war to communist revolutionaries, because life under their system will always be worse than it was under the previous regime. Always. Vietnam was no exception and there has never been one. We think that's worth recalling so long as communists elsewhere portray themselves, as Gen. Giap does, as nationalists or liberators or noble enemies of poverty and corruption.●

A SALUTE TO CHRIST HOSPITAL VOLUNTEER SERVICE DEPARTMENT ON ITS 15TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, May 10, 1984, will mark the 15th anniversary of Christ Hospital's Volunteer Services Department. This week also marks the observation of National Volunteer Week throughout the United States. It is my privilege on this occasion to pay a very special tribute to Nancy Beatus Smith, director of Volunteer Services for Christ Hospital, where I have had the privilege of serving for many years on the executive committee.

Voluntarism dates back to the settlers of the American colonies. In 1620, the "Social Compact" document expressed the New World's commitment to voluntary cooperation to achieve mutual goals.

Voluntarism grew out of a need—a need for food, shelter, defense, and survival. Three hundred sixty some years later we share the same needs and concerns.

In 1872, Christ Hospital became the idea of one man who recognized a need—the need for medical services in Hudson County. The Reverend Richard Mason Abercrombie, D.D., rector of St. Matthew's Church and dean of the convocation of Jersey City, was unable to obtain access to proper medical care for one of his parishioners who was seriously injured in an accident at the Pennsylvania Railroad yard.

After transporting this parishioner, and others who were sick and injured, by horse and carriage and then by ferry to the Chambers Street Hospital in Manhattan, Reverend Abercrombie called a meeting of the Episcopal clergy to discuss the possibility of establishing a church affiliated hospital.

At this meeting a name was adopted and the first volunteers formed the Council of Hudson County Church Hospital and Home appointing Reverend Abercrombie as president.

In 1880, a woman, Sister Adelia of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, was placed in charge of the administration of the institution and the name Christ Hospital was adopted. The following years were prosperous and the patient census increased at a steady rate.

A pediatric unit called the Daisy Ward was added to treat ill and injured children. Concerned parents and residents joined together and worked diligently to raise funds to meet needs and supply extras for the children. This group, called the Abercrombie Guild, is one of the oldest remaining in the State and continues to provide for the Daisy Ward.

And so, dedicated citizens from the community banded together in a voluntary effort to comprise the governing board of Christ Hospital and the formation of a service guild. In response to a cry to heal the sick the hospital's mission was established. So too, a solid foundation was laid for the existence of volunteers in the ensuing years to provide both supplemental services within the institution and leadership of the institution.

Throughout the years, indisputable traits that characterize Christ Hospital as a provider of quality health care have been its ability to project community needs, innovation, leadership and the undeniable belief in the value and need for volunteer participation.

The American Hospital Association (AHA) was founded at the end of the 19th century. Located in Chicago, IL, its object, as stated in its bylaws, is "to promote the welfare of the public through its leadership and its assistance to its members in the provision of better health care and service for all the people."

Recognizing the opportunities and benefits offered by the American Hospital Association, Christ Hospital submitted application for institutional membership. From its earliest days, the American Hospital Association has recognized its responsibility to assist those engaged in the practice of health care professions. In 1968 the AHA recommended to all member health care facilities that they institute a department of volunteer services. With the acceptance of this proposal throughout the United States, the American Society of Directors of Volunteer Services, (ASDVS), became the 11th affiliated Society of the American Hospital Association with a membership of over 1,500.

Responding positively to the AHA's recommendation, Christ Hospital's Board of Trustees charged the administration to seek out leadership for the establishment of this new department.

In accordance with AHA guidelines, the administration of an effective volunteer services department requires specialized knowledge, skills, and capabilities in various fields. In 1969, Nancy Beatus Smith was appointed Christ Hospital's first director of volunteer services. Under her direction, a formal, structured department soon became an integral part of the institution.

With an office on the second floor of the hospital's 1888 building, storage space, and adequate equipment, the first order of business was to establish the purpose and philosophy of the department. Soon to follow were goals, standards, and policies to be in harmony with those of the hospital and in keeping with local, State, and Federal regulations.

Once the preliminary steps were in place, and job descriptions prepared, based on needs of specific departments requesting volunteer assistance, thoughts turned to recruiting and training an adequate and competent staff of volunteers.

Serving many community agencies in various volunteer capacities, from driving with the Red Cross Motor Corps to serving on several agency executive boards, Mrs. Smith knew that the key to any successful volunteer undertaking required commitment, dedication, and support from its community residents.

Within the year, December 1969 witnessed the first Volunteer Recognition Ceremony held in the hospital's chapel. Approximately 30 volunteers, teenagers, and adults proudly received awards, praise, and appreciation for their services.

The corps of volunteers has grown substantially during the past 15 years, boasting 140 seniors and 70 juniors to date.

Services offered to patients and employees have dramatically increased over the years and today more than 25 departments receive the benefits of volunteer assistance.

Over and above their scheduled assignments, volunteers are present for hospital dedications, the annual Health Fair, glaucoma and diabetes testing, and many other screenings that are offered free to the public during the year.

A 367-bed voluntary, not-for-profit hospital, Christ Hospital provides diagnostic, medical, and surgical treatments in a modern facility equipped with the most advanced technology.

As the leading diagnostic center in Hudson County and regional oncology treatment center, patients and employees are benefactors also of the supplemental services provided by volunteers. A new program instituted by the Volunteer Services Department is the provision of free wigs, maintenance, and general coiffure service for both in- and out-patients who are victims of cancer.

Along with many major services, the hospital also provides support for the elderly and disabled through their Home Health Care. In addition, the hospital sponsors the Center for Health Awareness, providing a range of programs for the community. Conscious of promoting health awareness and proper health care, the hospital, through its volunteer services, supplies to callers of Tel-Med free information from medically approved tapes.

Combining the best of management and administrative skills with creativity, imagination, and innovation, a contract has been signed between the Volunteer Services Department and Jersey City State College to institute a cooperative hospital internship program. This program, designed by Mrs. Smith, will combine a prescribed course of study for college credit, coordinating classroom learning with practical experience in an off-campus setting. It will offer students exposure and experience to the medical profession or a related field while providing services to Christ Hospital in a volunteer capacity.

The Volunteer Services Department takes positive action to act as a catalyst between departments, volunteers, and staff in regards to services and programs. Through team efforts of staff and volunteers, patients of Christ Hospital receive quality care.

Volunteering offers a multitude of opportunities for young adults. Through volunteering, they have the advantage of career exploration, learning teamwork, enjoying healthy competition, and developing leadership skills. Volunteering adds an important dimension toward their maturity and adulthood.

College students are frequently finding that listing their course work isn't enough to gain entrance into the job market. Volunteering affords the oft-time needed experience for résumés. Colleges and universities are also recognizing the benefits of voluntarism and are offering credit for approved involvement.

For the middle aged, volunteering offers a means for renewing and upgrading skills for reentrance into the work force. For those employed, it offers diversion from laborious, routine work and sometimes a career change. Personnel departments in many corporations are also requesting volunteer experience be listed on application for employment forms.

Finally, to those retired, volunteering is a haven. Utilizing lifetime skills and acquiring new knowledge, senior citizens are parlaying greater enjoyment into leisure time. There may be no "Fountain of Youth" but most psychologists and gerontologists agree that the formula for keeping young is an active and intellectual life. The older persons' accumulated experience and acquired wisdom set them apart as special contributors to the volunteer sector and have placed them in great demand.

Christ Hospital's Volunteer Services Department offers meaningful and important jobs and training to those looking for a change of interest, learning experience, maintaining a skill, fulfilling a school requirement, therapy, or for sheer enjoyment.

As a cooperative agency in the community, the Volunteer Services Department has responded to the Hudson County judicial system in placing court referral volunteers; admitting high school students for required community involvement, retirees both professional and unskilled, short term volunteers for specific projects, and college students seeking needed course related experience.

During the past decade, American companies are recognizing the need for public/private partnerships. In order to respond to the physical, economic, and social problems in American communities, corporations are seeking volunteer assignments for their employees and offering work release time.

Many people are drawn into the volunteer sector: Bankers, lawyers, engineers, teachers, carpenters, handicapped, students, firemen, screen and TV personalities, and Ambassadors' wives to name a few. Their benefactors receive services in the form of advisers, educators, advocates, ombudsmen, fundraisers, typists, statisticians, and many more. In this day of hi-tech, increasing importance is placed upon the rare personal touch of individualized attention. Hi-touch is a luxury only volunteers can provide.

In recent years several Presidents of the United States have called for the mobilization of volunteers. President Kennedy was instrumental in the formation of the Peace Corps and President Johnson initiated VISTA. The first placed volunteer emphasis on activities abroad while the latter focused volunteer involvement on problems here at home.

In President Nixon's administration, six existing volunteer programs were joined together to form ACTION, which became the Federal agency for volunteer service, until Congress mandated an independent private sector agency be established which is known as the National Center for Voluntary Action.

In an ongoing effort to encourage volunteerism, President Ronald Reagan created the President's Volunteer Action Awards "to honor those individuals and groups who are making unique contributions to their communities through Volunteer Service." President Reagan also pronounced this past year the National Year of Voluntarism. A commemorative stamp was issued and the 1984 Tournament of Roses Parade recognized volunteerism in proclaiming "A Salute to Volunteers" as their theme.

As we celebrate Christ Hospital's Volunteer Services Department's 15th anniversary, we cannot overlook that its success reflects strong, sensitive, and diplomatic leadership with a corps of dedicated, committed citizens supportive of the hospital's mission.

In paying tribute today to the volunteers of Christ Hospital we reflect upon their unquestionable value to paid staff and to the thousands of sick and injured they administer to annually. Their worth and humanness of service cannot be measured by dollars and cents—nor can you compute their energy and desire. Fifteen years have passed, virtually every area of the hospital from the emergency room to engineering are staffed by volunteers. Many former Candystripers are present-day nurses, others have been employed by the hospital in clerical and health related positions and some have become physicians.

Their legacy of 300,000 hours of service cannot begin to demonstrate the scope of their concern and commitment.

We are fast seeing sweeping changes in our country and the world around us and the health care profession is witness of one of the most dramatic.

To our volunteers, Christ Hospital and our Nation rely upon the good examples you, as adults, set and teach today's youth. Community participation is vital to our future—your experiences and knowledge are important in the avoidance of repeating the errors and pitfalls of the past. There is no greater resource than human resources.

Each of you are endowed with special qualities—your enthusiasm is invigorating, your contributions, significant and your eagerness to lend a helping hand, refreshing.

You have our respect and our thanks.

The volunteer efforts at this great institution of healing in my district make it necessary for me to offer them this very special salute today.

I would be remiss indeed if I did not pay tribute also to the young lady who oversees the Christ Hospital volunteer service program, my high school classmate, Nancy Beatus, now Nancy Beatus Smith, truly a tremendous individual whose professional affiliations include the American Society of Directors of Volunteer Service (ASDVS), where she is now a board member and has chaired various committees.

As a member of the New Jersey Association of Directors of Volunteer Services she has served as its president on several occasions and has been a guiding light advising the group since 1970.

Presently she is a member of the Rutgers University Advisory Committee on Volunteerism and serves on the Tri-State Directors of Volunteer Services.

Since 1981 she has been a Certified Administrator of Volunteer Services.

The Beatus family has a long and industrious career of community services. Her father, Robert Beatus, a very dear and personal friend of mine, set the tone of community service for the family.

It is for this reason that Nancy has served the Junior Service League of Hudson County; the American Red Cross, on its executive board, and board of directors: on the board of directors of the Mental Health Association of Hudson County; and as a member of the advisory committee of the famous Bergen School in Jersey City.

Her active membership in community functions in volunteer capacities for the past 25 years is a litany, including affiliation with the Bloomfield Federation of Music and Civic Chorus.

The tens of thousands of persons Nancy Beatus Smith has touched through voluntarism no doubt enjoy contentment Oscar Wilde wrote about when he said:

> Contentment lies not the enjoyment of ease—a life of luxury—but comes only to him that labors and overcomes—to him that performs the task in hand and reaps the satisfaction of work well done.

Those who serve indeed echo the words of St. Francis of Assisi when he said:

"Blessed is the servant who loves his brother as much when he is sick and useless as when he is well and can be of service to him."

And in my judgment, also those who can give without remembering are blessed also. The greatest pay of a volunteer is knowing that their good actions are the invisible hinges on the doors of heaven, so please keep up your good work. I quote the words of John Wesley:

> Do all the good you can,
> By all the means you can,
> In all the ways you can,
> In all the places you can,
> At all the times you can,
> To all the people you can,
> As long as ever you can.

In closing, I would like to share a childhood prayer by Grenville Kleiser:

If I can do some good today,
If I can serve along life's way,
If I can something helpful say,
  Lord, show me how.
If I can right a human wrong,
If I can help to make one strong,
If I can cheer with smile or song,
  Lord, show me how.
If I can aid one in distress,
If I can make a burden less,
If I can spread more happiness,
  Lord, show me how.●

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO JUANITA SALAZAR MORALES ON HER 100TH BIRTHDAY, MAY 13, 1984

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my colleagues that on May 13, 1984, Juanita Salazar Morales will celebrate her 100th birthday.

Juanita S. Morales was born in Guadalupe Hacienda, Durango, Mexico. Her parents were Anastacio Barron and Estefana Salazar. She was raised by her mother and stepfather Euaristo Barragan.

At age 13, Mrs. Morales was taken hostage by Eleuterio Soto for 6 months. Following her release she lived with Miguel Orona. They had 5 children. In 1905 she and Mr. Francisco Morales moved to Indio, CA. They had 13 children. In 1926 the Morales' purchased a ranch in Terrazas, Chihuahua, Mexico. The name of their ranch was Rancho California.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Morales now resides in Pico Rivera, Calif. She is well known for her dedication to her family. As the matriarch of the Morales family, Mrs. Morales has nine surviving children—Gregorio, Carlota, Juanita, Isidra, Jose Eleuterio, Soledad, Cipriano, Irene, and Francisco, 46 grandchildren, 146 great grandchildren, and 23 great great grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Mrs. Morales happy birthday on this memorable occasion as well as health and prosperity in the years to come.●

WORLD POPULATION CRISIS AND FAMILY PLANNING ISSUES

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, as we debate the fiscal year 1985 foreign assistance authorization bill this week and immigration reform later this year, I would like to call to my colleagues' attention three articles that appeared in this morning's press. They are particularly relevant. Two of these articles, in the New York Times, address the world population crisis and its impact on the United States. The third article, and editorial in today's Washington Post, addresses the family planning issues we will be debating this week with respect to U.S. foreign aid. The common thread in all three is that population growth affects almost every area of public policy and must be given serious attention as we debate both immigration reform and foreign aid. I commend these articles to my colleagues' attention.

The articles follow:

[From the New York Times, May 8, 1984]

. . . SPILLS OVER U.S. BORDERS

(By Russell W. Peterson)

WASHINGTON.—The debate over immigration reform has failed to focus on a basic reason for such reform: worldwide population growth.

In most countries of the world, human beings are straining the capacity of their habitat to support them. This is certainly true south of our border, where the burgeoning populations of Mexico and Central America are causing a surge of migration, legal and illegal, into the United States. Our population grew by nearly 2.5 million last year, much of it from immigration. Even at our present growth rate of about 1 percent annually, we are adding to our population the equivalent of a Baltimore or Panama every year, a new California every decade.

The environment of the United States is now under intense pressure from a steadily increasing population. You can see the pressures almost anywhere you go in the United States—in the polluted, water-scarce sprawl of Los Angeles and Phoenix, in the draining (for irrigation) of the Ogallalla Aquifer, which lies under the southern plains states, in the poisoning of drinking water supplies from toxic wastes in many parts of the country, in the contamination and shoreline development afflicting Chesapeake Bay, in the conversion of California's orchards and Long Island's potato fields into housing developments, in the drastic decline of wildlife in the Everglades due to growing human competition for south Florida's water, in the clearcutting of remnant primeval forests in the Northwest, in the spreading impact of acid rain on our lakes and forests nationwide, in the loss of one million acres of prime farmland every year to shopping centers, highways, reservoirs and subdivisions, in the plight of the California condor, grizzly bear, sea otter, Selkirk Mountain caribou, and a host of other less glamorous but nonetheless vital components of the earth's ecosystem that are endangered by expanding human activities.

Environmental stress from growing numbers of human beings is intensified by the exceptionally high per-capita consumption of natural resources here in the United States. But the stresses on our soils are primarily the result of mounting food deficits worldwide. The Department of Agriculture reports that 34 percent of American cropland has become less fertile because of topsoil loss from over-intensive farming. In Iowa alone, 260 million tons of soil are lost from cropland each year.

We can relieve some of this pressure through better conservation and resource management. But the root cause—population growth—must also be addressed. For openers, we need to establish a national policy designed to stabilize our population. This must include immigration reforms based on current realities, not on conditions of the past century when we still had a frontier and were not, as we are today, straining the land's natural carrying capacity. A fair and enlightened approach is embodied in the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill now before the Congress. Proponents of this bill seek to limit immigration to 450,000 per year—a number greater, by the way, than the total annual immigration allowed into all other countries of the world combined.

Providing a wide-open escape valve for the population pressures of developing nations serves neither the interests of the United States nor the interests of long-term global stability. Far better that we stabilize our population at an ecologically-acceptable level while vigorously fostering sustainable human progress elsewhere. An integral part of such progress is better access, particularly in the developing countries, to family planning services.

WORLD POPULATION CRISIS

(By Lester R. Brown)

WASHINGTON.—There is some indication that Third World leaders are finally waking up to the fact that population growth is placing intolerable pressures on the earth's land, water and energy supplies. Among the first to reexamine population policies were the Chinese. After weighing a projected population growth of 300 to 400 million people against the future availability of cropland, water, energy and jobs, China's leaders concluded that they had no choice but to press for one-child families, lest they jeopardize hard-earned gains in living standards.

The main difference between China and other densely populated developing countries such as Bangladesh, India, Egypt, Nigeria or Mexico, may be that the Chinese have had the foresight to make projections of their population and resources and the courage to translate their findings into policy. But other countries may also find that one-child families are the only humane alternative.

Administering a one-child family program is not easy. To hold the line at one child, China relies on an established political structure extending down to the individual, strong peer pressure, substantial financial rewards for having only one child and hefty financial penalties for having more than one.

Where a preference for sons is strong, the program is particularly difficult to enforce, as Chinese leaders can attest. And the line between peer pressure, in a society where citizen awareness of the population threat is high, and official coercion is a thin one.

For this reason, many societies regard government-sponsored, one-child family programs as infringements on reproductive freedom. But for many countries, the only alternative is a rate of population growth that undermines living conditions, an alternative that is all too visible in Africa, where population growth has outpaced food production for more than a decade and where starvation is becoming common.

The deterioration of the world economy lends fresh urgency to the need for new policies. Between 1950 and 1973, when world economic growth averaged 5 percent a year, the rising economic tide raised living standards throughout the world. Economic growth outpaced population growth almost everywhere. Average life expectancy in the Third World climbed from 43 to 53 years as nutrition and health improved.

Starting in 1973, however, dramatic increases in oil prices narrowed the gap between economic growth and population growth. During the four years since the 1979 oil price hike, global economic growth has averaged 1.7 percent annually, exactly the same as population growth. A combination of higher energy prices, a broad deterioration of croplands and forests, a burdensome external debt in many Third World countries and the high interest rates now virtually assured by massive United States budget deficits suggests that the world economy will be hard pressed to expand by much more than 2 percent a year during the 1980's.

For countries that have reached zero population growth, such as West Germany, Belgium or Hungary, annual economic growth of 2 percent will still raise incomes a comfortable 2 percent each year. But for countries such as Kenya, Pakistan or Ecuador, whose populations expand at 3 percent or more per year, economic growth of 2 percent will yield a steady decline in income and living standards.

Many countries are suffering from this imbalance in economic and population growth. The World Bank reports that in 18 countries, most of them in Africa, incomes fell during the 1970's. Other African countries have joined the list during this early years of this decade.

The prospects are also discouraging in Latin America. The Inter-American Development Bank reports that per-capita income in 1983 was 10 percent below that of 1980. If rapid population growth continues, many Latin American countries burdened with external debt may finish the decade with incomes lower than those with which they started. One projection of Brazil's economic future anticipates that Brazil should be able to pay off its external debt but warns that austerity measures will keep its depressed industrial output below the 1980 level until 1990. By this time 37 million Brazilians will have been added to the 1980 population of 119 million, sharply reducing output per capita.

The grim choices in Africa, where income decline is closely tied to the fall in per-capita food production, are belatedly coming into focus. Africa's overall food production growth of 2 percent a year remains quite respectable by international standards. But with a population growing at 3 percent annually, the fastest of any continent in history, Africa seems to face a steady decline in per capita output and a slow slide toward disaster.

As the outlines of the new economic era become more visible, population policy may come to command the time and attention of Third World political leaders as much as energy policy did in Western industrial capitals during the 1970's. In an age of slower economic growth, improvements in living standards may depend more on the skills of family planners then on those of economic planners.

Too many governments have delayed facing the issue. When they do so, they may discover that they are forced to choose between a one-child family program or deteriorating living standards. Given the unprecedented numbers of young people who will reach reproductive age within the next two decades, a generation of one-child families may be the key to restoring a sustained improvement in living standards. In effect, this may be the price many societies will be forced to pay for neglecting population policy for too long.

FAMILY PLANNING UNDER ATTACK

The Forces of the New Right are geared up for another attempt to disrupt U.S. aid for foreign nations' family planning programs. Amendments to be offered during the House debate on foreign aid this week will be forwarded under cover of the anti-abortion campaign. But since no U.S. foreign aid money flows directly or indirectly into either abortion or compulsory sterilization programs, sponsors of the amendments clearly have other goals in mind: to undermine all aid for population control measures and to embarrass their legislative opponents.

Since Sen. Jesse Helms succeeded in banning all U.S. aid for foreign countries' abortion programs a decade ago, the Agency for International Development has been careful to see that no U.S. funds flowed to such programs. Even a small and humanitarian research program to help women suffering from botched illegal abortions, a sadly frequent occurrence in developing countries, was ended to satisfy Sen. Helms and his friends.

Contrary to recent claims, moreover, the U.N. Fund for Population Activities, to which the United States contributes, provides neither direct nor general aid to what are said to be coercive population control programs in China. All U.N. aid is limited to specific projects—including population data development and reduction of infant and child mortaility—that involve neither abortion nor compulsory sterilizaiton.

Simple amendments to restrict government aid to abortion programs would thus have no practical effect. But amendments could seriously damage international family planning programs by preventing the flow of U.S. aid to major voluntary population organizations that, using private money, assist in foreign governments' abortion programs. These organizations carry out a major part of family planning efforts throughout the world. Although abortion-related activities are a very small part of their work, they, and the foreign governments to whose requests they respond, would rightly consider such a ban an unwarranted intrusion by the United States into the decisions of other governments.

The developing countries now face an explosion in population unprecedented in world history. Although the rate of growth has subsided slightly since its 1970 peak, the population base is now so large that record numbers are added to the world each year. Ninety percent of the 1 billion people who will be added to world population in the next 15 years will be born in developing countries. A new World Resources Institute study points out that those countries making the most progress in reducing birth and death rates have pursued both active birth control programs and economic and social policies that benefit the large majority of the population. It is strongly in this country's interest to help developing countries pursue both objectives.●

BEAUTIFY OUR HIGHWAYS: PLANT NATIVE WILDFLOWERS

HON. TOM VANDERGRIFF

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. VANDERGRIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation which is twofold in its approach to the improvement of our Nation's highways. My legislation requires the Secretary of Transportation to approve the planting of native wildflower seeds and/or seedlings as part of any landscaping contract. The bill would permit up to one-quarter of 1 percent of landscaping funds to be used for this purpose.

On the face of this legislation, it would appear that it solely addresses highway beautification, and certainly this is an important aspect of my proposal. Equally important, however, are the cost savings which can be achieved under this bill. In my home State of Texas, we have actively pursued the planting of wildflowers along the highways of the State, with favorable results. The Texas Highway Department has demonstrated that these efforts have resulted in cost-cutting, water-saving, and labor-saving benefits. The cost of mowing along highway rights of way in 24 Texas counties has been reduced by 24.8 percent where wildflowers have been planted. Native vegetation has actually been enhanced as well. In fact, if the program is projected statewide, the cost of mowing was reduced from $32 million to $25 million—a savings of $8 million.

The planting of wildflowers can also be credited with reducing the need for the annual application of water from as many as 20 to 30 waterings to as few as 5 or 6. The obvious savings in terms of money and a limited resource would free millions of dollars for other services, such as roadbuilding and repair work. Then, too, it is not incidental that Texas has noted a substantial reduction in litter in areas which have been planted with wildflowers.

Mr. Speaker, we recently commemorated the efforts of Lady Bird Johnson for her beautification efforts here in our Nation's Capital and throughout the country. We now have an opportunity to continue and expand on her efforts, while also enjoying significant cost savings at the same time. As has been proven in Texas, planting native wildflowers enhances our highway landscapes and reduces maintenance costs. I ask that the text of my legislation be printed following this statement, and I urge my colleagues to support this measure.●

ADDITIONAL STUDIES ON THE HOMELESS

HON. HAROLD E. FORD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the past 3 years, we have seen reports from the Reagan administration indicating the President's lack of understanding about poverty and poor people in this country. The President has publicly stated that many people are homeless by choice, but we all know that is simply not true.

Social service agencies throughout the United States have estimated that between 2 and 3 million people are homeless in this country, and they have asked the Federal Government for money to assist in providing emergency shelter. But the Reagan administration is denying the existence of this severe problem, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development report released last week stating there are less than 350,000 homeless people is a smokescreen designed to convince the American public to agree with the President's policy of limiting Federal funds for emergency shelters.

I have reason to believe the HUD study is not accurate. Sixty cities were examined in the survey, but the city of Memphis, one of the largest metropolitan areas in the South was not included. We know the Memphis Inter-Faith Association (MIFA), the Salvation Army Emergency Shelter, Union Mission, and the Calvary Rescue Mission care for hundreds of homeless people in Memphis every year. We also know that more than 50 agencies in Memphis provide food for the homeless, but these individuals were not included in the HUD survey.

I believe the President is trying to minimize the extent of hunger and the shortage of housing in this country. The HUD report is another example of the lack of compassion of the Reagan administration to seriously solve the problems of poverty and homelessness in our great Nation.

A new study conducted as soon as possible by the General Accounting Office should be undertaken, in an effort to obtain an accurate number of those who are homeless in America. That study should include Memphis and every large city in the United States, so everyone will know how serious this problem has become.

The homeless are not living in the streets by choice. They are there because of circumstances beyond their control, and we in Government have a moral responsibility to provide a decent place to live for all of our citizens.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN KELLY

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it was once said, "Every one of us is given the gift of life, and what a strange gift it is. If it is preserved jealously and selfishly, it impoverishes and saddens. But if it is spent for others, it enriches and beautifies."

In his many years of service to the Long Island Chapter of the March of Dimes, John Kelly has enriched the lives of many. Through his generosity of spirit and devotion to the cause of mankind, John has made a tremendous contribution toward eliminating the incidence of birth defects in our country. John symbolizes to us all the best that an individual can do to help his fellow man.

I am honored to have such a distinguished constituent as John Kelly and I am pleased that the Long Island chapter will be honoring his efforts at a dinner on May 18.

I ask that my colleagues join with me in paying tribute to John Kelly who has done so much to further the cause of research against childhood disease.●

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR FOREIGN AID FUNDS

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing an amendment to H.R. 5119 requiring that the President establish standards of financial accountability for foreign aid funds disbursed under this act. I believe that it is important that we begin to exercise some control over the money we send to foreign governments to insure that it actually be used for the purposes for which it was intended. Too often we hear of incidents of fraud abuse of the funding or its diversion for purposes that may not be in the interests of the American people.

The foreign aid we provide to other countries may be in the better interests of our own security but we have to recognize the disruptive impact this aid can have on the internal and regional political balances of the countries we grant it to. The massive amounts of funding that we have directed to other countries is often not used for the purposes we intend it for. We cannot afford to have our military assistance linked to domestic terrorism or the development of nuclear arsenals far beyond our strategic interests. Therefore, I believe that insuring the financial accountability of the funds we disburse will guarantee a closer approximation of our own strategic goals and cut down on the incidence of fraud and waste.

The people of my district are concerned with the security interests of the United States but they are also angered at reports that the money to further that goal is often wasted or directed for uses contrary to our goals. Accountability and security are not contradictions in terms and this amendment will bring the two goals into closer alinement.●

A FRAGILE UNITY IN IRELAND FAILS WITHIN THE HOUR

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, last summer I had an opportunity to visit Northern Ireland. During the trip, I toured Belfast and many other parts of the six counties. I met with people representing all points of view to discuss the tragic problems facing the people. I learned how the people feel about their lives, their opportunities and their futures.

Having observed the situation in Northern Ireland firsthand, I would like to offer an article that is a thoughtful starting point for those who want to learn about the complex problems of the island and want to understand the tragedy that the people are living with. This article was written by Jane P. Shoemaker, and it appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer on Sunday, May 6, 1984. I encourage my colleagues to read her article because during my visit I saw many of the same problems she reports.

A FRAGILE UNITY IN IRELAND FAILS WITHIN THE HOUR

(By Jane P. Shoemaker)

DUBLIN, IRELAND.—It seemed too good to be true, this show of Irish unity under the glare of television lights.

True, the four Catholic politicians standing together were on one side of the Great Divide that separates the "two traditions" in Ireland—which in practical terms means Roman Catholics and Protestants.

While each represented a different political party with a singular view on how to bridge the division, they were speaking with one voice for the first time in half a century.

The unity held for just under an hour.

Consensus does not come easily on this troubled island, as the release of the New Ireland Forum report demonstrated last week.

Three political parties from the Irish Republic had joined with one from Northern Ireland under the forum umbrella. Their goal was to come up with proposals for ending the violence that has taken 2,371 lives in Northern Ireland over the last 15 years.

The document signed by party leaders Wednesday was a peace offering to the one million Protestants of Northern Ireland so fearful of being forced into a Catholic-dominated Irish state.

And it was a message of hope to the half-million Catholics of Northern Ireland who are just as fearful that change will never come. To Northern Ireland's majority, the party leaders pledged never to impose a change without consent. To the minority, they pledged to work tirelessly toward winning that consent.

But within an hour of the signing ceremony, one of the four, Fianna Fail leader Charles Haughey, declared that his party would never compromise on its unity-or-nothing stand.

By dinnertime, Northern Ireland had responded to: The report, declared leaders of the two main Protestant parties, was an insult and a sham.

And by nightfall, the British government had declared the forum's conclusions about its role in Northern Ireland "one-sided and unacceptable."

The "two traditions" have been in conflict on this island for three centuries. In the ebb and flow of power during that time, both the nationalists committed to an independent Ireland and the unionists loyal to Britain have shown themselves to be guilty of intolerance and injustice.

The latest chapter began in 1969 with civil-rights demonstrations by Catholics in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, where they account for about one-third of the population. Catholic citizens were being discriminated against in civil-service jobs, housing and employment—a fact denied then but acknowledged on all sides today—and they took to the streets.

Those demonstrations triggered counter-protests by Protestant unionists, and the clashes became so violent that British troops were called in to restore what passes in Northern Ireland for peace.

Peace has yet to be restored, and conditions today defy any kind of normal life.

Simply put, Belfast is a war zone. British troops with rifles clutched close to their bodies walk in pairs down the sidewalk or stand in protected doorways. In Catholic neighborhoods, dogs can smell their fear and raise an eerie chorus of barks and howls when a patrol passes by.

Armed personnel carriers rumble through the streets. Police stations are fenced in and protected with heavy gates. There are gaps, like missing teeth, among the rowhouses where bombs have brought down the narrow structures. In the central area, drivers cannot leave cars unattended for even a few seconds: Any empty vehicle is assumed to be a car bomb; troops converge, and the hapless car owner gets a severe reprimand. Every entrance to the shopping district is guarded, and pedestrians must submit to body searches before going inside.

There is a 20-foot brick and reinforced concrete wall between the Catholic Falls Road and Protestant Shankill neighborhoods in West Belfast. Smaller walls separate other working-class Catholic and Protestant areas: A new one longer than a football field is now being built in North Belfast today.

There are 10,000 British troops, most of them teenagers, in Northern Ireland.

Outside the towns, police regularly set up roadblocks, randomly stopping cars to search for weapons and explosives. British soldiers, faces smeared with green camouflage to match the verdant landscape, crouch in ditches along rural roads near the border, waiting for trouble that may or may not develop.

Small-town banks and country post offices are regularly held up by paramilitary groups such as the Irish Republican Army. So commonplace are robberies that victims have come to know which robbers work for which causes.

On Wednesday, the day the forum report was released, 10 IRA men from Londonderry were sentenced to a total of 1,001 years for 21 separate terrorist crimes, including the shooting of a police inspector as he walked out of a church with his family.

Also on Wednesday, a British television documentary featured a former British Army officer describing how undercover intelligence officers in Northern Ireland kidnapped and even assassinated suspected IRA men in the 1970s.

The same day, Belfast police reported that all was relatively quiet on the terrorist front: A car was hijacked and used in a robbery; a cyclist was caught toting a rifle; a "suspected terrorist" accidentally shot himself while cleaning his gun, and a woman cleaning her aging mother's house found a cache of ammunition.

"But you don't get most of the firebombings and shootings midweek," said a police spokesman. "The major offensives are on the weekends."

In that atmosphere, children learn hatred early. Protestant youngsters dress up and march in the big Orange Day parade each July 12 to commemorate the Battle of the Boyne, when Protestant King William III—William of Orange, or simply King Billy to the marchers—ousted the Catholic King James. As toddlers, they hear and repeat slurs against the "Papies."

It is no different on the other side of the divide, as radio listeners were starkly reminded one morning last week. A British Broadcasting Corp. reporter went to the militantly Catholic Falls Road neighborhood and talked to a group of children between 6 and 8 years old. They did not want to grow up to be firemen: They wanted to join the IRA.

The IRA protects them from the British soldiers and, in one boy's words, "fights the Orangies." The reporter asked the children why they would want to fight the Protestants. Another boy answered: "Because they don't believe Mary was a virgin."

So many in Ireland, especially those on the extreme edges of the fight, emphasize that the undeclared war there is not a religious one. It is a matter of independence and self-determinaiton, say the republican fighters committed to forcing the British to surrender control. It is patriotism and principle, say the loyalists who take up their own arms against the republicans.

But the religious significance is inescapable. Catholics comprise just a third of citizens in the six counties of Northern Ireland. Catholics comprise 97 percent of the 26 counties of the Irish Republic.

In a divided Ireland, each side keeps a firm grip on its own majority standing on its own turf. In a united Ireland, Protestants would be outnumbered by more than three to one.

Independent Ireland is not just Catholic by numbers, but Catholic in social custom and in law. Just before the evening news broadcasts, a religious picture appears and a church bell chimes "The Angelis."

The nation's constitution enshrines Roman Catholic bans on divorce and, as of last year, abortion.

Increasingly, the Catholics are turning to one group for help: Sinn Fein, the IRA's political arm. Once considered extreme and insignificant, Sinn Fein—the name in Gaelic means "Ourselves Alone"—is the strongest political force in the Catholic neighborhoods of Belfast and Londonderry.

Sinn Fein has set up a network of two dozen advice centers to help Catholics with day-to-day problems, and it campaigns against drug pushers that prey on schoolchildren.

Sinn Fein bills itself as the political party of the future, and that possibility was the single strongest catalyst in bringing the New Ireland Forum together.

For while Sinn Fein engages in admirable community projects, it also supports the IRA's "armed struggle" against the British government, which it considers an occupying force no different from, say, the Soviets in Afghanistan.

Sinn Fein has won seats in the Northern Ireland Assembly and the British House of Commons but refuses to sit in either one. It rejects all forms of discussion and negotiation, holding firm to a single-plank platform: Brits out.

In last year's British general elections, Sinn Fein candidates garnered 43 percent of the Catholic vote in Northern Ireland. There are fears in Dublin and London that in next spring's local elections, Sinn Fein will supplant the Social Democratic and Labor Party (SDLP) as the majority party among the province's Catholic minority.

SDLP Leader John Hume, whose party wants reunification of Ireland through peaceful and democratic means, asked for help. He got it from the three mainstream political parties in the Irish Republic.

Together, they formed the New Ireland Forum, to review the history of Northern Ireland, study the present situation and search for ways in which the divisions might be healed.

The report issued by the forum last week went further in offering concessions than Irish nationalist parties had ever gone. While expressing a preference for a single Irish state, forum members said they were open to any sort of arrangement that would satisfy the "two traditions."

It might be two separate Irish states, north and south, under a single federal government. It might be a new government for Northern Ireland administered jointly from Dublin and London.

And under the best of circumstances, the report said, it would be a single government in Dublin structured to give a fair share of power to both sides and operating under a new, nonsectarian constitution.

It all sounded so open-minded, so accommodating.

"Terms of the debate on the future of this island have been completely transformed," declared Hume. "Things cannot be the same again."

But they were, and in a matter of minutes. Fianna Fail leader Haughey, leader of a party founded to fight for a 32-county Ireland, declared at a post-signing news conference that he would countenance nothing short of a single Dublin controlled island. Yes, Northern Ireland's unionists should be consulted—but only on how the two sectors should be rejoined.

"Nobody," he boomed, "is entitled to deny the natural unity and unification of this island."

So much for calm consensus. Unionist politicians responded with predictable outrage, and from London came the usual comments about Irish bully-boy tactics.

The British government did not issue an outright rejection and most likely will not do so. But the unspoken yet undeniable fact is that Haughey's hard line has given British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher reason to question the sincerity of the peace gesture—and therefore reason to discount it.

And that leaves just one question still to be answered: If not a single Irish state or a federal government or joint rule, then what?

Northern Ireland will not remain as it is today: The increasing frustration of young Catholics, the growing power of Sinn Fein and the widening acceptance of violence make change inevitable no matter what happens in London or Dublin.

Unionist politician Robert McCartney suggested at week's end that the forum report ought to be forgotten and that its members go back to the "long-term slog." Perhaps in two generations, perhaps in his grandchildren's time, the two traditions could come to "a mutuality of values."

Ireland's Foreign Affairs Minister Peter Barry offered his own grim warning of what would happen if the gap were not bridged.

"We could drift into civil war," he said, "and in the not-too-distant future."●

A SALUTE TO COLONEL COMMANDANT MICHAEL KOVATS

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, at a time when we are striving to insure the basic human rights and freedoms for all people of the world, I feel it is important to reflect on our own Nation's past and salute a man who has played such an important role in helping us gain our independence. I am referring to Col. Commandant Michael Kovats, distinguished Hungarian patriot and American war hero during our Nation's fight for independence.

On May 12 a permanent memorial in honor of Colonel Kovats will be unveiled at our national shrine in Valley Forge, Pa. The establishment of this memorial is due largely to the tireless efforts of a constituent of mine, Gen. Andrew T. Udvardy, president of the Col. Commandant Michael Kovats Historical Society, and his colleagues. They have dedicated themselves, and worked successfully to focus much deserved attention on the supreme sacrifice Colonel Kovats made in the name of American independence. They were the driving force behind the Kovats memorial. Futher, the society has been able to convert the life and death of Colonel Kovats into an inspiration and renewed hope for the many courageous people throughout the world who are being denied even the most basic human freedoms—including the proud people of their ancestral homeland, Hungary.

The life of Colonel Kovats is certainly an excellent reminder to all Americans who often take for granted the opportunities and freedoms which we have been blessed with for over two centuries.

Kovats left his native homeland of Hungary, after serving admirably in the Austro-Hungarian Army, due to the repressive rule of Empress Maria Theresa. Recognizing the serious threat to American freedom at the time and wanting desperately to help preserve it, Kovats contacted Benjamin Franklin, who was our Nation's Ambassador to France, and offered his superior military expertise to the cause of our independence. He was appointed to serve under the Polish Gen. Casimir Pulaski, and later was elevated to the rank of colonel and given the task of forming the first U.S. cavalry, fashioning it after its European counterpart, the Huszar regiments.

It was serving as commander of the newly organized Continental Cavalry that he led the successful effort to save the city of Charleston, SC, from British occupation. While history has documented Colonel Kovats' significant contribution to American independence, it also tells us that on May 11, 1779, during the fight to save the city of Charleston, he lost his life.

However, his death should not be viewed tragically. Rather, it should serve as an inspiration to our continuing efforts on behalf of the many courageous people throughout the world who are living under oppression and tyranny. This includes the great freedom fighter's ancestral homeland, Hungary, where those proud people are forced to endure severe repression under Communist domination.

Certainly, the significant contribution Colonel Kovats made to American independence should not go unnoticed, especially since a memorial to this heroic figure is soon to be established. That is why I am introducing a joint resolution today, designating May 11, 1984, as "Colonel Commandant Michael Kovats Memorial Day" and calling on the President to issue a proclamation urging the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

I am confident that our remembrance of Colonel Kovats will help to further our own efforts in the area of human rights and self-determination, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important resolution.●

ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS DO WORK

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, one of the saddest aspects of the policy of this administration is its sustained attack on programs which are necessary if the poorest among us are to be protected from severe deprivation. Vulnerable children, the disabled, needy elderly—all of these groups have been victimized by the distorted priorities of an administration which seeks untold tens of billions for dubious weapons, and allows lavish agricultural subsidies to skyrocket, while cutting back on programs which sustain a minimal level of existence for many of those who are unable to support themselves.

In an excellent, thoughtful and well-documented article in the Outlook section of Sunday's Washington Post, Spencer Rich demonstrates how important and how successful many of these programs have been, and his article is essential reading for those of us who have the responsibility of voting on these matters.

I ask that the very powerful defense of Federal efforts to aid the programs which Spencer Rich has written be printed here.

[From the Washington Post, May 6, 1984]

THE SKEPTICS ARE WRONG—ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS DO WORK

(By Spencer Rich)

Was the Federal Government's war on poverty in the '60s and '70s a failure? Many Americans think so.

In November 1980, a CBS-New York Times national poll found that 62 percent of the public believed that the anti-poverty programs of the '60s either had little impact on the poor or made things worse for them. Another poll taken in 1982 found that 41 percent of all Democrats thought that providing government benefits to poor people encourages them to remain poor.

President Reagan has said, "In the early '60s, we had fewer people living below the poverty line than we had in the later 1960s after the great war on poverty got underway. And there has been from that moment on a steady increase in the level of poverty right up to" the present.

These skeptical views, however, have a serious flaw. Statistical data clearly shows that a much smaller percentage of Americans live below the poverty level today than when the effort to attack the problem got underway in earnest. There has not been a "steady increase in the level of poverty," as the president said in March. Indeed, the opposite is true, as Reagan's own budget director has stated.

"Substantial progress has been made during the last 23 years in reducing poverty," David A. Stockman told a congressional committee last November. "Poverty is not nearly as extensive as it was at the outset of the war on poverty," despite the recent recession-induced upturn.

Census Bureau data backs up this analysis. The official poverty rate stood at 22.4 percent in 1959, three years before the publication of Michael Harrington's book "The Other America," which described the nation's poverty subculture. The precentage of Americans living below the official poverty level dropped rapidly during the 1960s. In 1965 it had fallen to 17.3 percent. It hovered between 11 and 12 percent in the 1970s and only began rising again in 1980, when a severe recession began. It reached 15 percent in 1982, but was still considerably lower than in 1959.

In 1959, according to the official Census Bureau definition, 39.5 million Americans out of about 180 million were living in poverty. In 1982, 34.4 million were counted as poor, even though the nation's population had risen to 230 million. (The official definition of poverty has been basically unchanged for a generation. It covers anyone whose cash income from all sources is less than three times the cost of an adequate diet as defined by the government. In 1982, a family of four with income below $9,862 was considered poor.)

The total number of poor people is even lower when the value of non-cash benefits such as Medicare, food stamps and rental subsidies is counted.

The strong American economy of the last two decades undoubtedly helped improve the economic status of the nation's disadvantaged. But so did the intricate mesh of programs enacted in that period.

According to a study made for the House Ways and Means Committee by the Congressional Research Service, one American in four would now fall below the poverty level without government support programs, compared with the actual percentage of about one in seven in 1982, the latest year for which accurate data is available. Put another way, government cash benefits of one kind or another are keeping some 23 million Americans out of poverty who otherwise would be there. Even more dramatic, 55 percent of the nation's elderly would be living in poverty today if there were no government programs at all, according to none other than Budget Director Stockman himself.

Analyzing the impact of the poverty programs on the disadvantaged is more than just a theoretical exercise engaged in by economists. It goes to the heart of new policy decisions that could emerge after this year's presidential election.

The Reagan administration entered office committed to reducing the size of government, with particular emphasis on what it considered excess spending on key social programs. By August 1983, it had succeeded in reducing spending in fiscal year 1982-1985 by a total of $110 billion from what had been projected had the programs continued unchanged, according to estimates of the Congressional Budget Office.

This "saving" was achieved in large part by cuts in programs that had been introduced, or expanded during and after President Johnson's "Great Society." CETA, the public service job program enacted in 1972, was terminated. There were big cuts in Medicare, food stamp and education benefits. There were cuts in Social Security. (Student benefits were exercised and the guaranteed minimum benefit was stricken for future retirees.) Changes in welfare aid took hundreds of thousands of families with children off the rolls entirely and reduced benefits for many others. Many of these families also lost eligibility for Medicaid. One million people became ineligible for food stamps. Several hundred thousand individuals who would have received unemployment benefits under pre-1981 laws were made ineligible.

This year, Congress has turned back some administration proposals for additional cuts. But the administration is expected to revive some of its proposals, such as higher out-of-pocket payments by Medicare recipients, if Reagan wins the election.

Both Reagan and senior members of his administration have denied repeatedly that they want to do away with social programs entirely. The official position is that the nation's "safety net" system is essential, but needs to be pared down around the edges to eliminate waste, inefficiency and abuse. Martin Anderson, a former Reagan administration social welfare expert and planner, says he still believes that the U.S. welfare system is a "smashing, total success."

Nevertheless, the president's casual dismissal of the post-1965 programs as ineffective in reducing poverty is puzzling.

It is indisputable that the initiatives of Johnson-era war on poverty, and actions taken in the Nixon administration that followed it, substantially enlarged the New Deal income support programs and added to them a whole battery of additional "safety net" devices.

From the start of the Kennedy administration to the end of the Ford administration, the federal government vastly increased the flow of aid to the poor, the near-poor, the elderly, the disabled and the jobless.

In 1972, Social Security benefits were increased 20 percent and were indexed to inflation, a development that Sheldon Danziger of the Institute of Research on Poverty at the University of Wisconsin calls "the single most important factor in reducing poverty in the last 20 years."

In 1965, Johnson and Congress pushed through two giant medical aid programs: Medicare for the aged and medicaid for the poor.

A tiny food stamp started on a pilot basis by John F. Kennedy as his first official act in office in 1961 was gradually expanded until, in 1974, Congress made it into a full national program which now has 21 million beneficiaries a month—nearly one American out of 10 at any one time.

The federal government also united into a single program aid to the aged, blind and disabled who were poor, with a guaranteed minimum benefit. The price tag on this ran to the billions of dollars.

And the government undertook to increase the amount of money flowing to the poor to help pay rents.

All this more than tripled the real amount of federal and state income and medical support laid out between 1965 and 1982 to low-income, elderly and disabled people, many of whom would otherwise be poor. By 1982, the actual dollar figure had risen to over $300 billion. And this does not even include federal aid to education, job training and various other types of programs.

These programs, costly as they were, have had a major impact on alleviating the poverty that existed in the early 1960s. The best way to measure the effect of all these income programs, according to Martin Anderson, is to calculate how many people would be poor were it not for these programs.

Such calculations have been made by a number of economists and by the government.

Statistics recently published by the Congressional Research Service and by Danziger estimate that one quarter of the entire population of the United States would have fallen below the official poverty line in 1982 were it not for government-support programs. That would total about 58 million people, according to CRS.

Stockman has indicated that 55 percent of the nation's elderly would be living below the poverty line absent these benefits.

There are two ways to calculating the impact of the programs. One counts the effect only of cash benefits. That is the official Census Bureau method, unchanged for a generation. According to this method, payment of cash benefits such as social security, welfare and unemployment checks cuts the poverty rate to 15 percent—in effect, removing 23 million people from the poverty category.

But if the value of non-cash benefits such as food stamps, housing aid and medical assistance is factored in, the poverty rate goes down even more. There are controversies about how to make these measurements. Liberal politicians do not believe, for example, that medical benefits should be included, arguing that this is tantamount to saying the sicker a person is, the richer he or she is.

Nevertheless, many economists believe these benefits should be included in some form. Timothy M. Smeeding, and econcomist at the University of Utah and consultant to the Census Bureau on poverty measurement, recently made his own estimate of what the rate would be if the non-cash benefits were included.

According to Smeeding, the 15 percent rate for 1982 would drop to between 8½ and 9 percent. The Census Bureau, in its own calculations, puts it slightly higher, at 10 percent, or so.

As that suggests, non-cash benefits have been among the fastest growing of all social benefits since 1965, rising from $5.8 billion to $98.5 billion when measured in 1982 dollars. That is the reason the poverty rate goes down so sharply when these programs are included.

These calculations raise some interesting questions about what life would be like for Americans if there were no such benefits.

According to the CRS calculations, if it were not for government programs there would be 14 to 16 million elderly people in poverty instead of only a few million now. This would mean a vastly greater dependence on their children, including sharing homes to a much larger extent than now.

Suppose all the government programs were wiped out for people of all ages.

"There would be a lot of starvation. A lot of people would be willing to accept extremely menial jobs. A lot of people would be living together," says Henry Aaron, economist at Brookings Institution and a former assistant secretary of what was then the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in the Carter administration.

Dr. Jacob A. Brody, associate director of the government's National Institute on Aging, says experts agree that the health of the aged has improved in recent years, with higher life-expectancies and, beginning shortly after Medicare (which now covers 30 million Americans), "an astonishing decline" in death rates.

"I don't think there can be any doubt that Medicare is a factor in improving the health of the aged," he says.

For example, "lowering blood pressure is one of the very potent life-prolongers" and Medicare treats the elderly for that. Since Medicare, blacks, who as a group tend to suffer more than others from high blood pressure, "are going to doctors" for high blood pressure.

Cataract operations, cancer surgery, pneumonia treatment—all these life-preserving or life-enhancing treatments and many more are now available to many older people who couldn't previously obtain them.

The argument has occasionally been made that if the vast sums spent by the government on the income and related programs were somehow stopped and diverted into the general economy, it would produce such an increase in economic growth that everyone would ultimately be better off, even those to whom those benefits now go.

But Alice Rivlin, former director of the Congressional Budget Office and now director of economic studies at Brookings said, "We don't know what would happen. Certainly a lot of people would be worse off. There is no evidence that I know of that saving would be much larger" or that it would be a great spur to the economy.

John Palmer, former assistant secretary of Health and Human Services, said, "There would be somewhat stronger economic growth. But it wouldn't begin to pay for the income loss to these people."

"I haven't seen any demonstration backed up by any statistics to show that wholesale elimination of income assistance programs would increase economic growth in the U.S." according to Henry Aarons of Brookings. And even if it did, he added, it wouldn't help elderly people unable to work or welfare mothers with children who would find it difficult to get and keep jobs.

So the secret is out. What we are buying with all these programs is a vast reduction in poverty, misery and sickness. Whatever the cost of these programs has been, it must be acknowledged that they have changed the American social landscape for the better. They have moved the country closer to its own lofty ideals of a society that is compassionate to the disadvantaged, as well as rewarding to the fortunate.●

ROBERT WISE TO RECEIVE TORCH OF FREEDOM AWARD

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, on May 16, 1984, Robert Wise will be honored as the recipient of the Torch of Freedom Award at the Fourth Annual Israel Salute to the Film Industry of California.

Robert Wise won acclaim worldwide as a film director of the highest caliber. He was born in Winchester, IN, where he spent his early years. When the Depression forced him to leave Franklin College, he headed west and arrived in Hollywood. There he quickly became part of the emerging film industry which was bustling with creative talent and energy and endless horizons.

Starting as a messenger in RKO Studios' film editing department in 1933, he rose to assistant film editor in 1936, film editor in 1942, director in 1943, and producer in 1959. In his 51 years of filmmaking, comprising 38 motion pictures which range from modest to monumental, the work of Robert Wise is distinguished by technical excellence, artistic skill, and a consummate understanding of character and relationships. These qualities are evident in the diversity of subject matter of his major films ranging from science fiction, biography, adventure, and human interest.

The success of the films, "Sound of Music" and "West Side Story," was due in large part to Robert Wise's sensitive and compassionate handling of stories dealing with human issues—love, hate, happiness, prejudice, despair, and hope. He was honored by the Motion Picture Academy with two Oscars for each of these films as best director and producer of best picture.

Robert Wise's nonworking activities are never far removed from his all-encompassing relationship with the medium of film. Through his efforts, new generations of film students and film audiences will be enriched. Among his affiliations are: Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences since 1965, as a member of the board and chairman of the education committee; American Film Institute vice chairman of the board of trustees and chairman of the AFI's Center for Advanced Film Studios in Los Angeles; University of Southern California chairmanship of Cinema Curiculus, the support group for the Division of Cinema/Television; Directors Guild of America, president (1970-74) and most recently first recipient of the Robert Aldrich Service Award; membership in the National Council of the Arts; the trustee committee of the department of film, Museum of Modern Art, New York; trustee of the Motion Picture Country Home and Hospital; and most recently, the Los Angeles Olympic Citizen's Advisory Commission.

I ask the Members, as an expression of national tribute, to join with me in saluting Robert Wise for more than 50 years of inspiration and service to his community and profession. Robert Wise represents the highest standard of American tradition: Knowledge, achievement, leadership, respect, and understanding of human values and concern. He is most deserving of the Torch of Freedom Award and our accolade.●

AEROSPACE EDUCATION AND RECOGNITION WEEK

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last week—April 29 to May 5—was celebrated as Aerospace Education and Recognition Week by the State of California. California is a major center of industry and research and a producer of materials and services supporting the aerospace and aviation industry.

Actually, this week provided the citizens of California with an opportunity to grant recognition to the workers, leaders, and supporters of the aerospace industry. Dedicating such a week was to recognize the contributions of the highly dedicated and important individuals who are essential in this complex and advanced industry.

To recognize this worthy enterprise and the continuing importance of educating California's residents in aerospace science is important. This week of recognition is a means of encouraging public schools and local and State governments to give appropriate attention to the importance of the aerospace industry in the State of California.

I join my colleagues in drawing attention to this vital and progressive industry, upon which so much of the prosperity of this great State of California rests and upon which the security and progress of our great Nation depends.●

TROUBLE BREWING IN HAWAII

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with you an article by Mr. Charles C. Keely, Jr., which recently appeared in Western's World. Mr. Keely's article describes the resource management problems in the national parks in Hawaii. I urge my colleagues to take a moment to read this article to gain a better understanding of the need for addressing these unique problems at Volcanoes and Haleakala National Parks. We must act to preserve the natural state of these parks before their exotic beauty is lost forever.

[From Western's World, April 1984]

TROUBLE'S BREWING IN PARADISE AS AN EXOTIC PLANT AND WILDLIFE POPULATION EXPLOSION THREATENS THE FRAGILE ECOSYSTEM OF HAWAII'S NATIONAL PARKS

(By Charles C. Keely, Jr.)

You'd think David Ames had enough problems. He's the superintendent of Hawaii Volcanoes National Park on the Big Island of Hawaii—a rather active place in recent months. Throughout 1983 and again in early 1984, millions around the world were treated to spectacular color television displays of fiery Kilauea volcano as it erupted and sent one dramatic lava flow after another toward the sea. And as if to punctuate year's end, an earthquake measuring 6.7 on the Richter scale was centered in the park last November, causing $1.3 million in damages to park's paved road and trail system.

But such disasters are all part of a day's work for Ames on an island born and shaped for three million years through volcanic eruptions. The excitement comes with the job, he'll tell you.

What really concerns Ames and his counterpart, Superintendent Hugo Huntzinger at Maui's Haleakala National Park, are the environmental threats to these parks posed not so much by nature as by human beings. The threats are in the form of wild animals and exotic, nonnative plants brought to the island shores more than a thousand years ago by adventurers who needed a source of food. Today, the pigs, goats and hundreds of species of plants threaten the fragile ecosystems of Hawaii's two national parks far more than do the volcanic eruptions that built the islands.

In simplest and most graphic terms, according to Ames, the potential threat to Hawaii Volcanoes, which counted 2.6 million visitors last year, is "as if bulldozers were starting work on Independence Hall." Superintendent Huntzinger adds, "We have suffered losses of species we never seen knew existed. And much more is being lost forever, every passing day."

To understand this environmental ruination of America's most precarious park ecosystems ("the most significant biological resources in the entire U.S. National Park System," according to Huntzinger), we must go back 1,200 years to the time when Hawaii's discoverers came 2,400 sea-miles from Polynesia in their great double canoes. The only mammals preceding them to the islands were bats and seals. About two thousand species of distinctive seed plants existed, 90 percent of which still grow only in Hawaii. And at the time, there were about one hundred species of gorgeous native birds on the Hawaiian islands.

These indigenous plants, birds and animals could not have fed the courageous settlers in their new home, so they brought pigs, chickens, dogs, and plants like yams, coconuts, bananas and roots with them. Later, in 1778, visitors of another race arrived to stay. The men who sailed with Captain James Cook forever ended the isolation that had protected the islands and their original inhabitants. The eighteenth-century explorers brought their own food, too, in the form of pigs, goats and plants. So the curse was born that plagues Ames and Huntzinger today.

Those immigrating animals and plants have multiplied in such numbers that today they seriously threaten the very survival of the natural environments that these two extraordinary national parks were created to preserve.

Wild pigs, goats, mongooses and creeping vines brought from abroad may be harmless in nearby ranch or forest land. In fact, the locals have long hunted pigs and goats for sport and luaus. And who can tell an exotic vine or bush from a native one? All are lush and lovely and grow rapidly.

But in the national parks, the mission that Ames and Huntzinger have chosen to accept, impossible or not, is to restore the federal areas to the pristine environment they originally represented. To do that, the two men must fence their parklands, hunt down all the goats and pigs and get rid of many of the plants. It's no easy task.

Without such efforts, says Ames—pointing to a map in his office near the rim of the huge and still-steaming Kilauea caldera that erupted in 1919—the threat is more critical than "acid rain on our forests or the potential cutoff of water to the Everglades in Florida.

"It's an untold horror story," Ames says. "Congress can't get very excited about it. And our millions of visitors hardly know the problem exists."

What has happened since the explorers and first settlers arrived is dramatic. Goat populations, for example, can double every six months. It hasn't happened quite that fast here, but twenty goats became ten thousand in Hawaii Volcanoes National Park in less than a decade. The park supported fifteen thousand goats in 1974, and more than five thousand wild pigs are in the park today, rooting up native ecosystems and transporting seeds throughout the area.

The goats denuded much of the park's lowland vegetation, essential for the survival of birds like the nearly extinct nene, a Hawaiian goose that is the state bird. (There are no nenes left in Hawaii Volcanoes today.) One pig in search of food can dig up fifty square meters of rain forest topsoil a night, creating muddy seed beds for exotic plants and breeding places for mosquitos that carry malaria and kill native birds. Pigs also destroy ground-cover plants, altering the entire rain forest ecosystem. Hawaii Volcanoes' pigs could "turn over half the topsoil in the 230,000-acre park in a year," says Dan Taylor, chief of resource management.

At Haleakala National Park on Maui, rare native birds, insects and plants such as the sunflowerlike silversword, which blooms but once after five to twenty years' growth, have been wiped out in many areas by the park's three thousand or more goats and between one thousand and two thousand pigs.

The similar greensword plant has all but vanished as well. Now more than eighty species of exotic plants—like bamboo, guava, pamakani and kikuyu grass—have spread through park areas.

"This is the top resource management problem in the entire National Park System," says Huntzinger, waving a hand toward the dormant, twelve-thousand-foot summit of Haleakala Crater. Part of the endangered resources, he explains with undisguised passion, are in the Kipahulu Valley, the state's loveliest tropical rain forest, "where we are in danger of losing many native resources and plants forever."

Also in Haleakala, mongooses have destroyed or threatened four hundred nests of the rare Hawaiian dark-rumped petrel, of which 1,800 of the world's 2,000 are thought to be in the park.

"These problems are pretty subtle," says Ames. "Something can become extinct before we even know it exists. And it's hard to get money for that kind of problem if toilets are backing up in Yellowstone or trails need repair in Yosemite. What is so vitally important is that there is a reason for preserving processes that are natural, and that reason is spiritual and esoteric and has real worth and value both for cultural richness and for the diversity of experiences people come to national parks for. Most of this is almost gone in Hawaii."

Says Huntzinger: "If we didn't try to do something, no matter how limited our ability, we would be liable to lawsuits from environmentalists for not making reasonable efforts to save these endangered species." But "reasonable efforts" mean lots of money and manpower, which, until recently, have been almost nonexistent in both parks, despite the efforts in Washington of Howard Chapman, the veteran Western Regional Director of the National Park Service.

"What is the loss of a species," asks Huntzinger? "There is an aesthetic loss in the birds and flowers that have vanished."

"We may not notice the loss of an insect species," Ames adds, "but what is so important is that we are learning every day that scientific and revolutionary medical discoveries frequently are made from [experimenting with] such minor plants and insects. Public pressures here have been to provide pig and goat hunting, not to conserve the environment, which some scientists say it already may be too late to do."

But steps are now being taken, thanks largely to the untiring efforts of Ames, Huntzinger, and Chapman, and their persistent pleadings for funds from Congress. Though progress is visible, no one knows if such efforts have come in time.

According to Dan Taylor at Hawaii Volcanoes, "Within the past several years we have cut the goat population down from fifteen thousand to perhaps twenty." Vegetation is returning to barren slopes, and some of it is native.

So far, this is a success story—but it is only one story, and it took thirty miles of four-foot-high wire mesh fencing to do it. Two-thirds of the park's boundary is now fenced to keep out goats. The staff is turning its attention to the pigs, which will also be fenced, though no one is sure if this is the best procedure for eliminating them. The budget for such work is only $600,000, and only eight staff members, out of a total of forty, are assigned to resource management.

Meanwhile, nearly all the grass in dryland forests and dozens of native plant species have disappeared, including the beautiful Hawaiian flame tree, native legumes and the rare silverwood. Grazing by goats has caused shrubs and low-land trees, vital as habitats for birds, to disappear from park lowlands. In their place are more than four hundred exotic plant species, some of which pose serious threats to what native vegetation remains. Attempts to control these plants have not been successful.

At Haleakala, similar fencing work is just beginning, and additional funding for the project may be forthcoming. "It's been a hit-or-miss approach until now," says a frustrated Huntzinger, who flew to the mainland recently to show Park Service superiors a slide presentation on the park's problems. He now complains that money for the trip would have employed a fence builder for three weeks. "It's been management by crisis at best."

The park, which recorded 860,000 visitors in 1983, did not even have a staff scientist until 1980. In 1981, $60,000 was spent on fencing, which can cost up to $58,000 a mile over rugged terrain at elevations ranging from 4,000 to 9,000 feet. "Our budget for this is about equal to the cost of a couple of Pentagon screwdrivers," says one park ranger, only half in jest.

But for 1983–84, $500,000 has been allocated for Haleakala's boundary fencing, which should cover thirty-five miles of the 28,665-acre park. Just seven miles have been fenced to date, and pigs recently were discovered rooting for worms in the dirt just a few feet behind the park's visitor center and headquarters.

In Kipahula Valley, where visitors are not permitted in the impenetrable jungle, exotic, fast-spreading plants like the strawberry guava, brought from Brazil in the early 1800's, have already taken over a third of the once-pristine rain forest. "No native plants can compete with it," explains Huntzinger. Animals bring in the guava seeds and then destroy the jungle undergrowth, facilitating the spread of the destructive shrub, which in turn kills native plants.

In Hawaii Volcanoes, the chief plant culprit is the colorful but deadly banana polk vine, commonly called passion flower vine. Originally brought from Colombia to a local backyard garden in 1952, it has since spread throughout unfenced jungle areas of the park, choking and strangling ferns and other fragile native plants in areas where pigs have altered forest vegetation growth by rooting up or eliminating ground cover. Bird species have also disappeared from the areas. Natural bird and plant life cycles have been drastically altered.

The Hawaiian Archipelago is said to have the largest number of native flora and fauna of any area in the world, because of its great age and isolation from the continents. A great deal of this uniqueness has been lost, and still more species are nearing extinction.

Nevertheless, much can still be protected and preserved by the National Park Service, its officials believe.

Fortunately, the National Park Service has given Hawaii's environmental crisis its top resource-preservation priority. The hope shared by Ames, Huntzinger and all who care about Hawaii's natural treasures is that there is still time.●

AMBASSADOR TO BE COMMENDED

HON. BILL McCOLLUM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to commend someone who I believe is an excellent example of what is right about government service, that is Ambassador Thomas Reene Pickering, our Ambassador to El Salvador. The recent criticisms leveled against him by a colleague in the Senate are unfounded and misguided.

As many of you know, since August of last year my office in conjunction with Project Hope, the Knights of Malta and the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador has delivered over 200,000 pounds of medicine valued in excess of $5 million to 40 camps and hospitals that serve 300,000 displaced people in El Salvador. Ambassador Pickering was essential to the success of this effort. His excellent relations with diverse groups in El Salvador smoothed the path for our distribution. He has a clear and sincere desire to assist the Salvadoran people and their country whenever possible.

During the March 26 election two of my aides, Vaughn Forrest, my administrative assistant, and Kristen Foskett, my legislative aide, were observers. Mr. Forrest's reports to me cited on several occasions the professionalism, evenhandedness, and dedication Ambassador Pickering exhibited during several tense incidents that characterized the first election. Miss Foskett reported on the difficult circumstances, because of terrorist activities in many parts of the country under which the elections were carried out and the extreme lengths our Embassy personnel went to insure fairness for all political parties involved.

El Salvador is probably the most difficult foreign post, and Ambassador Pickering has met the challenge. The political winds in El Salvador are always swift and violent and the political playmaking reaches its zenith just before an election. Ambassador Pickering, Deputy Chief of Mission Ken Bleakley and all staff and military personnel have done a tremendous job under the most adverse of circumstances. We have seen that democracy works in El Salvador and no matter who yells about the results, it will not be the elitists or the military or the special interest groups who will have elected the next president. It will be the poorest of the poor walking for hours to a polling place, standing in line for hours in the hot unforgiving Sun and walking several hours home. The people chose.

We and they have to live with the results because democracy is not a sometime thing. The one thing that we can be sure of is that Ambassador Pickering has done everything in his power to insure a free and honest election for all political parties; to believe otherwise is nonsense.●

CHUN KYUNG HWAN REINVIGORATES SAEMAUL MOVEMENT IN KOREA: FOOD FOR THOUGHT ON HOW TO ACHIEVE RAPID PROGRESS

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, 3 years ago the Korean Secretary General Chun Kyung Hwan injected new life into an important movement in South Korea known as the Saemaul Movement. He recognized the need to let business, industry, and the citizens of Korea work together for progress. Although the Saemaul Movement had already made great strides toward improving the economy of Korea since 1970, it was Chun Kyung Hwan who helped to loose Government restraints on business participation in the movement. Now the initiative of the private sector is blossoming in Korea with the result that there is a rebirth of the Saemaul Movement and a new burst of progress in Korea.

Now there are 16,200 industries participating in the movement. Those industries and related components of the movement involve over 10 million Koreans in a concerted effort to continue the awesome economic growth which Korea has been experiencing since 1970.

In 1960, South Korea was a country mired in poverty, especially rural poverty. In the decade of the seventies, Korea experienced an average annual growth rate of more than 10 percent, and its total exports increased by over 400 percent. During a portion of the decade of the seventies, the rate of growth in rural income actually outstripped the rate of urban income growth. Essential to the growth of the economy in Korea, however, is the fact that the growth has been balanced between urban and rural areas. Industry, farming, urban and rural participation, even the growth of credit unions have progressed evenly to avoid distortions in the economy.

As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and its Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs I have made an effort to observe the methods by which people in other countries are able to raise themselves out of poverty. I was recently able to observe one of the key programs which has accounted for the astounding economic growth of Korea in recent years. That program is known as Saemaul Undong or the New Community Movement. Initiated in 1970 by the late President Park Chung-hee, and now renewed by the far-sighted Secretary General Chun Kyung Hwan, the movement has been largely responsible for not only balancing urban and rural economic expansion, but also has played a significant role in shaping the thinking of the people in a positive and healthy way.

In any country there are competing traditions. This is certainly true in Korea where both a passive and an active spiritual tradition have existed side by side for centuries. The passive tradition has a saying, "Blame the ancestors when things do not go well." For many, many years, this was the accepted reaction to the awful poverty that held the rural areas in its grip. But the activist spiritual movement holds that progress is to be achieved only through self-reliance, diligence, and cooperation. It is this tradition tht Park Chung-hee and Chung Kyung Hwan were able to emphasize in the thinking of the people. It is that phrase which stands as the slogan of the Saemaul Undong. And it is the movement itself which stands as a testament to the wisdom and insight into the innermost traditions of his people which Chun Kyung Hwan now is demonstrating.

The Saemaul Undong is the Korean equivalent of our War on Poverty—but with some important differences. One of those differences is that the New Community Movement has persisted, thanks to Chun Kyung Hwan, while we have begun to see many of those in our country who rose out of poverty in the years of the War on Poverty slip back into poverty now that our attention has turned to other matters. Perhaps one reason that Saemaul Undong has endured while the War on Poverty has largely fallen on a period of neglect is that there is an organic element in Saemaul Undong that permeates the movement in a way that was seen too rarely in the War on Poverty. By organic I mean that the New Community Movement is at its very roots a cooperative, self-help movement. There were certainly elements of that in the War on Poverty. But too often the War on Poverty was viewed by recipients and nonrecipients alike as a Government-owned and operated program.

To be sure, the Government cooperates in the training of community leaders of the New Community Movement. But thanks to Chun Kyung Hwan, private industry is also involved at every step of the process. And after the training period is concluded, those leaders are expected to strive with the other members of their community to create economically beneficial projects that are uniquely fitted to the needs of the land and to the needs of the people. The community and industry work with the community leaders to build the community. It is a grassroots movement in a fundamental sense.

I know of no better way of illustrating this last point than by noting that participation in sports is an important aspect of the movement. But the sports that are emphasized are not the ones in which one individual competes against another. Rather, they are group sports in which teamwork rather than individual prowess wins the game. Those sports include soccer, volleyball, and tug of war. Individual development is not forgotten, however. There are daily calisthenics, bicycle riding, tennis, and badminton. All things are balanced within the movement.

The human initiative, the cooperation, the sense of cohesiveness and willingness to work together that I saw recently in Korea was inspiring. I think it in order to commend the Korean people for the fervor with which they have united behind the Saemaul Undong watchwords, "self-reliance, diligence, and cooperation." There is no doubt that the successful efforts of one culture may need modification before they fit well within the cultural scheme of another country, but I think there is much of value to emulate in the Korean model. I am sure that my fellow Members of Congress join me in commending the Korean people and Secretary General Chun Kyung Hwan for the example they have shown the world through the Saemaul Undong. We wish the Korean people our good will as they grow strong economically under Saemaul Undong.●

A TRIBUTE TO JACOB K. JAVITS

HON. BILL CHAPPELL, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I take this moment to share with my colleagues a few words of praise for our friend and former colleague, Jacob K. Javits.

The Distinguished Service Award presented to Senator Javits, attempts to exemplify the gratitude and respect felt by those of us who had the privilege of serving with him.

During his 34 years as a public servant, he demonstrated an effectiveness beyond compare. Senator Javits was responsible for numerous landmark measures, in addition to major legislation ranging from the War Powers Act to the Pensions Reform Act, all bearing the signature of his creativity and foresight.

As an ardent debator, his opinions have always been held in the highest regard. In addition, Senator Javits possessed an admired ability to speak astutely on any issue or concern. For these reasons, and many more, history will remember Senator Jacob K. Javits for the great legislator and great American that he proved to be throughout his 34 years in the U.S. Senate.●

DESECRATION OF PLACES OF WORSHIP VIOLATES OUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF RELIGION

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, our Nation was founded by men and women who wanted to be free to worship God. They sought to be free of Government imposition of religion and they also sought a land where they would be free from harrassment by others whose beliefs differed from their own.

Unfortunately, while the Constitution prohibits Government interference in religious worship, some religious groups in our Nation continue to be terrorized by vandalism and threats of violence. A synagogue in Seminole, Fla., which I represent, has been the subject of several such attacks in recent months. A storage shed on the grounds of the Congregation Beth Chai was set on fire last November. In the following days, swastikas were painted on the building and the congregation received two bomb threats.

These type of threats and activities impinge on the rights of the congregation to conduct worship services free of fear from harassment. That is why I am a cosponsor of H.R. 1981 which makes it a Federal crime to vandalize a house of worship or any religious articles therein.

I am pleased to note that Florida is one of 16 States that have adopted similar laws at the State level. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, in a recent report, notes that the passage of this legislation at the State level is in part responsible for a decline in the number of incidents aimed at places of worship over the past 3 years.

The adoption of Federal legislation of this kind will have even a greater impact on reducing the number of future threats to congregations throughout the United States. Our responsibility is to uphold the Constitution which includes the basic right of freedom of religion. To do so we must insure that the American people are able to worship free from the fear of assault and vandalism.●

ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, in recent years, an unfounded myth that Federal means-tested antipoverty programs have not only failed America's poor, but have also resulted in more Americans becoming poor, has been widely circulated. The current administration has greatly contributed to this inaccuracy. President Reagan, for example, recently stated:

In the early 1960's, we had fewer people living below the poverty line than we had in the later 1960's after the great war on poverty got underway. And there has been from that moment on, a steady increase in the level of poverty.

As with all myths, Mr. Speaker, this myth should be rigorously scrutinized to see if it is substantiated by the facts. Mr. Spencer Rich, a Washington Post reporter, does just this in an article published on May 6, 1984, entitled "The Skeptics Are Wrong—Antipoverty Programs Do Work." By objectively citing statistical data collected over the last 25 years by Government organizations and independent researchers, Mr. Rich demonstrates that many of the programs which the administration has targeted for deep reductions, have indisputably reduced poverty. The facts do not lie, and the facts tell us that before the Reagan administration, the poverty rate in our country was halved from 22.4 percent in 1959 to between 11 and 12 percent during the 1970's. With deep reductions in antipoverty programs in recent years, compounded by the recession, the poverty rate rose to 15 percent in 1982.

Further, Mr. Rich debunks the related myth that only those who are fraudulently abusing Government programs will be hurt by more cuts in means-tested social spending. The data presented by Mr. Rich shows that Government cash benefits prevent approximately 23 million Americans from falling below the poverty level and that 55 percent of our country's elderly population would be living in poverty if Government assistance to them were eliminated.

As Congress deliberates further budget reductions to reduce the massive Federal budget deficit, we must not target the means-tested programs which have borne the brunt of budget cuts over the last 3 years. In making future decisions, we need to take into account the facts, not the myths about poverty programs. Mr. Rich provides us with some very important facts. I commend this article, which follows, to my colleagues.

THE SKEPTICS ARE WRONG—ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS DO WORK

(By Spencer Rich)

Was the Federal government's war on poverty in the '60s and '70s a failure? Many Americans think so.

In November 1980, a CBS-New York Times national poll found that 62 percent of the public believed that the anit-poverty programs of the '60s either had little impact on the poor or made things worse for them. Another poll taken in 1982 found that 41 percent of all Democrats thought that providing government benefits to poor people encourages them to remain poor.

President Reagan has said, "In the early '60s, we had fewer people living below the poverty line than we had in the later 1960s after the great war on poverty got underway. And there has been from that moment on a steady increase in the level of poverty right up to" the present.

These skeptical views, however, have a serious flaw. Statistical data clearly shows that a much smaller percentage of Americans live below the poverty level today than when the effort to attack the problem got underway in earnest. There has not been a "steady increase in the level of poverty," as the president said in March. Indeed, the opposite is true, as Reagan's own budget director has stated.

"Substanital progess has been made during the last 23 years in reducing poverty," David A. Stockman told a congressional committee last November. "Poverty is not nearly as extensive as it was at the outset of the war on poverty," despite the recent recession-induced upturn.

Census Bureau data backs up this analysis. The official poverty rate stood 22.4 percent in 1969, three years before the publication of Michael Harrington's book "The Other America," which described the nation's poverty subculture. The percentage of Americans living below the official poverty level dropped rapidly during the 1960s. In 1965 it had fallen to 17.3 percent. It hovered between 11 and 12 percent in the 1970s and only began rising again in 1980, when a severe recession began. It reached 15 percent in 1982, but was still considerably lower than in 1959.

In 1959, according to the official Census Bureau definition, 39.5 million Americans out of about 180 million were living in poverty. In 1982, 34.4 million were counted as poor, even though the nation's population had risen to 230 million. (The official definition of poverty has been basically unchanged for a generation. It covers anyone whose cash income from all sources is less than three times the cost of an adequate diet as defined by the government. In 1982, a family of four with income below $9,862 was considered poor.)

The total number of poor people is even lower when the value of non-cash benefits such as Medicare, food stamps and rental subsidies is counted.

The strong American economy of the last two decades undoubtedly helped improve the economic status of the nation's disadvantaged. But so did the intricate mesh of programs enacted in that period.

According to a study made for the House Ways and Means Committee by the Congressional Research Service, one American in four would fall below the poverty level without government support programs, compared with the actual percentage of about one in seven in 1982, the latest year for which accurate data is available. Put another way, government cash benefits of one kind or another are keeping some 23 million Americans out of poverty who otherwise would be there. Even more dramatic, 55 percent of the nation's elderly would be living in poverty today if there were no government programs at all, according to none other than Budget Director Stockman himself.

Analyzing the impact of the poverty programs on the disadvantaged is more than just a theoretical exercise engaged in by economists. It goes to the heart of new policy decisions that could emerge after this year's presidential election.

The Reagan administration entered office committed to reducing the size of government, with particular emphasis on what it considered excess spending on key social programs. By August 1983, it had succeeded in reducing spending in fiscal years 1982-1985 by a total of $110 billion from what had been projected had the programs continued unchanged, according to estimates of the Congressional Budget Office.

This "saving" was achieved in large part by cuts in programs that had been introduced, or expanded during and after President Johnson's "Great Society." CETA, the public service job program enacted in 1972, was terminated. There were big cuts in Medicare, food stamp and education benefits. There were cuts in Social Security. (Student benefits were excised and the guaranteed minimum benefit was stricken for future retirees.) Changes in welfare aid took hundreds of thousands of families with children off the rolls entirely and reduced benefits for many others. Many of these families also lost eligibility for Medicaid. One million people became ineligible for food stamps. Several hundred thousand individuals who would have received unemployment benefits under pre-1981 laws were made ineligible.

This year, Congress has turned back some administration proposals for additional cuts. But the administration is expected to revive some of its proposals, such as higher out-of-pocket payments by Medicare recipients, if Reagan wins the election.

Both Reagan and senior members of his administration have denied repeatedly that they want to do away with social programs entirely. The official position is that the nation's "safety net" system is essential, but needs to be pared down around the edges to eliminate waste, inefficiency and abuse. Martin Anderson, a former Reagan administration social welfare expert and planner, says he still believes that the U.S. welfare system is a "smashing, total success."

Nevertheless, the president's casual dismissal of the post-1965 programs as ineffective in reducing poverty is puzzling.

It is indisputable that the initiatives of Johnson-era war on poverty, and actions taken in the Nixon administration that followed it, substantially enlarged the New Deal income support programs and added to them a whole battery of additional "safety net" devices.

From the start of the Kennedy administration to the end of the Ford administration, the federal government vastly increased the flow of aid to the poor, the near-poor, the elderly, the disabled and the jobless.

In 1972, Social Security benefits were increased 20 percent and were indexed to inflation, a development that Sheldon Danziger of the Institute for Research on Poverty at the University of Wisconsin calls "the single most important factor in reducing poverty in the last 20 years."

In 1965, Johnson and Congress pushed through two giant medical aid programs: Medicare for the aged and Medicaid for the poor.

A tiny food stamp started on a pilot basis by John F. Kennedy as his first official act in office in 1961 was gradually expanded until, in 1974, Congress made it into a full national program which now has 21 million beneficiaries a month—nearly one American out of 10 at any one time.

The federal government also united into a single program aid to the aged, blind and disabled who were poor, with a guaranteed minimum benefit. The price tag on this ran to the billions of dollars.

And the government undertook to increase the amount of money flowing to the poor to help pay rents.

All this more than tripled the real amount of federal and state income and medical support laid out between 1965 and 1982 to low-income, elderly and disabled people, many of whom would otherwise be poor. By 1982, the actual dollar figure had risen to over $300 billion. And this does not even include federal aid to education, job training and various other types of programs.

These programs, costly as they were, have had a major impact on alleviating the poverty that existed in the early 1960s. The best way to measure the effect of all these income programs, according to Martin Anderson, is to calculate how many people would be poor were it not for these programs.

Such calculations have been made by a number of economists and by the government.

Statistics recently published by the Congressional Research Service and by Danziger estimate that one quarter of the entire population of the United States would have fallen below the official poverty line in 1982 were it not for government-support programs. That would total about 58 million people, according to CRS.

Stockman has indicated that 55 percent of the nation's elderly would be living below the poverty line absent these benefits.

There are two ways of calculating the impact of the programs. One counts the effect only of cash benefits. That is the official Census Bureau method, unchanged for a generation. According to this method, payment of cash benefits such as social security, welfare and unemployment checks cuts the poverty rate to 15 percent—in effect, removing 23 million people from the poverty category.

But if the value of non-cash benefits such as food stamps, housing aid and medical assistance is factored in, the poverty rate goes down even more. There are controversies about how to make these measurements. Liberal politicians do not believe, for example, that medical benefits should be included, arguing that this is tantamount to saying the sicker a person is, the richer he or she is.

Nevertheless, many economists believe these benefits should be included in some form. Timothy M. Smeeding, an economist at the University of Utah and consultant to the Census Bureau on poverty measurement, recently made his own estimate of what the rate would be if the noncash benefits were included.

According to Smeeding, the 15 percent rate for 1982 would drop to between 8½ and 9 percent. The Census Bureau, in its own calculations, puts it slightly higher, at 10 percent or so. (See following table.)

PERCENTAGE OF AMERICANS IN POVERTY

[Amounts in percent]

	Official poverty rate [1]	Poverty rate if food stamps and non-cash benefits are counted as income [2]	Poverty rate without government benefits [3]
1965	17.3	12.1	21.3
1972	11.9	6.2	19.2
1976	11.8	6.7	21.0
1979	11.7	6.1	20.5
1982	15.0	8.8	24.0

[1] U.S. Census Bureau, includes personal income plus cash benefits from the government.
[2] Timothy M. Smeeding, University of Utah, includes adjustments for underreporting and taxes.
[3] Sheldon Danziger, University of Wisconsin.

As that suggests, non-cash benefits have been among the fastest growing of all social benefits since 1965, rising from $5.8 billion to $98.5 billion when measured in 1982 dollars. That is the reason the poverty rate goes down so sharply when these programs are included.

These calculations raise some interesting questions about what life would be like for Americans if there were no such benefits.

According to the CRS calculations, if it were not for government programs there would be 14 to 16 million elderly people in poverty instead of only a few million now. This would mean a vastly greater dependence on their children, including sharing homes to a much larger extent than now.

Suppose all the government programs were wiped out for people of all ages.

"There would be a lot of starvation. A lot of people would be willing to accept extremely menial jobs. A lot of people would be living together," says Henry Aaron, economist at Brookings Institution and a former assistant secretary of what was then the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in the Carter administration.

Dr. Jacob A. Brody, associate director of the government's National Institute on Aging, says experts agree that the health of the aged has improved in recent years, with higher life-expectations and, beginning shortly after Medicare (which now covers 30 million Americans), "an astonishing decline" in death rates.

"I don't think there can be any doubt that Medicare is a factor in improving the health of the aged," he says.

For example, "lowering blood pressure is one of the very potent life-prolongers" and Medicare treats the elderly for that. Since Medicare, blacks, who as a group tend to suffer more than others from high blood pressure, "are going to doctors" for high blood pressure.

Cataract operations, cancer surgery, pneumonia treatment—all these life-preserving or life-enhancing treatments and many more are now available to many older people who couldn't previously obtain them.

The argument has occasionally been made that if the vast sums spent by the government on the income and related programs were somehow stopped and diverted into the general economy, it would produce such an increase in economic growth that everyone would ultimately be better off, even those to whom those benefits now go.

But Alice Rivlin, former director of the Congressional Budget Office and now director of economic studies at Brookings said, "We don't know what would happen. Certainly a lot of people would be worse off. There is no evidence that I know of that saving would be much larger" or that it would be a great spur to the economy.

John Palmer, former assistant secretary of Health and Human Services, said, "There would be somewhat stronger economic growth. But it wouldn't begin to pay for the income loss to these people."

"I haven't seen any demonstration backed up by any statistics to show that wholesale elimination of income assistance programs would increase economic growth in the U.S." according to Henry Aarons of Brookings. And even if it did, he added, it wouldn't help elderly people unable to work or welfare mothers with children who would find it difficult to get and keep jobs.

So the secret is out. What we are buying with all these programs is a vast reduction in poverty, misery and sickness. Whatever the cost of these programs has been, it must be acknowledged that they have changed the American social landscape for the better. They have moved the country closer to its own lofty ideals of a society that is compassionate to the disadvantaged, as well as rewarding to the fortunate.●

CONTINUE THE OCS MORATORIUM

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 8, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, last week, I testified before the Appropriations Committee Subcommittee on Interior to request that a continuation of the moratorium on oil and gas in certain areas of the Outer Continental Shelf off the coast of California, including Santa Monica Bay, be included in the fiscal year 1985 Interior Department appropriations bill.

Our colleagues LEON PANETTA and BILL LOWERY and I have been engaged in negotiations with the Interior Department over which areas off the coast of California oil and gas development should be prohibited. Secretary William Clark has said that he projects that the moratorium areas will not be included in lease sale 80 in southern California, and that of the nine proposed sales for fiscal year 1985, none would include any area now under moratorium from last year.

William Bettenberg, Director of the Minerals Management Services, stated that lease sale 91 in northern and central California, which was supposed to take place in September 1985, is running about 2 months behind schedule and will probably not take place until fiscal year 1986.

From these statements we can assume that no lease sales will take place in California in fiscal year 1985, that lease sale 80 in southern California will take place in fiscal year 1984 under the conditions of the moratorium. and that lease sale 91 will take place during fiscal year 1986. Under these circumstances, there would be no immediate cause for concern that the economically and environmentally sensitive areas protected in the fiscal year 1984 Interior Department appropriations bill will be leased.

However, since Secretary Clark and Mr. Bettenberg made these statements, the Interior Department published a revised 5-year offshore leasing schedule. As a result of this document, we are getting conflicting messages from the Interior Department. According to this plan, lease sales 80 and 91 are put on hold. Given this administration's past record of opening virtually the entire Outer Continental Shelf to oil and gas exploration without regard to economic and environmental impacts, I am extremely concerned over the failure of the administration to give assurances of exactly when these lease sales will take place. If the Interior Department postpones lease sale 80 and speeds up lease sale 91, these sales could take place without the moratorium protections.

The OCS moratorium included in the fiscal year 1984 Interior appropriations bill was supported by a bipartisan coalition. The moratorium was the result of extensive negotiation and compromise, based upon previous congressional action, State and local government recommendations and administrative exemptions by former Interior Secretaries. While recognizing our need to decrease our dependence on foreign sources of oil, the moratorium includes only those areas in which the negative impacts on the local economies, environment and the military outweigh the benefits of the potential energy.

If an oil spill occured as a result of oil and gas drilling in Santa Monica Bay, we would suffer traumatic economic losses. These costs would include reduced beach use, tourism, tourist taxes, revenue from commercial fishing, revenue from pleasure boats, property taxes and property values. An oil spill would seriously harm the two remaining wetlands in Los Angeles County, Malibu Lagoon and the Ballona Creek Estuary, which serve as habitats for many endangered species. The increased air pollution from oil drilling and refining would result in extremely dangerous health hazards.

The moratorium deleted less than 2.5 percent of the OCS areas under consideration for lease by the department's 5-year plan, leaving 12 million acres off the coast open for lease. The moratorium will not reduce the State's 1.2 million-barrel daily contribution to national oil production, and permits continued exploration of frontier areas off Port Arguello, in the Santa Barbara Channel, and on the Tanner and Cortes Banks off San Diego. The Moratorium includes the following areas:

Northern and central California: the area between a line heading west from a point near Morro Bay, CA, and a similar line from the Oregon border to the seaward edge of the Department of the Interior northern and central California planning area.

Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary.

Santa Barbara Channel Ecological Preserve and Buffer Zone.

Santa Monica Bay.

San Diego/Orange County: a 20-mile buffer zone from Newport Beach south to the Mexican border.

I urge my colleagues to continue the moratorium for another year to preserve our precious environmental and vital economic resources which Congress recognized worthy of protection last year.●
